Toronto, Feb. 27.—The Ontario Alliance decided this morning after an enthusiastic debate, to stand squarely behind Rowell's policy of banish the bar. A resolution offered by the Political Action Committee reads as follows:—"That this convention hails with pleasure the adoption by the Liberal party under the leadership of N. W. Rowell, of the policy aiming at the immediate abolition of bar rooms, treating system and drinking in clubs and further restrictions and regulations for remedying the evils resulting from the liquor traffic and that the policy deserves the hearty support of the temperance electors."

G. B. Nicholson of Chaplean, moved an amendment to strike out all reference to the Liberal party, but only four delegates supported the amendment. Frank Spence said if the Conservatives but would go further than Rowell, they would support the Conservatives, but they could not do less than support Rowell after the stand he had taken. They were not going to swallow the Liberal party and what was more the Liberal party was not going to swallow the Alliance.

Compulsory Service Advocated.

OTTAWA, Feb. 27.—The Canadian Artillery Association, at its annual meeting here yesterday, concurred in the resolution of the Ontario Artillery Association, in favor of "universal military" training for Canada, which term the president, Col. The recommendation will go to the Militia Department.

CLOSING ADDRESS

Rev. W. B. Olmstead Will Speak on Man's Supreme Duty

Rev. W. B. Olmstead preached a powerful sermon last night, at the Free Methodist church, from Acts 26, 28: "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." He observed that God does not force or drive men to become Christians. It is quite wonderful that God should notice us, but he has his eye upon us, and is doing all that can be done to save us. He entreats, uses argument, appeals to our sense of duty, our love of happiness, our desire for success, our fears, and offers rewards for right doing. Many are satisfied with being almost Christians. Almost means lost. We should be altogether Christians and that at once." The service continued until after one o'clock. Mr. Olmstead will preach his last sermon to the people of Peterborough to-night. His subject will be, "Man's Supreme Duty." Do not fail to hear him.

TO CURTAIL POWERS.

Trust Companies' Privileges Curbed by Mr. White's New Bill.

OTTAWA, Feb. 27. — Another reform in the financial and banking laws was advanced in the Commons yesterday by the Minister of Finance.

Hon. T. W. White, Minister of Finance, moved the second reading of his bill respecting trust companies.

The object of the legislation is to have a general act governing all trust companies hereafter created and restricting their creation hereafter to act of Parliament. In short, there will be a general trust companies act, as there is a bank act and an insurance act.

Mr. White said that heretofore trust companies have been incorporated by letters patent under the Companies' Act, and also by legislation. Under the Companies' Act, many trust companies had secured extraordinary powers. They took powers to become holding companies and to operate and manage other corporations.

The general act will put some restrictions upon the holding of real estate, the investment in stocks and bonds of other corporations, and the amount of liabilities which can be contracted by the corporation in proportion to its paid-up capital. A compulsory audit is provided for and detailed reports every year, and as called for by the Finance Department.

Mr. White also introduced a similar bill respecting loan companies.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that the proposed legislation was a step in the right direction. Trust companies were often entrusted with the estates of deceased persons, and thus acted for widows and orphans and other more or less helpless people. Parliament, in his opinion, could not throw too many safeguards about the operation of these companies.

Both bills were given a second reading and referred to the banking and commerce committee.

Jury Places Damages Against Corporation of Havelock at $725

Damages for $725 was the verdict returned in the Robinson vs. Corporation of Havelock action, at the Winter Assizes late yesterday afternoon, after a session of two and a half days. Mr. Justice Kelly, however, reserved judgment in the case indefinitely. The questions of the case submitted to the jury by His Lordship and answered by the jury are as follows:

Did the plaintiff's children or other children, resort to, or play in the gravel pit with their knowledge and permission of the defendants? Answer—Yes.

Did the defendants have any knowledge or notice that there was a likelihood of children being injured by falling earth, sand or gravel, while in the pit? Answer—Not previous to accident.

Was there any invitation to the plaintiff's children, who were killed, to use the pit? Answer—Yes.

Did the plaintiff's children who were killed enter the pit directly from the highway? Answer—Yes.

Was there an excavation or hole under the upper crust of the earth at any place of the accident or at time of accident? Answer—Yes.

If so, was that excavation or hole, there when the children went to place of accident, or was it made wholly or partly by the children. Answer—It was there when they went.

Was the death of the children a mere accident or caused by negligence? Answer—By negligence.

If so caused, was the negligence by defendant, which caused the accident? Answer—Yes.

If there was such negligence by the defendants, state fully and clearly what was or were act or acts of negligence of defendants which caused or assisted to bring about the children's death? Answer—Mr. Lesson dug the hole and left it unprotected.

Was the death of the children brought about or contributed to by any act or acts of their own. Answer—None.

If so, what was or were the acts brought about or contributed to the death of the children? Answer—No answer.

Was there negligence on the part of the parents of the children or others in whose charge they were, which

If so, what did negligence consist er—None.

If so, what did negligence consist of? Answer—No answer.

What amount of damages do you assess? Answer—$725.

The afternoon, during the deliberation of the jury was taken up with the counsels pressing upon various points of the case.

Robinson sued the Corporation of the Village of Havelock for $5,000 damages for the death of his three children, caused in pit.

Mr. D. O'Connell acted for the plaintiff and F. D. Kerr for the defendants.

Historic Church Destroyed.

DUNBAR, Scotland, Feb. 27. — An "arson squad" of militant suffragettes yesterday burned to the ground the historic parish church of the Village of Whitekirk, near here. A large quantity of suffrage literature was left strewn about the scene.

The church was erected in the 16th century and contained many priceless relics of the battle in which the Scots were routed by Oliver Cromwell's forces in 1650.

Case Again Postponed.

WELLAND, Feb. 27.—The trial of E. Coulthurst, the accused deputy returning officer of Bridgeburg, is again postponed, and will not be called until the investigation here has been concluded. Application may then be made to the Minister of Justice for an order to use the ballot box of the accused as evidence by the prosecution, and any other evidence that may result from the investigation.

CHARACTER FROM THE HAIR.

THE OFFICIAL prohibition of "tooth brush" moustaches for Prussian soldiers on the ground that a "trifling tuft of hair under the nose is unsuitable for Prussian soldiers, and is irreconcilable with the true German character," suggests some interesting thoughts about the psychology of hair-dressing. "Character or temperament is often illustrated by the way in which people arrange their hair. A meek man may shave his face, or, if he has a moustache, he may keep it unobtrusive; if he be aggressive he will twist up the ends as if they were the horns of a fierce buffalo. A man with a gentle, retiring disposition could not possibly live up to the strain of an aggressive moustache. It would be a ridiculous incongruity. We wonder what the appropriate national moustache would be for this country, but we doubt whether the War Office will attempt to deal with the question, for claims might be put forward against a common denominator, and for a recognition of distinctive English, Scottish, Irish, and Welsh characteristics. A wider field is opened up with regard to other occupations, and we might set our minds to determine what is the proper style for a judge, or what would be an appropriate kind of moustache for a bishop. On the whole, perhaps, it had better be left to individual ideals."

Some young lady wrote to the papers the other day complaining about men being clean- shaven. She said that most men shaved their beards and moustaches in order to make themselves look young. There may be some truth in this, but most men do not succeed in adding to their youthful appearance by removing the hair from their faces. There would appear to be faces made especially for some kind of hirsute adornment. A moustache improves the features of some men, and a beard commands respect, but they are somewhat of a nuisance over soup.

THE BECKER CASE.

BECKER is to be given another trial. There seems to be quite a good deal of public opinion in his favor. The feeling is that he was convicted upon the evidence of a bundle of scoundrels and that such evidence alone is not sufficient to hang a man on. There must be a certain amount of official influence in his favor, and the delay in the carrying out of the death sentence and the arranging of a new trial has been doubtless due to his having occupied so high a position among the very men in whose charge he is at present.

There is a saying, "set a thief to catch a thief," and it applies in the case of policemen—"set a policeman to catch a policeman," might be equally true. In this case it seems difficult for a policeman to hang a policeman. Becker may be innocent of direct complicity in the Rosenthal murder; but the evidence, both direct and circumstantial, was very strong against him.

ON THE OTHER LEG.

THE EVANTUREL donouement in the Legislative Assembly was one of the most striking incidents that ever occurred in either the Provincial or the Dominion House. Most readers will have seen the full course of this incident and have read the letter addressed by Mr. Evanturel to the Hotelkeepers' Association.

Mr. Evanturel is Liberal member for Prescott, and was attacking the Conservative Party in the House and accusing it of complicity and alliance with the liquor interests. In the midst of this harangue Mr. Ferguson, Conservative member for Grenville, rose and asked Mr. Evanturel if he himself was not in alliance with the liquor interest. Mr. Evanturel denied this, whereupon Mr. Fergusson produced and read the letter referred to. In the course of the letter Mr. Evanturel said:

> "I am, and I always have been, a true friend to the liquor interests, and I have been backed up by my constitutents in doing so. I am a poor man, living only upon my small sessional allowance, and do expect that the association will see its way clear to help me along, and in my letter to the board I ask at least $10,000, payable $3,000 now, and the balance per instalments, in order to support me. I am prepared for that salary to be the defender of the association, and introduce before the Legislature any amendments to the Government measures to restrict the liquor traffic, etc. I am the only M.P.P. in the Ontario House who will place himself openly against that policy of Rowell, and the restrictions to the trade brought from time to time by the Government. I believe that it would be useful to your association to have an M.P.P. who would be there in the House to accept and present to the House all the suggestions coming from your important body. Will you kindly support my application, which is before your board at its next meeting? I will sign any agreement which your board will require to be sure that I am the man who will fight for your cause in the House. I would like to have the matter settled up as soon as possible, as I have to be financially supported at the present time. You have known my late father, Hon. A. Evanteurel, ex-speaker of the Legislature, and ex-M.P.P. for the county of Prescott before me, and during his long and prosperous public life he has fought the battle for the hotelkeepers whenever he had the opportunity to defend your rights, etc."

The recital of this letter struck the House dumb with consternation. Mr. Evanturel was himself thunder-struck, and tried to protest, the only explanation he could give was that he would explain later. Mr. Rowell, who has always accused the Government of an alliance with the liquor men, seemed to be amazed to find the same thing in his own ranks. He, of course, deplored the intrigue of Mr. Evanteurel, and mildly denounced him. But there was a note of mortification in Mr. Rowell's repudiation of his erring follower, as if he would rather the exposition had been of one of the Conservative members. He accused Mr. Fergusson of trying to cast a reflection upon the Liberal party, and said that the letter was only produced to support the liquor interests. This attitude was not at all a graceful one, it would have been more fitting if Mr. Rowell had contented himself with simply, but emphatically condemning the whole business.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

AN ADVERTISEMENT in a Toronto paper reads: "Newspaper man wanted, one who can write. Now that is a deliberate slur on the profession.

GENERAL VILLA is now reported to have cremated the remains of his victim, Benton. Another report put him in a rather sanctimonious ligt, thus: "General Francisco Villa, at Chihuahua, to-day, refused to give up the body of William S. Benton, the British subject, who was executed in Juarez several days ago. His reasons, as embodied in a private telegram, have aroused bitter feeling along the border.

"I will not give up the body, out of respect to the dead," Villa's message said. "It was interred with all religious observances, and a cross erected over it, and I will not allow the sacrilege of its removal."

So that Villa is not such a villain as he has been painted.

A man who could speak with such tears in his voice, as well as his eyes, must have a tender spot somewhere, but the difficulty in this case would be in finding the spot.

A TORONTO POLICEMAN was "nearly killed by disorderly Poles," says the News.

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

The Anti-Hustler.

Christian Guardian.

Do you know any lazy man? One preacher writes: "We none of us are really able to say what laziness is. One of the hardest working men I know always has time for anybody, and anybody takes his time. He never seems in a hurry, and loves to talk. The amount of work be gets through no man knows, not even himself He never seems to work only to play; and he takes his work with so much gaiety he gives the impression of doing it for the fun of the thing. His friends really believe he is lazy." And there are other men who weary us telling how much they do. We prefer the so-called lazy man who does his work and forgets to brag about it.

The Cedar Lebanon in England.

Westminster Gazette.

Cedars of Lebanon, reported to be rapidly disappearing from their native range, were introduced into England during the first half of the seventeenth century. They have flourished admirably with us, though the Kew authorities do not agree with King Solomon about the value of the timber, which may possibly have suffered in suality from the change of climate. Some of our finest specimens are alleged to compare favorably for dimensions with the largest of the 400 patriarchs that still linger on the slopes of Lebanon. Of late years, either cedars of Lebanon or the closely allied Atlas cedars have almost invariably been planted instead of the traditional British oaks to commemorate Royal visits, being of more rapid growth and equally majestic proportions.

King George and Slums.

Brockville Times.

King George recently came into possession by bequest of some slum property in England. He basa t once taken steps to abolish the slums and to provide good buildings and sanitation for hist enants. King George is following in the footsteps of his father, Edward VII., whose first act as Prince of Wales was to move for the betterment of certain housing conditions in London. King Edward was all his life an active worker in the interests of the poor, and King George is evidently inspired by the same fine desire.

Eternity.

A million stars—or is it one;
How was this great, old world begun?
Those many twinkling eyes we see,
Or is it only two or three?
A prism causing many hues,
A thousand colors, reds and blues,
All scattered, multiplied and real,
To take them up, we seem to feel
Has yon big sun this wonder made,
Creating light where there was shade?
And when did you begin to move
O, moon, whose light can calm and soothe?
The carrier pigeon and the dove,
Such softness that is born of love
Meek sheep, the horse and gentle cow—
Such spirit came, I wonder how?
The babe with coo, and gurgle, too?
From whence? What will become of you?
They say a burning, glowing ball
Threw out those worlds, both great and small,
That all whirl round in space.
This world, and all the human race,
How it began—when came the touch?
And can you answer, just how much?
And where will all this wonder end?
To greater glory does it tend?
Whither will go the great and true,
And where the bourne of me and you?
That ball's a burning heart of love,
Caught from the flame begun above.
Well, that is how the world began,
The end? With love, it never can!

OFFICE HOLDING

By Walt Mason

A man holds office for a while, and dies in flossy style, to save our bulwarks from decay, and then upon a fateful day he finds he is an also ran—the office job has dumped the man. And does he then gird up his loins, and say: "I'll go and chase the coins as in the sunny days gone by, ere I began to bleed and die"? Ah, no! He's done with useful toil; you will not see him till the soil, or curry down old Dobbin's legs, or scratch around to find the eggs. He will not plant the corn in May, or bale the fragrant, juicy hay, or paint the fence of prune the trees, or herd the humble bumble bees. The office germ is in his brain, and all your pleadings are in vain. He has no use for sweat-earned kale; he'll camp upon the Party's trail, where all the dreary has-beens throng, and beg for hand-outs from the strong. He'd rather have some dinky job awarded by the "statesman" mob than ornament his native town by holding sane position down. You learn a lot of tricks and guile, you lose your grip on things worth while, to useful work you close your eye when once you've learned to bleed and die.

H. V. Meredith, president of the Bank of Montreal, who is sixty-four years of age today, was in his younger days quite a formidable boxer. When he was working in the Bank's branch in Hamilton, where he got his start, he is said to have dearly loved to get into fights with the toughs of the town and to trim them neatly. Mr. Meredith belongs to the famous Meredith family of London, of which Sir William Meredith of Toronto was the eldest son. All the Meredith boys were athletic and even to-day the president of the Bank of Montreal has the well-set-up and military bearing of a British army officer. He has risen to the premier position in Canadian banking by dint of steady and conscientious work.

Tarzan of the Apes

by Edgar Rice Burroughs

Copyright, 1912, by the Frank A. Munsey company.

CHAPTER V.

The Death of Kala.

THREE miles west of Kulonga, son of Mbonga, the negro king, slept the tribe of Kerchak.

Early the next morning the apes were astir, moving through the jungle in search of food. Tarzan, as was his custom, prosecuted his search in the direction of the cabin, so that by leisurely hunting on the way his hunger was appeased by the time he reached the beach.

The apes scattered by ones and twos and threes in all directions, but always within sound of a signal of alarm.

Kala had moved slowly along an elephant track toward the east and was busily engaged in turning over rotted limbs and logs in search of esculent bugs and fungi when the faintest shadow of a strange noise brought her to startled attention.

For fifty yards before her the trail was straight, and down this leafy tunnel she looked straight at the stealthily advancing figure of a strange and fearful creature.

It was Kulonga.

Kala did not wait to see more, but, turning, moved rapidly back along the trail. She did not run, but, after the manner of her kind when not roused, sought rather to avoid than to escape.

Close after her came Kulonga. Here was meat. He could make a killing and feast well this day. On he hurried, his spear poised for the throw.

At a turning of the trail he came in sight of her again upon another straight stretch. His spear hand went far back; the muscles rolled, lightning-like, beneath the sleek hide. Out shot the arm, and the spear sped toward Kala.

A poor cast. It but grazed her side.

With a cry of rage and pain Kala turned upon her tormentor. In an instant the trees were crashing beneath the weight of hurrying apes, swinging rapidly toward the scene of trouble in answer to Kala's scream.

As Kala charged, Kulonga unslung his bow and fitted an arrow with almost unthinkable quickness. Drawing the shaft far back, he drove the poisoned missile straight into the heart of the great she ape.

With a horrid scream Kala plunged forward upon her face before the astonished members of her tribe.

Roaring and shrieking, the apes dashed toward Kulonga, but that wary savage was fleeing down the trail like a frightened antelope. They followed him, racing through the trees for a long distance, but finally one by one they abandoned the chase and returned to the scene of the tragedy.

On the far beach by the little cabin Tarzan heard the faint echoes of the conflict, and, knowing that something was seriously amiss among the tribe, he hastened rapidly toward the direction of the sound.

When he arrived he found the entire tribe gathered jabbering about the dead body of his slain mother.

Tarzan's grief and anger were unbounded. He roared out his hideous challenge time and again. He beat upon his chest with his fists, and then he fell upon the body of Kala and sobbed out the pitiful sorrowing of his lonely heart.

But after the first outburst of grief Tarzan controlled himself and, questioning the members of the tribe who had witnessed the killing of Kala, he learned all that their meager vocabulary could vouchsafe him.

It was enough, however, for his needs. It told him of a strange, hairless, black ape with feathers growing upon its head, who launched death from a slender branch and then ran with the fleetness of Bara, the deer, toward the rising sun.

Tarzan waited no longer; but, leaping into the branches of the trees, sped rapidly through the forest. He knew the windings of the elephant trail along which Kala's murderer had flown, and he cut straight through the jungle to intercept the black warrior, who was evidently following the tortuous detours of the trail.

At his side was the hunting knife of his unknown sire, and across his shoulders the coils of his own long rope. In an hour he struck the trail again and, coming to earth, examined the soil minutely.

In the soft mud on the bank of a tiny rivulet he found footprints such as he alone in all the jungle had ever made, but much larger than his. His heart beat fast. Could it be that he was trailing a man—one of his own race?

There were two sets of imprints pointing in opposite directions. So his quarry had already passed on his return along the trail. As he examined the newer spoor a tiny particle of earth toppled from the outer edge of one of the footprints to the bottom of its shallow depression—ah, the trail was very fresh, his prey must have but scarcely passed.

Tarzan had covered barely a mile more when he came upon the black warrior standing in a little open space. In his hand was his slender bow, to which he had fitted one of his death dealing arrows.

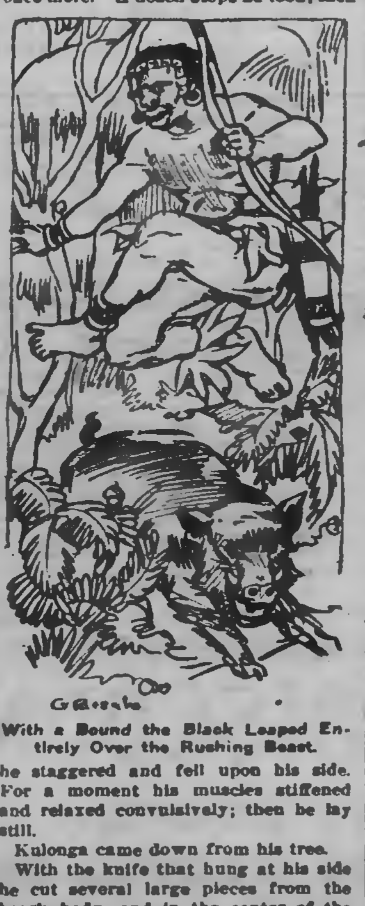
Opposite him across the little clearing stood Horta, the boar, with lowered head and foam flecked tusks, ready to charge.

The black released the poisoned arrow, and Tarzan saw it fly with the quickness of thought and lodge in the bristling neck of the boar.

Scarcely had the shaft left his bow ere Kulonga had fitted another to it, but Horta, the boar, was upon him so quickly that he had no time to discharge it. With a bound the black leaped entirely over the rushing beast and, turning with incredible swiftness, planted a second arrow in Horta's back.

Then Kulonga sprang into a nearby tree.

Horta wheeled to charge his enemy once more. A dozen steps he took; then he staggered and fell upon his side. For a moment his muscles stiffened and relaxed convulsively; then he lay still.



With a Bound the Black Leaped Entirely Over the Rushing Beast.

Kulonga came down from his tree.

With the knife that hung at his side he cut several large pieces from the boar's body, and in the center of the trail he built a fire, cooking and eating as much as he wanted. The rest he left where it had fallen.

Tarzan was an interested spectator. His desire to kill burned fiercely in his wild breast, but his desire to learn was even greater. He would follow this savage creature for awhile and know whence he came. He could kill him at his leisure later, when the bow and deadly arrows were laid aside.

When Kulonga had finished his repast and disappeared beyond a near turning of the path Tarzan dropped quietly to the ground. With his knife he severed many strips of meat from Horta's carcass, but he did not cook them.

He had seen fire, but only when the lightning had destroyed some great tree. That any creature of the jungle could produce the red and yellow fangs which devoured wood and left nothing but fine dust, surprised Tarzan greatly. Also, why the black warrior had ruined his delicious repast by plunging it into the blighting heat, was quite beyond him. Possibly the fire was a friend with whom the archer was sharing his food.

Tarzan would not ruin good meat in any such foolish manner, so he gobbled down a great quantity of the raw flesh, burying the balance of the carcass beside the trail where he could find it upon his return.

And then Lord Greystoke wiped his greasy fingers upon his naked thighs and took up the trail of Kulonga, the son of Mbonga, the king; while in faroff London another Lord Greystoke, the younger brother of the real Lord Greystoke's father, sent back his chops to the club's chef because they were underdone, and when he had finished his repast he dipped his finger ends into a silver bowl of scented water and dried them upon a piece of snowy damask.

All day Tarzan followed Kulonga, hovering above him in the trees like some malign spirit. Twice more he saw him hurl his arrows of destruction—once at Dango, the hyena, and again at Manu, the monkey. In each instance the animal died almost instantly, for Kulonga's poison was very fresh and very deadly. There was something mysterious connected with these tiny slivers of wood which could bring death by a mere scratch, thought Tarzan. He must look into the matter.

That night Kulonga slept in the crotch of a mighty tree and far above him crouched Tarzan of the apes.

When Kulonga awoke he found that his bow and arrows had disappeared. The black warrior was furious and frightened, but more frightened than furious. His spear he had hurled at Kala and had not recovered, and, now that his bow and arrows were gone, he was defenseless except for a single knife. His only hope lay in reaching the village of Mbonga as quickly as his legs would carry him.

That he was not far from home he was certain, so he took to the trail at a rapid trot. From a great mass of impenetrable foliage a few yards away emerged Tarzan of the apes to swing quietly in his wake.

Kulonga's bow and arrows were securely tied high in the top of a giant tree, from which a patch of bark had been removed by a sharp knife near to the ground and a branch half cut through and left hanging about fifty feet higher up. Thus Tarzan blazed the forest trails and marked his caches.

As Kulonga continued his journey Tarzan closed up on him until he traveled almost over the black's head. His rope he now held coiled in his right hand. He was almost ready for the kill.

The moment was delayed only because Tarzan was anxious to ascertain the black warrior's destination, and presently he was rewarded, for they came suddenly in view of a great clearing, at one end of which lay many strange lairs.

Tarzan was directly over Kulonga as he made the discovery. The forest ended abruptly, and beyond lay 200 yards of planted fields between the jungle and the village.

As Kulonga emerged from the shadow of the jungle the quick noose tightened about his neck.

So rapidly did Tarzan of the apes drag back his prey that Kulonga's cry of alarm was throttled in his windpipe. Hand over hand Tarzan drew the struggling black until he had him hanging by his neck in midair. Then Tarzan, climbing to a larger branch, pulled the still thrashing victim well up into the sheltering verdure of the tree.

He fastened the rope securely to a stout branch and then, descending, plunged his hunting knife into Kulonga's heart. Kala was avenged.

Tarzan examined the black minutely. Never had he seen any other human being. The knife, with its sheath and belt, caught his fancy. He appropriated them. A copper anklet also took his fancy, and this he put on his own leg. Then quickly he lowered Kulonga's body to the ground, removed the noose and took to the trees again.

• • • • • • •

From a lofty perch Tarzan viewed the village of thatched huts across the intervening plantation.

He saw that at one point the forest touched the village, and to this spot he made his way, lured by a fever of curiosity to behold animals of his own kind and to learn more of their ways and view the strange lairs in which they lived.

His life among the brutes of the jungle left no opening for any thought that these could be other than enemies. Similarity of form led him to no erroneous conception of the welcome that would be accorded him should he be discovered.

His strange life had left him neither morose nor bloodthirsty. That he joyed in killing and that he killed with a laugh upon his handsome lips betokened no innate cruelty.

So it was that now, as he cautiously approached the village of Mbonga he was quite prepared either to kill or be killed should he be discovered. He proceeded with unwonted stealth, for Kulonga had taught him great respect for the little sharp splinters of wood which dealt death so swiftly and unerringly.

At length he came to a great tree, heavy with thick foliage and loaded with pendant loops of giant creepers. From this almost impenetrable bower above the village he crouched, looking down upon the scene below him.

There were naked children running and playing in the street. There were women grinding dried plantain in crude stone mortars, while others were fashioning cakes from the powdered flour. Out in the fields he could see still other women hoeing, weeding or gathering. Dozing in the shade he saw several men, while at the extreme outskirts of the clearing he occasionally caught glimpses of armed warriors apparently on guard.

He noticed that the women alone worked. Finally his eyes rested upon a woman directly beneath him.

Before her was a small caldron standing over a low fire, and in it bubbled a thick, reddish, tarry mass. On one side of her lay a quantity of wooden arrows, which she dipped into the seething substance and then laid them on a narrow rack of bows which stood at her other side.

Tarzan of the apes was fascinated. Here was the secret of the destructiveness of "the archer's" tiny missiles. He noted the extreme care which the woman took that none of the matter should touch her hands.

How he should like to have more of those little death dealing slivers! If the woman would only leave her work for an instant he could drop down, gather up a handful and be back in the tree again before she drew three breaths.

As he was trying to think out some plan to distract her attention he heard a wild cry from across the clearing. He looked and saw a black warrior standing beneath the very tree in which he had killed the murderer of Kala an hour before.

The fellow was shouting and waving his spear above his head. Now and again he would point to something on the ground before him.

The village was in an uproar instantly. Armed men rushed from the interior of many a hut and raced madly across the clearing toward the excited sentry. After them trooped the old men and the women and children, until, in a moment, the village was deserted.

Tarzan of the apes knew that they had found the body of his victim, but that interested him far less than the fact that no one remained in the village to prevent his taking a supply of the arrows which lay below him.

CHAPTER VI.

King of the Apes.

TARZAN dropped to the ground beside the caldron of poison and stood motionless, his quick eyes scanning the interior of the palisade.

No one was in sight. His eyes rested upon the open doorway of a nearby hut. He would take a look within, thought Tarzan, and so cautiously he approached the low thatched building.

For a moment he hesitated without, listening intently. There was no sound, and he glided into the semidarkness of the interior.

Weapons hung against the walls—long spears, strangely shaped knives, a couple of narrow shields. In the center of the room was a cooking pot and at the far end a litter of dry grasses covered by woven mats, which evidently served the owners as beds and bedding. Several human skulls lay upon the floor.

Tarzan of the apes felt of each article, hefted the spears, smelled of them, for he "saw" largely through his sensitive and highly trained nostrils. He determined to own one of these long pointed sticks, but he could not take one on this trip because of the arrows he meant to carry.

One by one as he took each article from the walls he placed them in a pile in the center of the room, and on top of all he placed the cooking pot, inverted, and on top of this he laid one of the grinning skulls, upon which he fastened the headdress of the dead Kulonga.

Then he stood back and surveyed his work and grinned. Tarzan of the apes was a joker.

But now he heard without the sounds of many voices and long, mournful howls and mighty wailing. He was startled. Had he remained too long?

Quickly he reached the doorway and peered down the village street toward the village gate.

The natives were not yet in sight, though he could plainly hear them approaching across the plantation. They must be very near.

Like a flash he sprang across the opening to the pile of arrows. Gathering up all he could carry under one arm, with a kick he overturned the seething caldron and disappeared into the foliage, just as the first of the returning natives entered the gate at the far end of the village. He turned to watch the proceedings below, poised like some wild bird ready to take swift wing at the first sign of danger.

The natives filed up the street, four of them bearing the body of Kulonga. Behind trailed the women, uttering strange cries and weird lamentation. On they came to the portals of the very hut in which Tarzan had wrought his depredations.

Scarcely had half a dozen entered the building ere they came rushing out in wild, jabbering confusion. The others hastened to gather about. There was much excited gesticulating, pointing and chattering. Several of the warriors approached and peered within.

Finally an old fellow with many ornaments of metal about his arms and legs and a necklace of dried human hands depending upon his chest, entered the hut.

It was Mbonga, the king, father of Kulonga.

PRESCOTT MEMBER FAILS TO EXPLAIN HIS LETTER

Acting Premier Foy Hints at Official Action to Safeguard the Dignity of the Legislature, and Mr. Rowell Concurs In Suggestion---Evanturel Officially Barred From the Opposition Caucus.

TORONTO, Feb. 27. — Gustave Evanturel, M.P.P. for Prescott, did not appear in the Legislature yesterday, and the expected statement in connection with the letter read by G. H. Ferguson, soliciting a retainer from the liquor interests, is still outstanding. The matter, however, is not to be allowed to stand, and before adjournment Hon. J. J. Foy, speaking for the Government, said that the whole incident is to be considered, and in default of a satisfactory explanation some action will be taken to safeguard the dignity of the House and resent the insult it has received.

In this Mr. N. W. Rowell, leader of the Opposition, concurred, and promised hearty co-operation with any proper methods that might be adopted.

In the course of a statement during the afternoon, Mr. Rowell said:

"I desire to say that the honorable member for Prescott came to the Liberal caucus this morning and made a statement in reference to the letter read in the House yesterday by the honorable member for Grenville. After making his statement the honorable member retired. It was unanimously decided that the honorable member should not be again invited to attend caucus or be recognized as one entitled to take part in the deliberations of the Liberal members of the Legislature, and this decision has been communicated to him by the Chief Whip of the party in the Legislature.

A sharp passage occurred when Mr. G. H. Ferguson (Grenville) rose to reply to Mr. Rowell, but the Speaker finally allowed him to proceed.

He did not think the Liberal leader could entirely dissociate himself from the position he had formerly assumed regarding Mr. Evanturel. The member for Prescott had been closely allied with the Liberal party. "All the time," said Mr. Ferguson, "he had expressed a desire to make an official connection of the liquor interests with the Liberal party to get a large contribution from the liquor party, no doubt to be made use of in the interests of the Liberal party."

Mr. Rowell denied that Evanturel had supported the temperance policy, and Mr. Ferguson pointed to a case in 1912 where Mr. Evanturel had been paired with Mr. Gamey on a liquor policy vote.

Mr. C. M. Bowman, Liberal Whip, rose to explain that the pairing had been an error, and that Mr. Evanturel did not want to be paired on that occasion but had protested vigorously afterwards.

Mr. Ferguson, he said, was evidently disappointed that his bomb had failed to discount the Liberal position on the temperance issue.

This closed the discussion.

Loved Statesman in Vain.

A romance in the life of the Right Hon. C. P. Villiers, the statesman who represented Wolverhampton in Parliament for forty-five years and died in 1898, is recalled by the death of Mr. Hamilton Fane Gladwin of Seven Springs, Gloucestershire, Eng.

Mr. Villiers, who was born in 1802 was in his youth and middle age a strikingly handsome man. Sir Edward Russell, in his book of reminiscences, "That Reminds Me," says, in allusion to him, that "The Duke of Buckingham was not the only Villiers who had a reputation for manly amenities and fascination and kind reception by the fair." His personality attracted the only child and heiress of Mr. John Mellish, of Hammels' Park, Hertfordshire, who fell ardently in love with him.

The affection was not reciprocated but, nevertheless, on her death Miss Mellish made Mr. Villiers her heir to the Hammels' Park estate. He declined to touch the fortune, and lived on his pension as a former Cabinet Minister. At his death he passed the fortune, intact, to Mr. Fane Gladwin, who had married Miss Sophia Mellish, a distant kinswoman of the lady who had honored Mr. Villiers with her affection and her wealth. Mr. Gladwin leaves three sons and two daughters.

Breakfast Rolls.

Dissolve two ounces of butter in a little warm milk. Sift one pound of flour into a pan, add the milk with the butter, stirring in before adding to it a teaspoonful of baking powder and a pinch of salt. Mix into it a stiff paste, knead well, form into little rolls on a floured board and bake in a quick oven for twenty minutes.

A MARRIAGE MAKER.

Jewish Shadchans Derive Good Incomes as Go-Betweens.

It will, no doubt, surprise many Londoners to learn that there are scores of Jews who live comfortably in the English capital simply by contracting marriages between their coreligionists. These marriage-makers are known as "Shadchans." The custom which prevails among the Ghetto Jews of getting married through the agency of a marriage broker imported from the Continent, where Jews consider it immodest for young men to do their own courting without the intervention of a "Shadchan."

The descendants of Pharaoh's brickmakers, who dwell east of Aldgate, have great respect for the "Shadchan," for they never know when they might have to utilize his services. The remuneration of the "Shadchan" usually consists of a fee from the bride and bridegroom, according to their means, and often he also claims a percentage of the dowry as his perquisite.

The business of the "Shadchan" is, apparently, in a very flourishing condition. The other day one of the fraternity informed the writer that a Jewish marriage broker would consider it a bad year indeed if he did not "make" $2,000. Only recently a "Shadchan" well known in the East End of London died, leaving more than $35,000 accumulated by fees for bringing couples together.

A "Shadchan" is never tired of exaggerating the advantages to be derived from the union which he proposes, but it is mainly the old-fashioned Jews who rely on this medium to bring about marriages for their sons or daughters. The name denotes a "bringing together," as it is the "Shadchan" who initiates the whole affair.

Jews who have been in England for many years, and who engage the matrimonial services of a "Shadchan," contend that they are still there, and, consequently, are compelled to make use of the knowledge and experience of an expert marriage broker.

A "Shadchan" sometimes employs curious means of persuasion. He threatens the prospective bridegroom, whom he has introduced to one of his clients, with a breach of promise action should he refuse to marry her. Think of the responsibility of a man who may be blamed for a score of unhappy marriages! Fortunately, the majority turn out well, and the most prominent individual under the "Chuppah" (wedding canopy) is the "Shadchan," who is held in high esteem by all assembled on the happy occasion.

The occupation of the "Shadchan" has been a highly respected one for over 1,000 years, and formerly even great Rabbis did not think it beneath their dignity to engage in it as a means of subsistence.

Temperament.

"Temperament. He got mad because his name was printed in smaller type on the program than the name of the piano on which he was to perform."—Chicago Record-Herald.

GETTING ON THE STAGE

Dangers That Beset New Eggs in the Vaudeville Basket.

The most amazing thing to a theatrical manager is the utter lack of comprehension on the part of applicants of what professional work really means.

When I was writing vaudeville sketches I used to get letters from young fellows in country towns who wanted to go into vaudeville. For some unaccountable reason they figured out that that was the easiest way to break into the entertainment business. As a matter of fact, they were choosing the very toughest end of it all. In vaudeville there is no stage manager to tell one what to do and how to do it. He must rely entirely upon himself. Furthermore, he must do his own booking, get his own transfer agent to take care of his baggage, negotiate his own railroading and even pack his own properties. In fact, he has a thousand and one troubles to divert his mind from his proper business. It never seems to dawn upon the aspirant that it's much better to get into a great organization, where there's somebody to attend to every problem for him and where he has a chance to learn the details of stagecraft.

A clever vaudeville man, to begin with, must have a good act, and if he be unknown he must know how to talk his act to the managers. If he employs an agent he is at a disadvantage, because these persons work for the management of the theaters. Furthermore, the vaudeville man must remember that he comes out on to the stage with nothing behind him, practically no properties, no chorus girls to divert attention. The eyes of the people are centered on him. He must do it all. It is by far the most difficult business in the world to succeed at, unless one is very talented.—George M. Cohan, in the New York Sun.

SCARED THE LION.

Bravery and Daring Displayed by an African Woman.

In "Hunting the Elephant In Africa" the author, Captain C. H. Stigand, in telling some lion stories, admits that there is a certain thrill in connection with the king of the jungle. The Somalis say that a lion makes you jump three times—first, when you hear him roar; secondly, when you unexpectedly meet his spoor, and thirdly, when you first sight him. They say that even a bold man is thus frightened three times by a lion, but after the sudden shock of seeing him is over he is no longer afraid. And in this connection he tells us a good story of female heroism:

"At a village near Fort Mangoche, also in Nyasaland, a man was sitting one night at the door of his hut drumming while his wife was cooking food inside. The hut was an isolated one, being several hundred yards from the rest of the village.

"Suddenly the woman heard the man call out, 'A lion has got me.' She took a burning fagot from the fire, ran out and smacked the lion in the face. The astonished animal let go, and she dragged her husband into the hut and hastily put up the poles which form the door. The man died a few minutes after, and the woman sat there with the dead body.

"Presently the lion returned and scratched gently on the door. This he repeated several times till it got on the woman's nerves. At last she could stand it no longer, so she took another fagot from the fire, unbarred the door and fled to the village, leaving the dead man. The lion then walked into the hut and took him."

How We Got the Gas Jet.

Possibly very few people know that we owe the ordinary gas jet to the accidental use of a woman's thimble. After the dinner of the British Commercial Gas association Professor Vivian Lewes told how Clegg of Redruth used to burn the illuminant straight from the open pipe and turn it off by plugging the pipe with some clay. Upon one occasion his lump of clay was missing, and, picking up his wife's thimble, he put this on top of the pipe. Much to his surprise, the gas escaped through small holes which had been worn by the constant use of the needle, small burning jets of gas resulting. From this Professor Lewes traced the evolution of the gas jet.—London Globe.

Surf Birds.

That birds of the family termed surf birds in the Hawaiian Islands should leave that paradise of the Pacific to go and rear their young in the tundras of Alaska would seem to many an extraordinary proceeding, yet the turnstone and the black bellied plover and the Pacific golden plover make the long journey of about 4,000 miles thither annually.

Classified the Family.

"Everybody in our family's some kind of an animal," said Bobby to the amazed lady visitor.

"What nonsense!" she exclaimed.

"Well," replied Bobby, "mother's a dear, my baby sister is mother's little lamb, I'm the kid and dad's the goat."—Dundee Advertiser

Too Many Trombones.

The following anecdote concerning Donizetti and the score of Rossini's "Otello" is worth repeating.

Donizetti had asked Sigismondi, the director of the Naples conservatory, to look over the score with him, and the two sat down at a table with the work in front of them. Presently Sigismondi began to rave about its "monstrous orchestration." Terrible was his indignation when he found that clarinets, bassoons and trombones had been employed in one place to swell a crescendo, but when the fortissimo was reached he uttered a cry of despair, struck the score violently with his fist, upset the table and rushed from the room, exclaiming: "A hundred and twenty-three trombones! A hundred and twenty-three trombones!" Donizetti in vain tried to call him back, shouting after him, "Not 123 trombones, but first, second and third trombones!" Sigismondi would not listen and when last seen was still repeating, "A hundred and twenty-three trombones!"

ELLIOTT'S TAX REFORM AMENDMENT DISCUSSED

R. R. Gamey Is Government's Chief Speaker and Ridicules Idea That System Robs Province.

TORONTO, Feb. 27.—The debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne was concluded yesterday when the third Opposition amendment, that of Mr. J. C. Elliott regretting the failure of the Government to propose assessment reform legislation was defeated and the original address upheld by a vote of 57 to 17.

The budget is due next week.

In introducing his tax reform amendment to the address in reply to the speech from the throne, Mr. Elliott referred briefly to the extension of municipal suffrage for women, which, he hoped, would be granted this session.

As for tax reform, there could be no doubt of the general desire for it, he said. Why was so sweeping a verdict rendered in Toronto last year? Was it because the mass of the people were Liberals attempting to embarrass the Government, or was it because there was a general demand? The people knew what they wanted and meant what they said.

Opposing the argument that local option in assessment would introduce a checkerboard system.

In the Townships of East and West Williams, in his own county the taxes on land were $32 per acre and $2 on buildings, and $27 per acre and $5 on buildings, respectively. All through the province varying ratios prevailed. It meant that the whole system was one of inequality. Nowhere would it be possible to find a system that so deserved to be called a "checkerboard" as that in the province. In Toronto the difference in assessment between 1913 and 1914 was $13,000,000, and whereas the people of Middlesex had taken years to bring an increased value of $37,000,000, Toronto had greatly exceeded this in one year.

R. R. Gamey (Con., Manitoulin) said Mr. Elliott's arguments were ridiculous. Taxation had no connection with the farmer coming into the city. There was no exorbitant tax in the province, and if the big cities paid more than the country why should the farmer come in from the easier districts.

Mr. Gamey stated that there might be some weak points in the law. The fact that there were variances in the taxes lay at the door of the different assessors. His own opinion was that a whole country could be better served by the one official rather than by having one in each municipality. The system might be wrong, but it was being carried out conscientiously, and there was no reason why one place should suffer more than another.

"I differ with the Assessment Act myself in some respects," he declared, "but when you come to talking of exempting buildings, having single tax on land alone I differ entirely. I know that plan would not serve better. The act is as equitable as could be devised. Further, every man should pay a tax on every dollar that he possesses, no matter where it is."

Z. Mageau, Sturgeon Falls, followed Mr. Gamey. He contended that any amendment which would bring about a remedy in the present system of assessment and taxation would be a move in the right direction. He declared that the present system was a hardship on the settlers in New Ontario, because it favored the non-resident owners who got their statutory work done by proxy and that such a condition hindered development.

A. B. Thompson, Centre Simcoe, said that Mr. Mageau was attacking the Government for not doing something it had already done, referring to the matter of agricultural college training in rural districts. He instanced the thirty-seven traveling representatives who visited various parts of the province and said that over fifty farmers' sons in his own constituency had already received training in all branches.

T. R. Atkinson, North Norfolk, declared himself in favor of taking taxes off improvements and placing them on land.

Allan Studholme vigorously supported the amendment, declaring in favor of leaving the option of fixing its own assessment with each municipality.

Careful.

The case before the court involved a gang of thieves, and one of the accused, a woman, had been found guilty of keeping and maintaining a "fence." The penalty was two years in state's prison. As the judge finished pronouncing the sentence, the prisoner called out to her husband, who had managed to get off by pleading an alibi and was among the spectators:

"Don't forget, Bill, to take the plumes out of my winter hat and put 'em away in camphor."

Pretty Warm.

Once a visitor was narrating a case he had just heard in court. This was his way of expressing his meaning:

"At this point," said the narrator, "she broke down and swept scalding tears."

"My goodness," exclaimed a listener, "she must have been boiling over with rage!"—London Telegraph.

Keeping Salt Dry.

If pepper is mixed with salt in the proportions of one part of pepper to three of salt, it will be found that the salt flows freely in both hot and damp weather. The mixture is useful not only on the table, but it is also a time saver in cooking.

How to Keep Shoes Clean.

Twenty-five cents is the price of a little contrivance which any man would appreciate, and there is no reason why it should not find favor with busy women too. It is a shoe polisher which can be carried about in the pocket or handbag.

It is a little strip of lamb's wool a couple of inches wide and twice as long, backed with a piece of leather. When the polisher is not in use it is rolled up with the leather side out and clasped shut with a ball and socket clasp.

GRAND JURY REPORT ON PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS

Recommendation That Fire Protection be Considered is Made

The Grand Jury presented the following report to Mr. Justice Kelly, yesterday afternoon:

To the Honourable Mr. Justice Kelly,

May it please your Lordship,

We the Grand Jury at the Winter Assizes of the Supreme Court of Ontario at Peterborough, wish to take this opportunity of offering hearty congratulations on Your Lordship's elevation to the bench of the highest court of the province, and to welcome Your Lordship on this first occasion of your visit to Peterborough in a judicial capacity.

In making its report, your Grand Jury heartily concur in the remarks of Your Lordship, in pointing out the absence of criminal cases at this sitting of the Court, a matter of which we feel reflects credit upon the community. In accordance with your instructions we have carefully inspected the public institutions within the city, visiting the court house and jail, we found but a small number of prisoners most of them serving short sentences. We found them well cared for and the surroundings in good order, all parts being clean and well kept, and prisoners well cared for.

We visited the Nicholls Hospital, and St. Joseph's Hospital, where every facility was afforded us of obtaining information, and making proper inspection, and we believe that every skill and care is being exercised in respect to the patients in charge of these institutions. We also visited the House of Providence, where a large number of aged men and women are cared for, and everything pertaining to this institution appears to be in the best of order.

We visited the St. Vincent's Orphanage, where nineteen girls and 22 boys, many of whom are orphans, others, children of poor unfortunate parents, are at present well cared for, and provided with sustenance, by the sisters in charge of this institution. We visited also the Protestant Home, and found 11 women, and 20 men are at present provided with every necessary comfort, and are treated with kindness by those in charge.

We also visited the Children's Shelter, where two girls, and four boys under the care of a Children's Aid Society are being cared for, and receive good attention.

We are pleased to report generally, as the result of our inspections, that all the public institutions of this city, are in a good sanitary condition, and that the inmates appear to be well cared for by capable and efficient officials. With respect to fire escapes of these buildings, we recommend that the proper authorities have them inspected especially the central one on the east wall of St. Joseph's Hospital, and one on the old building of Nicholl's Hospital, with the view of improving their present form of construction, in as much as the upper end of their iron stairway rests on wooden balconies, stairways rests on wooden balconies, sidewalls of the buildings, directly in front of the hall windows, or door ways. At the Protestant Home there are no fire escapes from the top or third floor of the building, and we accordingly recommend that the iron stairways with balconies at the second and third floors be provided for each win.g We are pleased to report the exceeding courteous manner of all the officials in receiving the visit of the Grand Jury, and acknowledge the readiness with which all questions were answered in excess given to any department we wished to visit.

In conclusion we with all other citizens are proud of the city and county and the material progress being made, and gladly acknowledge that one of the most potent influences toward the advancement of our country in the manner in which the administration of the law is carried out by our judges so well known for their impartiality, and integrity.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

GREAT CARTOONIST DEAD.

Sir John Tenniel Passes Away at Age of 94 Years.

LONDON, Feb. 27.—Sir John Tenniel, for many years the leading British cartoonist, died yesterday, at the age of 94..

Sir John was a Londoner born and bred, a self-taught artist, and made his first mark as long ago as 1845, by winning a prize in the Westminster Hall cartoon competition. He joined the staff of London Punch in 1851 and it is not very many years ago that the newspapers of many countries thought it worth while noting that an issue of Punch had just appeared without a cartoon by him—a remarkable tribute. Tenniel's style was severely classical.

Believe Britannic Is Unsinkable.

BELFAST, Ireland, Feb. 27.—The launching yesterday of the Britannic, the 50,000-ton White Star liner, marks an important development in constructional safety, so far as engineering ingenuity can ensure it.

The Britannic, intended for the transatlantic service, had only just been laid down when the Titanic disaster occurred, and as a result of that accident, the plans of the new liner were almost completely remodelled.

It is claimed for the Britannic that she will be able to float with any six compartments flooded. The liner skin consists of heavy plates.

LIBERALS SOUGHT TO ENTER DEFENCE FOR HON. SYDNEY FISHER

Opposition Becomes Turbulent When Speaker Rules Out Statements Regarding Eastern Townships Camp Deal And Appeal From Decision But Defence Is Finally Allowed—Hughes Refuses to Retract.

OTTAWA, Feb. 27.—A storm resembling in some degree the historic episodes of last spring occurred in the Commons yesterday when the Liberal party in the person of E. B. Devlin of Wright tried to make on the floor of the House a defence of Hon. Sydney Fisher in connection with the recent charges of Hon. Col. Hughes. When the Speaker ruled that Mr. Fisher could not be defended on a point of privilege because he was not a member the Opposition became turbulent and resorted to noise, but on the plea that present members were implied in the charge the defence was permitted. Col. Hughes repeated the charge, which, he said was a matter of common report throughout the eastern townships.

Mr. E. B. Devlin, the Liberal member for Wright, rose to a question of privilege. He read from Hansard some observations delivered by Col. Hughes in the House last Monday, which were in substance to the effect that Hon. Sydney Fisher, then Minister of Agriculture, and certain Liberal members of the House at that time had unloaded upon the Government the land now occupied by the Farnham camp in the eastern townships. Col. Hughes went on to say that these gentlemen had loaned money upon land supposed to be suitable for growing tobacco, that the land, which was a mere morass, turned out to have no value, and that they had procured a rake-off to the extent at least of saving their investment by inducing the Militia Department to buy the land for the purpose of a cavalry camp.

Speaker Sproule interrupted Mr. Devlin to rule that no question of privilege was involved.

Mr. Devlin submitted that he was quite in order. He proceeded to read from the published denial of Hon. Sydney Fisher, and said that the Minister of Militia and Defence had given false information to the House. He was sorry that neither the Prime Minister nor the Minister of Militia were present, but trusted that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) would inform his colleague that he had made a statement about an honorable gentleman, which upon investigation he would find to be calumnious.

The Speaker again called Mr. Devlin to order because Hon. Sydney Fisher was not a member of Parliament.

Mr. Devlin said it was customary for a judge to hear a case before deciding it, but Mr. Speaker was evidently ruling in advance.

The Speaker again intervened and Sir Wilfrid Laurier rose to protest. The member for Wright (Mr. Devlin), he said, had risen to a question of privilege. Surely Mr. Speaker had been hasty in ruling him out of order before he had been able to state what the question of privilege was.

The Speaker repeated his ruling, and, after some further argument, Sir Wilfrid appealed from the decision.

"It is gag rule," interjected Sir Wilfrid Laurier, with considerable vigor, and again the Opposition benches rocked with applause. "Let us hear from the Minister of Militia," continued the ex-Premier.

Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden, who in the meantime had entered the chamber, said the point at issue was a narrow one. Had the privilege of any member of the House been invaded by the published statement of Hon. Sydney Fisher? That statement questioned the veracity of the Minister of Militia, and to that extent reflected upon the honor of a member of this House. But only the member referred to could rise to a question of privilege. Certainly Mr. Devlin had no right to raise a question of privilege in behalf of Col. Hughes.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier asked whether the Prime Minister would permit one of his colleagues to remain silent when publicly charged with having uttered slander respecting citizens of repute. He then went on to read from last Monday's Hansard, and showed that the statement made by Col. Hughes was open to the interpretation that some members of the present House were partners in the alleged grafting by Mr. Fisher.

With this point the Opposition scored, for the Speaker ruled that Mr. Devlin might finish his remarks. This he did, without adding to the information of the House, and as he resumed his seat Col. Hughes hurried to his place.

Sir Wilfrid challenged him to repeat the statement or admit he was at fault. Col. Hughes refused to do the latter.

"Let me tell the honorable gentleman," said Col. Hughes, addressing himself to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, "that in this House or out of this House I do not belong to the craven crowd, that I will go a little further now. I will tell him that it is current property throughout the length and breadth of the eastern townships that the purchase of the bog at Farnham which has been unloaded on the people as a camp was engineered by Sydney Fisher. I will say further that a former member of the House by the name of Mr. Meigs had mortgages on the property which could not be redeemed in any other way, and the property was unloaded on the Dominion Government by engineering of this man and Mr. Meigs. That is the current story; does the ex-First Minister not know it?"

Sir Wilfrid said he did not know personally if it was true or false.

FRANK SMITH WILL HANG

Colored Man is Found Guilty of Murder

CHATHAM, Feb. 27. — Frank Smith, colored, was last night found guilty of the murder of James Conyers last November, and sentenced to be hanged in May next. The jury was out about three hours. The case was opened yesterday morning, the evidence was in about four o'clock, and the case was given to the jury at 5.30. Wm. Currie, who was jointly arraigned with Smith, was, after the evidence had all be submitted, given his freedom by the court at the instigation of the Crown Attorney.

The chief justice stated in his charge to the jury that the evidence against Currie was very weak, and that an acquittal would be accepted by him, upon which the crown stated that no objection would be interposed if the prisoner were allowed his liberty at once.

According to the evidence in the case Conyers and Currie had a dispute as to a house, and a physical encounter followed. Later Conyers is said to have made a threatening move towards Currie, when Smith got between them and took up the quarrel. Conyers was stabbed five times, and five days later died of septic peritonitis, as a result of a wound in the [illegible].

LIBERAL IS DEFEATED

Asquith Government Receives Another By-election Blow

LONDON, Feb. 27. — The fourth and last of the bye-elections, which synchronized with the opening of Parliament, was decided yesterday when Leith Burghs elected the Unionist candidate to succeed Sir Ronald Munroe Ferguson, newly-appointed Australian Governor-General.

The figures are: G. W. Currie, Unionist, 5,159; Provost M. Smith, Liberal, 5,148; Bell, Labor, 3,346.

The only consoling feature of the result of the contest so far as the Liberals are concerned is that the combined Liberal labor vote in yesterday's contest considerably exceeds that given the Liberal candidate in the straight party fight in December, 1910. On the other hand, it is pointed out by jubilant Unionists that in the general election of January, 1910, the Liberal candidate had a majority over the combined vote of his Unionist and Labor opponents of 2,600. The constituency has returned a Liberal candidate regularly since 1832, the largest majority, 3,000, being given in 1906.

It is conceded that the Liberal candidate was the stronger from the personal standpoint. He is Malcolm Smith, provost of Leith, head of a large fish-curing business and highly popular. The Unionist, G. W. Currie, is an accountant, and was not regarded as a strong candidate.

Twelve Killed By Explosion.

BERLIN, Feb. 27.—Twelve men are known to have been killed and eight others seriously injured in an explosion which yesterday destroyed an extensive aniline dye factory in Rummelsburg, a suburb of Berlin.

There were four hundred employes in the building at the time of the explosion, which was heard all over Berlin.

The firemen were unable to enter the buildings owing to the poisonous fumes and it was not possible to ascertain the real extent of the disaster.

ANARCHY RULES IN PORTUGAL

PARIS, Feb. 27.—Railroad communication between Lisbon, Portugal, and the Spanish frontier has been completely stopped by the acts of railway men belonging to the revolutionary section of the Socialist party who have gone on strike. According to passengers who arrived here from Lisbon yesterday after a journey of 102 hours, instead of the usual 32, the tracks have been destroyed in many places, a bridge has been blown up and telegraph and telephone communication has been interrupted almost throughout Portugal.

The passengers were obliged to transfer six times between Lisbon and the frontier owing to breaks in the line. The rails in the tunnel near Kagrebas have been torn out and a freight train was derailed at the mouth of the tunnel.

Project to Drain Swamps.

GALT, Feb. 27. — Announcement was made yesterday of the co-operation of the Ontario Agricultural College with the local farmers interested in a huge drainage scheme. The project is to reclaim ten thousand acres of swamp land in Dumfries Township, and it is estimated that the cost will be but little compared with the value of the splendid land reclaimed. Prof. Day is taking an active part in the matter.

HOW ANTITOXIN WORKS.

Action of Fluid In Combatting Diphtheria Described.

How antitoxin works has been known in terms of scientists many years, but it has remained for a recent writer to put it in common terms that the rest of us may understand. Before the discoveries of science yellow fever has lost its terrors, smallpox is disappearing and the malignant diphtheria is lessening its power.

Diphtheria, science now tells us, is an infection of the throat caused by a germ, a rod-shaped microscopical organism, lodging there. This germ or bacillus grows rapidly, forming a grayish white membrane covering the tonsils and throat of the patient, accompanied by fever, etc. However, the sore throat in itself does not cause the dangerous effects of the disease. The patient is poisoned! But how?

In the growth of these bacilli they produce a substance which is as deadly as snake venom, and this substance is absorbed by the individual, soon producing poisonous or toxic effects on the heart, kidneys and other organs and death as a result. Oftentimes patients who overcome the disease at first later develop paralysis, usually of the throat or limbs.

The human body defends itself against this poison by producing in the blood a substance, an antitoxin, which actually will combine with the toxin produced by the germs and render this poison absolutely harmless. The patient's life depends upon the varying ability of the patient's body to make a sufficient amount of this antitoxin, and before the toxin becomes fatal. Here is where a tremendous advance was made.

Why not obtain antitoxin already made and give it to the patient? Experiments upon animals were carried out, and it was found that by giving gradually increased doses of diphtheria toxins at intervals of a few days to a horse that its blood would form increasing amounts of antitoxin and in excess of the amount needed to neutralise the toxins injected, until the animal could stand enormous doses of the poison without any ill effects. The blood of such an animal was then withdrawn under strictly clean methods, allowed to clot and the serum or watery portion containing the antitoxin prepared and preserved for human administration.

However, one must not consider diphtheria lightly, and precautions against acquiring the disease and vigorous quarantine must not be neglected, for deaths still occur. Some persons die when antitoxin is administered too late—for, unfortunately, the later after the onset of the disease the antitoxin is administered the less effective it will be.

Antitoxin is administered by injection under the skin, the skin having been carefully cleansed. There often is pain at the point of injection and later a skin rash of a red, itching character follows, though this is harmless and soon completely disappears. The dose is repeated and increased every four to six hours until the disease appears to be controlled by the membrane in the throat becoming detached and shriveling, and the patient's general condition improves. Some of the most desperate and apparently hopeless cases have often recovered after large doses of antitoxin.

When one considers that a disease that once killed about 50 per cent. of the individuals infected, now, when early treatment is actively begun, can claim but 1 or 2 per cent., and a marked reduction in later effects, one can realize that in antitoxin we have a wonderful remedy of which science and the men who worked so diligently in its discovery and the perfecting of it can well be proud.

Not the Custom.

"No es costumbre" (which, being translated; means "It is not the custom") has been described as the national motto of Mexico. All Mexicans are slaves of habit, and if a thing is "not the custom" then to them it seems unworthy of consideration. If you ask the cook to sweep a floor," says W. E. Carson in his "Mexico," she politely replied, "No es costumbre," or if you complain when the soup and chop ordered in a restaurant arrive at intervals of half an hour between and the chop preceding the soup the waiter will merely remark, "No es costumbre." If you ask for hurry and find dawdling you must be cheerful, for that is "costumbre."—London Mail.

Mother's Carey's Chickens.

Mother Carey's chickens is the name given by sailors to the stormy petrel, a small seabird, the appearance of which is an unfailing sign of rough weather.

The expression, Mother Carey's is said to be a corruption of mater cara, dear mother, a phrase used by Italian sailors in speaking of the mother of Christ, patroness of seafaring men, to indicate their thankfulness to her for sending these, her chickens, to warn them of bad weather.

Mouse In Aeroplane.

While an army biplane was being overhauled after a flight by Lieut. Fletcher, of the Royal Flying Corps, from Aldershot to Montrose (over 500 miles), a mechanic saw a mouse dart across one of the planes. On investigation he discovered in the corner of the wing a "nest" made from shreds of the fabric, with a number of young mice in it.

Well Trained.

Miss Wilkins, the primary teacher, was instructing her small charges.

"Name one thing of importance that did not exist 100 years ago," said the teacher.

Ralph Franklin, an only child, who was seated in the front row, promptly arose and answered:

"Me."

Shadow Buff.

The game of shadow buff furnishes lots of amusement for a party of young folks. Here is the way to play it. A large white sheet is hung securely on one side of the room, and on a table some distance behind a very bright lamp must be placed, other lights being extinguished. One of the party takes a seat on a low stool between the lamp and the sheet, but nearer the latter than the former. One after another the company pass behind him, their shadows fall on the sheet as they pass, and the person sitting down tries to guess who each one is. The players are allowed to disguise themselves to a slight extent, and gestures of any kind may be practiced.

His Choice.

Hobbs is a good soul and a clever pianist, but no genius, and nobody takes him for one. Nevertheless he is a very serious person.

Consequently it seemed to his friends a bit out of place for him to decorate his music room by hanging up Wagner's portrait and as a match to it on the opposite wall one of himself of exactly the same heroic size. Somebody ventured to call Hobbs' attention as tactfully as possible to this slight error of taste. He took it all very kindly and seemed impressed. Upon the next visit to his quarters it was observed that the hint had borne fruit. Wagner's picture had been removed.

ADVERTISING

A STORE'S importance is rightly judged by its advertising. Not altogether by the size of the advertisement, but by size and tone, and quality of announcement.

What the store has to say is one thing. Quite as important is how it says it.

Given that the clerical force is competent and up-to-date, it will say, over the counter, the very best to be said in reference to the goods enquired for. It may, and should, suggest other goods, not in the customers view.

This implies that the customer is in the store. But what brings him or her there? The wish to buy and the belief it is a good place to buy at.

How is this learned of?

By advertising. The advertisement is a message, an intelligent middleman, doing service between seller and buyer. The space talks to thousands, even while the store is closed for the night.

Use The REVIEW and tell the story of your store and its opportunities for good service.

THE SPORTING WORLD

THOSE GATE RECEIPTS IN THE MERCANTILE

Sporting Editor of Review.

Dear Sir,—The writer was not a little surprised to read in your columns the report of the special meeting of the executive convened at 11th hour call on the 25th inst., and to learn of what appears to me the manifestly unfair action taken to secure for the three leading teams, the gate receipts of the three additional games made necessary by the three-cornered tie. This unquestionably has all the ear-marks of a frame-up, otherwise, why the necessity of holding this meeting on such a hurry call?

If a tie game re-played ceases to be a league fixture, then the proper thing to do in the case of a tie occuring during the regular schedule would be to decide the tie by period of overtime play, otherwise, we are danding out an inducement for any two teams (who have the desire to do so) to get together and decide to play a tie game, in order that they may replay the game later, and divide between them the spoils thereof. This has not a tendency to promote clean, honest sport, and I am surprised to find such a course supported by the President of the League.

Insofar as the De Laval team is concerned, the boys entered into the league for the love of the game, and without any other incentive than to play the game fairly, and win it, if possible, and as manager of the team I may say, that the boys gladly sacrifice their participation in the gate receipts for division among those more mercenary teams who took this action to secure it, but I would like to have seen some consideration shown for the other teams of the league, who did not finish up in front, but were, nevertheless, quite as big a factor in making the Mercantile League a possibility as were those who were called upon to play off a three-cornered tie.

Yours very truly,
G. A. EVANS.

Parliament Going Dry, Too.

Abolition of the system of serving liquid refreshments in the House of Commons is in prospect.

The restaurant committee this year adopted a new plan whereby drinks are paid for by tickets, and said tickets are sold only to those entitled to the privilege. Outsiders are barred.

Members object to being recorded as heavy purchasers of such tickets and the result is that the business is practically dead.

In inaugurating the change, the committee decided that if it failed to work out satisfactorily, the idea was to prohibit absolutely the serving of refreshments save at meals. It was said by one of the committeemen recently that this is likely to be the outcome, at least after this year.

Power of Money.

Whoever has sixpence is sovereign over all men to the extent of that sixpence; commands cooks to feed him, philosophers to teach him, kings to mount guard over him, to the extent of that sixpence.—Carlyle.

STAND UP STRAIGHT.

Keep the Chest Wide Open and Avoid the Great White Plague.

The best way to avoid consumption is to stand up straight, according to the Bulletin of the American Medical association. The writer says:

"The first essential in the avoidance of tuberculosis of the lungs, or consumption, is to keep the lungs strong, so that if the germs are breathed they can do no harm. One of the most important things in keeping the lungs strong is to keep the chest wide open so that the lungs can be properly used. If the body is drooped or stoops or if the shoulders are allowed to drag forward (round shoulders) or if the head is carried forward instead of well back over the shoulders the chest must be flattened, the breathing must be shallow, and the lungs, not being freely used, become weak.

"It is in this type of chest that tuberculosis usually begins. The consumptive is usually narrow chested, with drooped shoulders and with the head craned forward.

"While the development of a strong, well formed chest is one of the most important factors in preventing tuberculosis, the same thing is to be desired if the disease has once started. Not only should we live in the open, but we should stand up straight and learn to 'throw a big chest,' so that the lungs can grow strong and the fresh air be taken in.

"The runner, the singer or any one who is obliged to make sustained effort is taught to stand and sit with the chest high, so that the lungs can be used to the best advantage, and if every one would do the same thing there would be less tuberculosis because there would be fewer weak lungs."

Railway Trains in England.

I can prove in a moment by any traveler that our trains are infinitely more luxurious than the trains in England. But still, and notwithstanding, I say the English railway service is better. Why? Because it's more human; it's more considerate. You aren't driven and urged to step lively and called at in loud, harsh voices and made to feel that you are being tolerated aboard something that was never made for you at all, but for the employees of the company. In England the trains are run for the people, not the people for the trains.—From Theodore Dreiser's "A Traveler at Forty."

Worse Yet.

"He's a frightful bore, your baron. Here he's been buzzing the whole evening long about Kant and Schopenhauer."

"You have my sympathy. For my part I detest philosophical discussions."

"Philosophical discussions, indeed! Kant and Schopenhauer are the names of the baron's two horses."—New York Post.

SOLDIER MADE BARONET.

Curious History of Old Title Revived by King George.

Ancient history of a curious character is recalled by the announcement that the King has been pleased to confer the honor of a baronetcy of the United Kingdom upon Major-General John William Campbell, C.B., of Ardnamurchan, with precedence from 1804. Sir John Campbell is described by Burke as the ninth holder of a baronetcy originally of Nova Scotia, created in 1627. The first baronet, Sir Donald Campbell, was twice married. His first wife was Jane, daughter of the sixth Earl of Argyll, and she died without bearing her husband any children. Sir Donald then married his deceased's wife's half-sister, Anne, a natural daughter of the Earl of Argyll. By her he had a son, John, but the latter predeceased him, and his other children were daughters. To perpetuate the baronetcy, therefore, Sir Donald, in 1643, resigned that dignity into the King's hands for a new enfeoffment of it, and the lands annexed in favor of his nephew, George Campbell. When Sir Donald died his estate of Ardnamurchan reverted to the Duke of Argyll, but his estate of Airds passed to his nephew. The latter, however, did not claim the title of baronet, nor did the four next succeeding heirs. In 1791 John Campbell of Airds, direct descendent of George Campbell, obtained a charter under the Great Seal as heir to his predecessor and father. His son, also named John, was served heir male to the first baronet, and assumed the title as seventh baronet in 1804. His grandson is the present holder of the title. The lapse in the use of it for a period of over 150 years and the resumption of it, apparently without official confirmation, are facts quite sufficient to explain the necessity of the new creation, which has now been made in favor of Sir John William Campbell, and the act of his grandfather in reviving the title in 1804 is thus retrospectively validated. Major-General Sir John William Campbell, C.B., who is 77, succeeded his father in 1853. He entered the Royal Artillery in the following year, served through the Crimean War, the China campaign, 1860, the Afghan War, 1879-80, and the Zhob Valley Expedition, when he was in command of the Artillery. He was created C.B. in 1886. Sir John married, in 1867, Catherine, daughter of the late Mr. W. W. Cavie. She died in 1910, and in the following year Sir John married Mary, widow of Mr. H. J. Lias, of St. Leonards-on-Sea. His heir is his son, Mr. John Bruce Stuart Campbell, born in 1877, who served in the South African War with the West Australian forces.

Vocal Retrenchment.

A. B. Morphy, the Listowel lawyer, who represents North Perth in Parliament, tells a story of a visit he paid recently to a Scotch settlement in his riding, where he was invited to a service in the Presbyterian kirk. It was an old-fashioned church, and an old-fashioned congregation, which did not put much faith in new fangled inventions, such as organs, but pinned their affections to the precentor. On the occasion in question the precentor, who was an elderly, dour old Scotchman, tried to pitch the tune to the hymn, "Ten Thousand Times Ten Thousand," but all his efforts were too high. After repeated attempts to get the proper pitch the precentor stopped, and the village wit remarked to him in a perfectly audible whisper:

"Sandy, why not start it at five thousand?"—Saturday Night.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mr. C. Pierce, of Boston, is a guest at the Oriental.

Mr. A. R. Ivery, of Winnipeg, is in the city on business.

The many friends of Mr. Thos. McDonough, of the Oriental, will regret to learn he is confined to his room with illness.

Mr. W. J. Gamble has returned to Calgary, after a visit at his home here, due to the illness of his mother, who is now recovering.

Messrs. Nagle Phelan and E. P. Kelly left to-day for Toronto to take in the T.R. and A.A. and St. Mike's game to-night.

Miss Grace Todd entertained a few friends yesterday evening, a very enjoyable time being spent in games and music.

E. Company Dance.

Some sixty couples enjoyed a delightful dance held by E. Company of 57th Regiment last evening in the Armouries. Tucker's orchestra supplied the music for the function, which was the second annual dance of E. Company.

Among those present were Capt. Langford and Miss Langford, Lieut. Meyers, Mrs. (Col.) Clegg and Mrs. (Maj.) Mills, Maj. Anderson, Lieut. Brooks, Lieut. Worth, Col.-Serg. Dummitt and Sergt. Ellis. Lt.-Col. Clegg and Major Mills were unable to attend.

The evening was brought to a close with the serving of refreshments by Hoopers.

Owing to the new Turnbull Building not being completed Miss Welsh will open her department for spring in the same rooms as last season, over Simcoe St., store, next to Bank of Montreal, on Monday, March 2nd.

New Airship Destroyer.

A new airship-destroying gun is attracting a great deal of interest in British military circles. Owing to the great heights to which the dirigible can fly, and the speeds obtainable by the aeroplane, it has not been possible to date to secure a range-finding device rapid and accurate enough to allow anything near efficiency in gunnery when a flying object was the mark. In the recent tests made from the Needles Battery, Isle of Wight, three large kites were towed rapidly at a considerable height, in all, twenty rounds of shrapnel were fired, with the result that two of the three kites were shattered. Two hits out of twenty shots would not appear to be much of a percentage, but it must be remembered that the gun in question is a quick-firing piece of ordinance, and twenty shots can be fired with it in a remarkably short space of time. At any rate, it is considerably better than nothing, which is about as far as airship repelling guns have gotten heretofore.

Sweetly Innocent.

Mr. Sydney Buxton has some amusing things to say in his recently published "Book of Fishing Stories."

"Why," he asks, "is it that day after day a single salmon, and one only, is caught? Is it that among so many fish covered by the fly there is each day in one pool one fish more active, more enterprising, more alert, and more intelligent than the rest? Or is this particular fish, so to speak, the village idiot?"

Mr. Buxton tells a story of a fisherman who, after a successful four hours' tussle with a large salmon, came back in triumph and related the story to his aunt. Like all anglers he laid wearisome emphasis on the time occupied and the muscular expenditure.

"But, my dear Tom," the aunt remark at last, "why did you not cut the string and get rid of the brute?"

PARNELL—O'CONNELL.

The marriage of Mr. Roy Parnell to Miss Bernice O'Connell, daughter of Mr. John O'Connell, of this city, was solemnized last evening in Knox church manse by the Rev. H. J. Keith.

The young couple were unattended and the ceremony was performed in the presence of immediate friends. Mr. and Mrs. Parnell will reside in the city. They will have the best wishes of numerous friends.

FROST—DIXON.

On the evening of Feb. 25th, the home of Mr. Geo. Frost, Otonabee, was the scene of a very pretty but quiet wedding, when their daughter, Elsie, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. John Dixon, of Morse, Sask. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. G. Lewis, in the presence of the immediate relatives of the contracting parties. After the ceremony the guests partook of a sumptuous repast. The happy couple will reside in Morse, Saskatchewan.

STREET CALLED STRAIGHT.

Footsteps of Pagan, Jew and Christian In Old Damascus.

The city of Damascus can claim life without a break from its founding back in the dim dawn of the world's history. It is probably the most ancient city in the world.

Josephus attributes its foundation to Uz, the great-grandson of Noah. When Abraham crossed the desert from Haran 4,000 years ago, this city was standing. She was renowned in the time of the Pharoahs of Egypt; she was old when Greece and Rome were striplings in years. Rome may be termed the "Eternal City," but Damascus is twice as old, and though her streets have run red with blood of battle and rapine many times, she has not been overthrown.

"Babylon is a heap in the desert and Tyre a ruin on the shore," but Damascus remains.

Was there ever such a place to see the nations of the earth parading together? Here in the market place are motley crowds of Persians, Moors, Afghans, Indians, Egyptians, Sudanese, Jews, Bedouins, Druses, Turks, Europeans. The streets—so crooked, so narrow, so dirty, so full of life, with that strange spell of the desert upon them! The residences as seen from the street are ugly and disappointing enough, yet like old barns and tumble-down mills at home, are fascinating and picturesque.

The appearance of the city from a distance is attractive in the highest degree. In a situation of unrivalled beauty on a luxuriant plain, the bright buildings, sparkling beneath a Syrian sun, rise out of a sea of variously tinted foliage, while all around extend charming gardens, rich wheat fields, and blooming orchids with the Pharpar and Abana, rivers of Scripture, and their tributaries winding through to lose themselves eventually in a desert lake far to the eastward.

As the interior of the city presents such a sad contrast to its charming surroundings so do the rich interiors of the houses contrast with their miserable externals. Fine marble-paved courts ornamented with trees, shrubs, and fountains, rooms with arabesqued roofs and walls, most luxuriously furnished, are common features of all the dwellings of the wealthy. Damascus boasts 250 mosques, the finest of which is the great mosque, built on the site of the old house of Rimmon, the chief god of pagan Damascus, and now one of the handsomest ecclesiastical buildings in the Mahommedan world. The floor is of marble tessellated, and covered with Persian carpets, and the walls and piers of the transept are enriched with beautiful devices formed of various colored marbles, white rows of noble Corinthian pillars divide the interior into nave and aisles.

Other sights of the city are the ruins of the house of Naaman, the Syrian general who was cured of leprosy by the prophet Elisha and forsook his pagan beliefs for the worship of Jehovah; also the house of Ananias, the early Christian, who sold some property and offered the church part of the proceeds, pretending that he gave the whole sum. He dropped dead when his sin was detected by St. Peter, as did also his wife Sapphira. The wall is to be seen where St. Paul is said to have been let down in a basket, but the principal attraction is "the Street that is called Straight" mentioned in the New Testament in connection with the conversation of St. Paul. This extraordinary thoroughfare, with its long barrel roof, is about a mile long and extends in a straight line across the city. It is completely covered in and lined with bazaars, finer and more numerous than those of Cairo or Constantinople.

"BETWEEN SAVAGE AND TIGER"

George Kleine's New Photo Drama With Thrills for Young and Old—A Jungle Story

Every man, woman and child with a drop of red blood in their veins loves a picture or a story of adventure, where the hero is on the brink of death or misfortune every minute, but wiggles out every time by some hair-breadth escape and finally proves that virtue triumphs over vice and all ends happily. Just such a picture is George Kleine's latest success, the Cines photo drama "BETWEEN SAVAGE AND TIGER"— a six part story of adventure on the high seas and in the wildest jungles of India in which tigers, elephants, antelope, water-buffalo and tribes of wild savages play a conspicuous part. It would spoil everything to tell the story here and it suffices to say that the extreme imaginations of Rider Haggard are outdone in this exciting picture which still has all the convincing attributes of plausible reality. That it could happen is proven by the camera. That it did happen is another question all together. Antony Novelli, Leah Giunchi and Lorenzo Lupi, seen in "The Last Days of Pompeii," play the principal roles, supported by a large cast of capable artists, who promise to become favorites themselves, soon. Mr. Kleine's "BETWEEN SAVAGE AND TIGER," is to be the attraction at The Grand for four days, commencing next Tuesday, March 3rd. There will be no change in prices, 10c., any seat.

SAFETY FIRST ON GRAND TRUNK RY.

The second monthly meeting of the General Safety Committee of the Grand Trunk Railway System was held on Monday, February 23rd, in the room of the Board of Directors of the General Office Building in Montreal. Howard G. Kelley, Vice-President, presided at the meeting, which was attended by U. E. Gillen, General Superintendent, Chicago, Ill., H. E. Whittenberger, General Superintendent, Toronto; H. R. Safford, Chief Engineer, Montreal; T. W. R. McRae, Chief Claims Agent, Montreal, and Geo. Bradshaw, Safety Engineer, Montreal.

Reports received from twenty-three Safety Committees located at various points on the system, showed that during January last, members of the Safety Committees corrected 445 unsafe practices in 433 cases. The report of the secretary showed that the influence of the Safety Movement is being felt in a constant reduction of injuries to employes and patrons, the results for January being more favorable than for any previous month, notwithstanding the severe weather which often is an indirect cause of causalities.

A TREMENDOUS SUCCESS

"Kleine's" Wonderful Photo-drama "Between Savage and Tiger"

It is safe to predict that George Kleine's latest photo drama, "BETWEEN SAVAGE AND TIGER," the wonderful Cines story of romance and adventure in the jungle of India, will prove a greater money winner than anything this astute manager has yet produced. There have been jungle pictures produced before and romantic stories located both in Africa and India, but this is positively the first instance where the most exciting adventures with wild animals that can possibly be conceived have been blended with a romantic tale of human interest and is bound to be a tremendous success. Mr. Kleine's productions of "THE LAST DAYS OF POMPEII," and "ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA," have appealed to lovers of classics and to particular classes of society, but "BETWEEN SAVAGE AND TIGER," has a big interest for all, young and old, educated and uneducated—everybody can comprehend it and everybody can enjoy it. The local engagement will open with matinees on Tuesday, March 3rd, at 2.30 and 4 p. m. No change in prices, 10c., any seat, although this is the first time this picture has been shown in Canada and the first time anywhere, at less than 50c.

FACED A FOREIGN FLAG.

A British Seaman's Prank That Enraged the Brazilians.

The harbor of Rio de Janeiro is one of the wonders of the world. You enter a narrow strait guarded by a towering conical mountain and discover a glorious inland sea surrounded on every side by abrupt and precipitous mountains, many of them with the most fantastic outlines. I should imagine, says the Hon. Stephen Coleridge in "Memories," that all the fleets of the world might anchor there in safety.

In the early seventies a couple of English bluejackets in search of adventure climbed to the top of the mountain that guards the entrance, hauled after them a flagstaff and a union jack, set up the pole on the summit and unfurled the flag to the breeze.

The astounded and indignant Brazilians awoke one morning to find an alien bunting flying over their territory from its most conspicuous eminence. Protests were lodged with the English minister, who, with the utmost politeness, apologized for the thoughtless escapade of some entirely unknown persons and gravely told the Brazilian government that of course he would have no possible objection to the prompt removal of the flag and pole. The emperor, however, could find no subject in all his wide empire who would volunteer to make the ascent to the summit of the mountain, which the people of Rio de Janeiro considered unscalable.

In this embarrassing dilemma the Brazilian government determined to knock over the staff by shooting at it. The Brazilian fleet was ordered to shoot the offending pole off the top of the mountain. Either they could not train their guns to the required angle of elevation or the target was too narrow for a successful shot. At any rate, the English flag flying over the proud Brazilian city remained, braving the battle and the breeze, till it rotted away.

"TENORS ARE QUEER."

Old Time Opera Stars as Seen by Clara Louise Kellogg.

In "The Memoirs of an American Prima Donna," by Clara Louise Kellogg, the author tells of her triumph as Violetta in "Traviata." She argued that Violetta would probably love curious and exotic combinations, so she dressed the part in a gown of rose pink and pale primrose yellow that seemed to be altogether enchanting.

"Apropos of the Violetta gowns, I sang the part during one season with a tenor whose hands were always dirty. I found the back of my pretty frocks becoming grimier and grimier and greasier and greasier, and, as I provided my own gowns and had to be economical, I finally came to the conclusion that I could not and would not afford such wholesale and continual ruin. So I sent my compliments to monsieur and asked him please to be extra careful and particular about washing his hands before the performance, as my dress was very light and delicate, etc.—quite a polite message considering the subject. Politeness, however, was entirely wasted on him. Back came the cheery and nonchalant reply:

"'All right. Tell her to send me some soap.'

"I sent it, and I supplied him with soap for the rest of the season. This was cheaper than buying new clothes.

"Tenors are queer creatures. Most of them have their eccentricities, and the soprano is lucky if these are innocuous peculiarities. I used to find it in my heart, for instance, to wish that they did not have such queer theories as to what sort of food was good for the voice. Many of them affected garlic. Stigelli usually exhaled an aroma of ingar beer, while the good Mazzoleni invariably ate from one to two pounds of cheese the day he was to sing. He said it strengthened his voice. Brignoli had been long enough in this country to become partly Americanized, so he never smelled of anything in particular."

LINCOLN AND THE DRAMA.

His Liking For Tragedy and His Curious Choice In "Hamlet."

Lincoln liked the drama. Perhaps if he had not liked it so much he would have lived many years longer, since otherwise he would hardly have put himself in Wilkes Booth's way on that fatal night in April, 1865. But he never pretended to any knowledge or connoisseurship whatever. Most of his life had been passed in a country town —and at a time when few great actors ever appeared in such small places as Springfield, Ill.

In a sale of the autographs, prints and playbills which belonged to the late Douglas Taylor there is a copy of a letter from Lincoln to James H. Hackett, dated Washington, Aug. 17, 1863, afterward printed in this form for private circulation, which contains the following:

> I have seen very little of the drama. Some of Shakespeare's plays I have never read, while others I have gone over perhaps as frequently as any unprofessional reader. Among the latter are "Lear," "Richard III.," "Henry VIII.," "Hamlet" and especially "Macbeth." I think the soliloquy in "Hamlet" commencing, "Oh, my offense is rank," surpasses "To be or not to be."

No one but the modest Lincoln would have gone out of his way to tell a Shakespearean scholar that he had never read some of Shakespeare's plays. It is interesting to see that Lincoln's preference fixed itself upon the tragedies and the most serious of the histories. His choice of "Oh, my offense is rank" over "To be or not to be" seems rather strange. The soliloquy is the king's desperate bemoaning of his perfidy and cruelty in murdering his brother.—New York Mail.

German Parliament Upholds Soldiery.

BERLIN, Feb. 27.—The movement in the German Imperial Parliament to abolish "sabre rule" by the army collapsed yesterday. The dissolution was announced of the committee considering various bills for prohibiting the intervention of the military without a requisition of the civil authorities, forbidding the use of arms by the soldiery except in self-defence and subjecting soldiers to civil jurisdiction.

A number of the committee, composed of Clericals and Liberals, voted against the proposed measures.

LITTLE LAKE PORT NEAR HAMILTON A QUAINT TOWN

Fishing and Fruit Growing Community Suffered Severely From Storms During Its Life Time, Which Goes Back Almost a Century—It Is Named After Admiral Horatio Nelson.

On the northwesterly shore of Lake Ontario, between the bustling cities of Toronto and Hamilton, but well away from either, stands the little old village of Bronte. It boasts itself to be the best harbor on that part of the coast, for nature has partially protected it from the fury of the spring tempests by a long point jutting into the lake a mile or so to the eastward and by a nearer sandbar, and man has done his best to improve the haven by defending it with two long lines of wharf, or breakwater, by frequent dredging of its river's mouth, and by erecting on the eastern pier a sturdy little lighthouse to make unmistakable the way for incoming craft.

Its irregular lines of buildings are chiefly of the "frame" variety; and the most imposing erection on its short, one-sided main street is not a grey old church, but a grist mill. This, however, is of quite respectable antiquity for our new country, for high on its tall chimney is the date, 1858. As to its early history—it was not till 1820 that the site of the village was opened to the settlement of white men, and that the Mississauga Indians relinquished their exclusive right of fishing in the Twelve Mile Creek.

Within an old man's memory, Bronte has suffered mercilessly from the moods of the lake. In a plan of the town bearing date 1834 there is traced a thoroughfare called by the ominous name of Ontario street, for the lake has claimed its own, and Ontario street is now engulfed in its restless waters. Once, it is told, the main road between Toronto and Hamilton lay as far out from the present shore as is the harbor light, and when at evening (as often chances) one hears a rattling on the shingle and sees the old "stage" which conveys passengers between the village and the station come lumbering down the beach and plunge into the dusky or moonlit water, it takes but a little imagination to see in it a phantom chariot, impelled by some mysterious doom to travel again the ancient route, where only boats can journey now. Almost one perceives a load of ghastly passengers, but in a second one's fancy is pulled up short by the vehicle turning landward. It is told also how the remorseless surges cut and carved away the too-yielding cliffs till the shady cemetery, once well inland, looked down directly on the waves, which, still unsatisfied, threatened to disturb the rest of the sleepers beneath the turf. But there a guarding pier has checked their rage, and beauty and peace still reign together in that green "God's acre."

Some of these tales of the wild lake's doings sound like legends, but it is still at the same old work. For its last winter's meal it sliced off here and there ten or fifteen feet of shore, and, as I write, I hear the surf growling along bare ledges of rock that a year ago were covered comfortably with ten feet of earth. Never, indeed, is this inland sea more beautiful than when it is in a fury of swelling waves and tossing spray and when its waters, colored with the reddish earth it has ground to powder, take on from the far-distant, smiling sky other strange hues of blue and green.

In addition, as hinted already, Bronte draws from the lake a harvest worth about twenty thousand dollars annually. In summer the boats come in several times a week laden with whitefish, big salmon trout or glittering herrings (delicious either fresh or smoked — as some Bronte folk have the art of smoking them). In winter many men employed during the summer on the Toronto ferryboat or lake steamers come home to fish. Three men go out on each of the sailing boats, and two on the gasoline launches. Usually they work on a system of "hand shares," the boat (or its owner) taking half the catch, and the remaining half being divided in equal shares between the two or three "hands."

Bronte is the home of several lake captains, but has lost some of its former importance as a port. It was a busy place, bearing its present appellation before the time when Charlotte Bronte's "Jane Eyre" made her famous, and it is a mistake to think that it was called after her. The name was really given in honor of the Duke of Bronte, more familiar to our thoughts as Horatio Nelson.

Bronte has its romantic legends of smugglers, who used to land their contraband cargoes under cover of night, while two men on horseback watched, east and west, on the Lake Shore road to give instant notice of the approach of the revenue officers. In legitimate trade it shipped annually thousands of bushels of wheat. This was stored temporarily in a line of warehouses along the river's bank, and sometimes, after harvest, a procession of wagons half a mile long was to be seen reaching from the wharves to the point where the Radial Electric line now crosses the road. During the Crimean War prices soared to heights previously undreamed of, but the great prosperity of the farmers was short-lived, for the return of peace brought down the abnormal prices and, soon afterwards, the "midge" made sad havoc of the wheat crops.—Emily P. Weaver in Toronto Globe.

Antiquity of Spectacles.

The ordinary magnifying spectacles with convex lenses came into use some time near the end of the thirteenth century. Their invention is generally attributed to two Italians, Armati and Spina. As a matter of fact at this time old people in Germany were wearing glasses. According to G. H. Oliver, writing in the British Medical Journal, the first use of concave lenses was of much later date, probably not until the middle of the sixteenth century. It appears that at first the doctors were down on glasses because they interfered with the sale of lotions for weak eyes. Their first mention by a doctor is credited to Bernard Gordon, professor in Montpellier, who informed the world that they were unnecessary, thanks to his wonderful lotions. In these early days their use was limited for many reasons. They were clumsy and ill shaped, making the wearer conspicuous and subjecting him to ridicule oftentimes of far from gentle type. And above all they were very expensive. For example, Dr. Oliver says, "At the end of the sixteenth century the price per pair, expressed in terms of present day value, was from $50 to $100."

Ginseng In China.

Much of the American ginseng sent to China brings small prices because it shows cultivation, being smooth, round and light in color. What is wanted is the wild looking root. The central theory of the use of ginseng decoction is that it combines in itself the virtues of nature—wind, water, woods, the elements and wild nature generally; hence the gnarled, twisted wild root is the ideal, and any domesticated or cultivated variety is merely a substitute. This substitute ought to be as near like the wild as possible. If the root grows in the shape of or seems to bear some resemblance, even by severe stretch of the imagination, to some animal it has increased virtue in the trade. For this and similar reasons it is necessary that the small head of the root joined to the rest of the root by a small neck shall remain a part of the product. Breaking off such little heads reduces the value of the root in the Chinese market by fully half, as a rule.—Chicago News.

Juvenile Financial Genius.

"Johnnie," said a prominent mine operator to his youngest the other day, "I'll give you a dollar if you'll dig up the front yard for your sister's new garden." "All right," said Johnnie thoughtfully. "But I shall have to ask for 25 per cent of the contract price in advance. Not as an evidence of good faith, but for working capital." "But —what do you mean?" "Well, you see, I guess I'll bury the quarter somewhere and tell all the boys in the neighborhood that a pirate hid some treasure round there. When they strike that quarter they'll make the dirt fly. I can tell you. In that way I can clean up about 75 per cent. In fact, I"— "Well, what?" "In fact, I don't know but what I can also arrange so as to find that quarter myself. I'll work it just like that salted mine you were telling mamma about unloading on the street last night." And the father wept tears of joy.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Jewels of London's Lord Mayor.

The gold chain and jeweled insignia of the lord mayor of London are among the most wonderful ornaments in the world, being composed of pure gold and adorned with an enormous number of diamonds. Their value has been estimated at not less than £120,000. Every lord mayor, before he is elected, is called upon to enter into a bond for their safe custody during his term of office, and before he resigns the insignia at the close of his mayoralty they are most carefully examined by special jewelers in order to see that during the year's wear its diamonds have not been loosened in their holdings and that his successor may wear them without anxiety. No wonder that when the lord mayor is wearing all the insignia of his proud position he is a special object of attention by a special police guard.—London Saturday Journal.

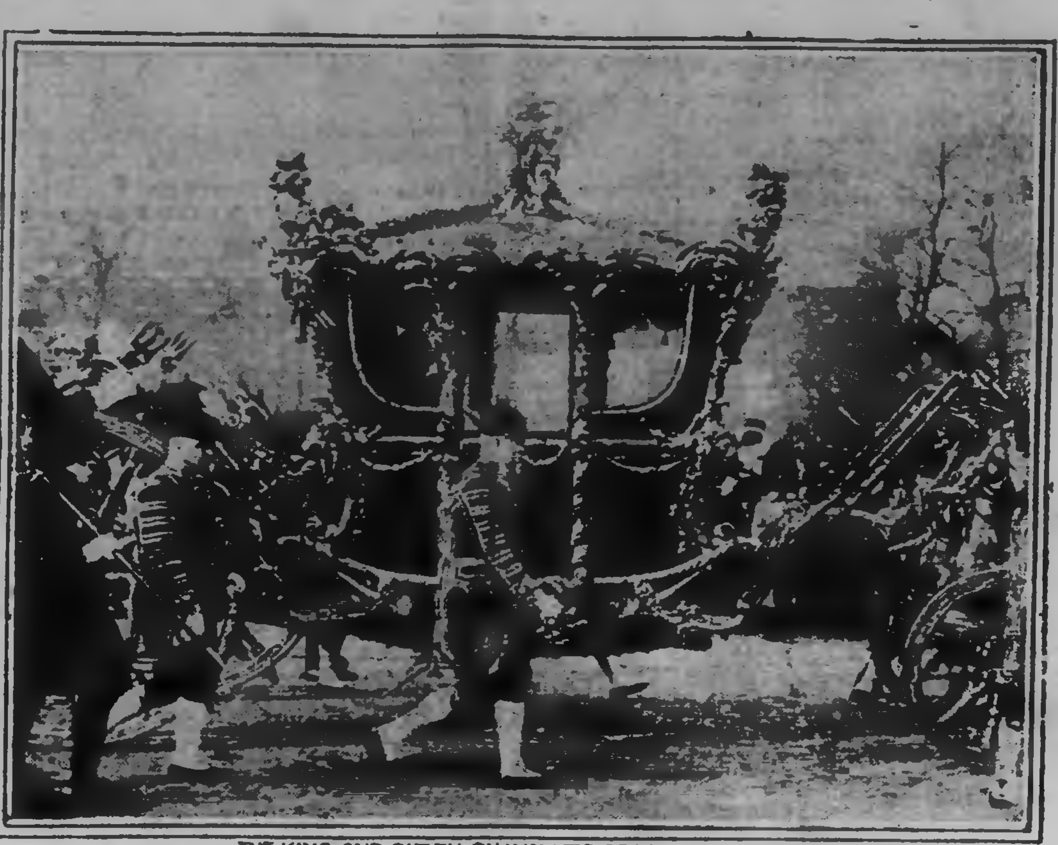
Thunder.

When clouds are driven past one another by wind currents electricity of a frictional kind is produced. Lightning is caused by the passing of the electricity between the two clouds or from a cloud to the earth. As it travels it expands and drives the air in front of it. When the lightning has passed the air that was driven away returns with a rush, and it is this rush which causes the noise of thunder. — Pearson's Weekly.

He Won.

Mrs. Bacon—What's the matter with Tommie's face and hands? They are badly swollen. Mrs. Egbert—You see, they offered a prize at his school for the boy who would bring in the greatest number of dead wasps, and Tommie won."—Yonkers Statesman.

ENGLAND'S RULER AND HIS QUEEN IN THEIR STATE COACH.



THE KING AND QUEEN ON WAY TO OPEN PARLIAMENT

The above is the first photograph to arrive in the United States showing the State coach, with the King and Queen of England within, en route to the Houses of Parliament for the opening of the present momentous session, which, according to all reasonable probability, will bring to a conclusion the thirty years' struggle of the liberal party to give self-government to Ireland.

The Home Rule bill, which is now in the House of Commons for the third time, will, if carried, receive the royal assent, with or without the consent of the House of Lords.

VAN HORNE'S TREASURES

He Catalogues Every Item and Depicts It Himself.

Pictures comprise after all only a part of Sir William Van Horne's art treasures, about which so much has been written since there was talk of him presenting them to a museum. He has a wonderful collection of the beautiful things which come under the general descriptions of "objets d'art." Many of the world's greatest past and present master craftsmen are represented in this collection. And every object in the collection—there are hundreds of them — has been catalogued by Sir William himself.

His method of cataloguing is unique. As each object is acquired he makes a thumb-nail watercolor sketch of it in a "day journal," accompanying the sketch with a description of the object, where it was purchased, who made it, its history (if any), and every particular regarding it. Every thumb-nail watercolor sketch is in itself a masterpiece. Every line, mark, and variation of coloring is faithfully depicted, and marvellous detail is revealed when the sketch is examined under a magnifying glass.

Later all this is copied into a general catalogue, but instead of a thumb-nail sketch, a life-size sketch is made. This also is in water color. Nobody who has seen these drawings can doubt the artistic genius of Sir William. They are brilliantly done. In every particular each drawing is a faithful copy of the original. Not only does it represent the form and the coloring, but in the case, say, of porcelain, the detail is so perfect that both the surface crackle and the "under crackle," which is the crackle beneath the glaze, are also faithfully depicted, with the slightest variation in tone. These details are things that no body but a connoisseur would notice.

And just think of it — there are forty-two large volumes of this illustrated catalogue in Sir William's strong-room, every drawing in them the work of his own hand, every bit of written description his own writing. For the work of one man this catalogue is nothing short of monumental. It indicates, too, the great size of his collection.

In itself this many volume catalogue looks like the work of a whole life-time. Yet every bit of this work has been done while most other people have been in bed. Sir William has never felt that he could afford any of the serious hours of the day for this work of cataloguing. Practically all of it has been done after ten o'clock at night. It has been, and still is, one of his recreations after the hard work of the day is over. He is a marvellously quick worker, with absolute surety of touch in line and color, and turns out these wonderful drawings with the ease and facility of a newspaper artist sketching against time.

There is one other department in Sir William's collection that is unique. Many years ago he started out to acquire original models of ancient war vessels, and he now has the most complete collection in the world of these models. The models belong to the hey-day of the sailing age, and they are the originals of many of the most famous battleships in the great Dutch, Spanish and English navies in the days when "hearts of oak" were our ships. At the time when Sir William started collecting these ships nobody attached any great value to them. Thus he was for years practically alone as a connoisseur of old-time war vessels, and Europe yielded him her best in this department. To-day these models are almost priceless, and they are eagerly sought after.

That Sir William's collection as a whole represents a big fortune in itself goes without saying. Nobody except himself knows what it has cost him— and he won't say. But he did on one occasion hazard a guess as to what it is worth.

"Perhaps it is worth about $2,000,000," he said recently when asked.

HUMAN BROTHERHOOD.

When Disaster Came All Were Kin and Equality Reigned.

Friends who went through the horrors of the San Francisco earthquake in 1906 and kept their spiritual senses alert tell me that its most poignant experience was not one of horror or of pity, but of the almost miraculous attainment of human brotherhood.

"Just after the disaster, when rich and poor waited in line together for their allowance of bread and milk, I saw," says a friend, "a rich woman from the St. Francis hotel lying asleep on a doorstep with her head on a muff. A long sable coat was thrown over her, and under one corner of it a young Japanese boy, a perfect stranger to her, was curled up asleep. * * *

"Everybody was everybody's friend, and, though we were all dog tired, there was not a word of complaint or ill nature. To bivouac together in the park and care for each other's babies around fires of driftwood gathered on the beach transformed men and women into defenseless children of the earth, revealed each to each by their innate lovableness.

"Common danger and mutual helpfulness, common misfortune, common work, common confrontation with the elemental, brought a swift achievement of almost ideal brotherhood. A crushing blow made all the world for a time kin."—Atlantic Monthly.

TAKING A PHOTOGRAPH.

So Easy Nowadays That It Positively Peeved the Old Timer.

"I'm in an organization where the members are expected to furnish the secretary with photographs of themselves."

"Yes?"

"Well, I hadn't been to a photographer's for twenty years. I hated to go. I remembered the old head clamp, and the twisted spine, and the awkward hands, and the depressed chin, and the silly smile. It seemed to me worse than the dentist's. But I had to go. I walked into the photographer's big room like a Christian martyr, and the operator pointed out a chair, and I sat down, and he said, 'That's all.' I asked him to repeat it. He did. Then I got out of the chair and went back to my office."

"Well?"

"Well, I don't feel right about it. It didn't seem to me worth while. I don't think the photographer treated me right. It looked to me as if he had a disagreeable job on his hands and wanted to shirk it. He should have fussed over me more. What do I know about posing? Besides, there wasn't time. 'That's all,' he said, and flipped me out of the chair. They didn't snub me that way twenty years ago, no, sir!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A man may know he is a success among women if three out of every four who meet him ask him if he isn't lonesome.

THE PRETTY CHERRY BIRD

He Is a Cheery Little Fellow But a Foe of the Cherry Grower.

One of the most striking birds of the Canadian winter is the Cherry Bird, or Waxwing, a beautiful friendly restless little creature, and withal a foe of the fruit-grower.

When at times they settle on a branch—sitting half a dozen side by side, as is often their habit, one can distinguish the saucy, back-flung crest to the top of their heads, also the singular appendage to their wings that so distinguish the species; little red, wax-like tips at the extremity of their secondary wing weathers. Varying in number and not found on all individuals, these give to the Waxwing family its name. Reddish-olive above, merging into a warm yellow underneath, the cherry bird is a strikingly beautiful creature, its quills and tail being of a dusky-leaden hue tipped off with yellow, both tinting and shading are delightfully delicate, and the plumage nothing short of infinitely soft.

They pass their whole lives gathered together in flocks and are as interesting as any bird I know, writes C. M. C. in Toronto Star Weekly. Their love for each other is quite a lesson in fellowship. Crowded together as close as they can get on a branch of their mountain ash, they are not quiet a moment, bobbing about as if on wires, caressing one another, and ever feeding one another out of pure friendliness. Never noisy, although so fussy, their only note is a soft plaintive twee-twee, and that seldom heard; one wonders why the name "Chatterer" has been given to them in the old country. The warm sun of the previous couple of days had revived an odd winged insect or so which flitted by, and the lightning quickness with which one of the cherry birds darted and seized them gave proof of the benefit he confers in summer, destroying the fruit-tree pests.

So much for the good side of the Waxwing.

If you owned cherry trees, however, and spied a bird that settled down on them, scattering the petals in great showers to get at the heart of the blossom, thus destroying the young fruit, what would you be disposed to do? If you saw him, later, satiating himself upon your cherished currants, what would you say? Or upon your treasured raspberries? If subsequently you discovered this same feathered thief gluttonizing on your choicest cherries—ripe for the picking—would you sit idly by? You might if only the culprits came in isolated ones or twos—for although the bird in question often so gorges itself that death results, the quantity of fruit each one would eat would be negligible — but the trouble is that, as usual, this cherry bird swoops down upon the orchard in flocks, and having tested, like a chemist, by qualitative analysis, remains to complete his experiment on a quantitative basis. It takes a very placid and humanitarian mind to decide, as some do, that the good actions of the cherry bird in any way equalize the reduction in fruit crops effected by its depredations during blossom time.

The pretty creatures frequently stay with us all winter. Their near relative, the Bohemian Waxwing —strikingly similar, but larger (seven and a half inches)—breeds in the far north and only is seen here during the severest seasons. These flights, even in Europe, are so irregular that formerly its visits were looked upon by superstitious people as the forerunner of some public calamity.

A Valuable Industry.

The lobster industry of Nova Scotia is the most valuable in the world. The total market value of all the lobsters taken from its waters for the year ending March 31, 1912, reached the three million mark, as compared with a corresponding value of five million for the whole Dominion.

New Brunswick's lobster fisheries were valued at $743,869, Prince Edward's Island at $331,519, and Quebec's at $363,832 during the same year.

The lobster is also the most valuable of the provincial fisheries, totalling one-third the entire fisheries value thereof, while in the Dominion its position is surpassed only by that of salmon. It is the main substance of some 20,000 fishermen, and as many as 14,000 persons, male and female, find employment in the canneries.

The amount of capital invested in this industry is very large. Besides the value of boots and outfits which are used for general fishing purposes, as well as the lobstery, there was in 1911-12 some 756,067 traps, valued at $644,110, and 227 canneries valued at $236,945, in addition to the capital invested in cold storage plants, fish houses, and other smaller allied industries closely connected with the carrying on of the lobster industry.

Blames Bad Feeding.

A startling proposal was made to the British Columbia Legislature, when Dr. Dechman, a German scientist, asked that a herd of 20 cattle be set aside for him so that he could demonstrate his theory that bovine tuberculosis is the result of condition and not a germ as commonly supposed.

According to Dr. Dechman, tuberculosis is spontaneously germinated by wrong feeding and he wants ten infected cattle set aside and ten healthy cattle, so he can cure the former and make the latter sick in proof of his theory. He proposes to effect this condition purely by methods of feeding.

Decrease In Homestead Entries.

Canadian homestead entries for 1913 amounted to 29,640, a marked decrease from 1912, when they were 35,222. In 1911 they amounted to 38,585. Even more remarkable is the falling off in the number of preemption entries. There were 10,583 such entries in 1911, 8,947 in 1912, and 6,483 in 1913.

Made the Most of His Hats.

When Lord Milner held his first reception at Pretoria the officers and legislators were given to understand that frock coats and tall hats were expected of them. There was only one shop in the place in which silk hats were sold, and this had but four of them. The Transvaal legislators rushed off in a body to buy these four, but the hatter, not being mad, saw his opportunity in their extremity. He knew there was no time to get hats from any where else, so he resolved not to sell. He offered to let them out on hire at the rate of 10 shillings for ten minutes. His shop was close at hand. Four gentlemen could present themselves before his excellency. After ten minutes they must silently steal away and hand over their hired finery to another panting quartet. It was done, and the hatter still repeats dreamily as he recalls the moment of his life, "It would not have been fair to have sold them, not fair to my customers and not fair to myself."—London Globe.

"The Corsican Bandit."

Only those who have traveled a good deal in Italy can realize the depth of the resentment that is still felt there at the losses the country suffered through the "Corsican Bandit," as Napoleon has been dubbed. The Italians have a saying about the French, "Are the French thieves?" "No, but bona parte (a good part of them) are." And when a visitor goes to one city after another, sees one building after another that was robbed of its chief treasures by Napoleon, he begins to understand this savage sentiment. It is even stronger in Malta, which island was virtually swept clean of its splendors of medieval and renaissance art by the conqueror. The Maltese loot is all somewhere at the bottom of Alexandria bay, the ship on which Napoleon loaded it having foundered there.

Wat Tyler's Rebellion.

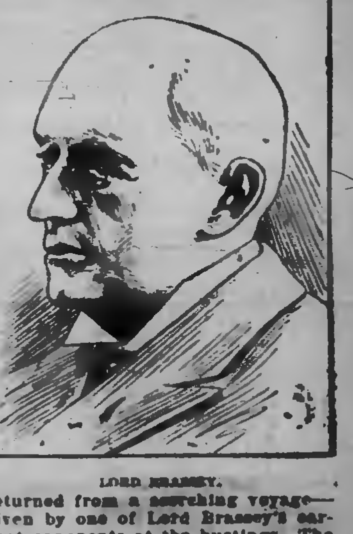
Attempts to fix by statute the wages of agricultural laborers in England were largely responsible for the great revolt of 1381, or "Wat Tyler's rebellion." It represented the despairing effort of landowners to get back to the level of wages before the black death came to make labor dear. But the lord of the manor overshot the mark. He wanted the day wage kept down to 4 cents to 6 cents a day. Had he put 6 cents to 8 cents in the schedule there might have been no rebellion.

Let the window curtains reach from top to bottom only of the window, and a lot of work is saved.

Lord Brassey is not unknown to Canadians, and the news that he has resigned the Wardenship of the Cinque Ports has been received in this country with interest. It is only a couple of years since he and his famous yacht, The Sunbeam, were seen at all the principal harbors on the Great Lakes. Lord Brassey is seventy-seven years old and was born with the first railway.

Of his parentage he makes a record: "For myself, I am proud to know that I am the son of a contractor for public works, whose good reputation was the best part of the heritage which descended to his sons." When the first of English railways was in contemplation, Stephenson said: "Well, young man, there is something promising about you. I see a great field for railways. It would be well for you to follow my banner." The young man did, tendered for a portion of the Liverpool railway, and got it; during the construction of the first ten miles of that railway Lord Brassey was born.

The sequel is well known. "Here comes a man with brass on his face, brass on his tongue, brass in his pocket, and his name is Brassey," was the description—the first clause of which demands that one should have seen the tanned sailor recently returned from a scorching voyage—given by one of Lord Brassey's earliest opponents at the hustings. The tan has never been allowed to disappear; the brass has never given out.



LORD BRASSEY.

Lord Brassey has his museum in his house in Park Lane, London. Like all sailors, he comes home with, so to speak, a parrot and a handkerchief full of treasures. In Australia he found opals for Lady Brassey's hair, and a whole stock of properties for his glass cases. To the ordinary man some of Lord Brassey's exhibits may savour a little too much of the Imperial Institute. There is the mark of the British possessions on most of his treasures; and his interest in things is essentially a Britisher's interest. Lord Brassey's style, as a writer, reminds one of his museum. It is constructed on a conscientious basis. That is to say, he is at no pains to be picturesque or lively. He breaks away from a description of a brig in bad weather to say the right thing about owners and insurance; and the right thing is like oil on the waters; it spoils the storm. At every foreign port his habit, when he arrives, is to make a dry survey of the commerce, population, character of the natives, elevation of surrounding hills, main buildings, and beauty of the view. Inasmuch as he is able to grasp the state and chances of shipping here, there, and everywhere, his observations are of considerable value, but for the rest he might have got his facts from the nearest gazetteer.

But Lord Brassey possesses something better than a picturesque pen. He has a master's certificate; he has the steady enthusiasm for the sea that carries him over three thousand six hundred nautical miles on one trip. On a hundred occasions at the hospitable tables of colonial governors and corporations Lord Brassey has been called upon to make speeches. He has never shirked them, nor the serious questions of Empire and Labor that he has been asked to solve in more quarters of the globe than any man alive. His speeches remain as the models of their kind.

His miniature experiences on board The Sunbeam have given him the clue to many of the difficulties of the labor question. As a good sailor he has the respect of his men; he has their respect, too, for owning a thoroughly serviceable and sporting yacht. She is sporting because she goes vast journeys; because she is a little boat that faces big waves. She can round the world with a complement of no more than eighteen seamen and three stokers. Lord Brassey has never been a timid master. He believes with Browning that—

The honest earnest man must stand and work,
Accepting serfdom.

And he believes that most men, at the call, are honest and earnest. Thus he has taken on, in obscure foreign ports, men left behind by other vessels for insubordination, and found them excellent.

SUNKIST ORANGES

ATE WITH THE CROWD.

Sir James Is "Jimmie" Among the Men of Dundas County.

Sir James in Toronto — "Jimmie" in Dundas County! And it is probable that Sir James Whitney in the bottom of his heart has always preferred the homely accosting of his old friends in his native county to many of the more formal salutations in connection with his official life as Prime Minister of Ontario.

One of the last occasions when Sir James visited the haunts of his earlier days was in December of 1911, when he went to Winchester Springs to be nominated for the seat he so long represented. In his trips to the constituency, which, through the merciless press of business and responsibility were none too frequent, he usually went to Morrisburg, his home town, and would proceed from there to whatever point he was to visit. This time, however, he went down on C.P.R., got off at Winchester and drove the ten or twelve miles to Winchester Springs. By this method he cut off three or four miles from the distance he had to drive in an open cutter, and this was a considerable item when it is considered that the temperature stood at ten degrees below zero!

At that time, although even then Sir James was an old man as years go, the Prime Minister was in splendid health. He had just completed an election tour of the province, and had gathered up energy as he went. Never did he look more virile, never did he more vigorously command the whole-hearted admiration of those who saw him than when, after his twelve-mile drive in the piercing cold, he jumped buoyantly from the sleigh, beat his arms across his chest for warmth, clicked his jaws together, and began greeting his friends who had crowded around him. His friends—sturdy and active farmers they were, but Sir James was just as active, just as sturdy as they were. His grip on their hands was just as much like iron, just as wholesome, and just as genuine as theirs on his. The name "Sir James" was heard once or twice, but "Jim" and "Jimmie" carried the day, and, in return, Whitney gave no "Misters," but a succession of "Bobs" and "Bills" and "Georges."

Sometimes when political leaders are visting a town, they are either whisked away in a limousine to the house of the wealthiest man in the place, and guarded from the gaze of the vulgar crowd, or if they do go to an hotel a separate table is set apart for them and their friends, and whereas the ordinary menu consists largely of pork stew, beef stew, baked apple and bread pudding, a dinner of chicken or duck, with plum pudding, is laid before the big men.

Sir James, however, ate with the "rest of the crowd," and ate also the same fare. The table talk on this particular day, naturally enough, was largely reminiscent, and proved graphically that Sir James, with all his worries and his troubles, with all his bilingual and temperance and educational and agricultural difficulties to contend with, had remembered h's country friends of Dundas County, and, without the trace of affectation, knew exactly what to talk to them about, and for what members of the various families to inquire most solicitously.

An Educated "Cop."

Deputy Chief of Police N. L. Grandchamps of Montreal, who has just been given that title by Montreal's Board of Control, is a man who has worked his way up from the bottom. He is a big fellow standing over six feet in his stockings. For years he has been a terror to evildoers, figuring in many sensational raids.

Deputy Chief Grandchamps also has the reputation of having an education second to none on the Montreal police force; he can quote Latin and Greek, can discuss ancient and modern history quite learnedly, speaks English without the slightest accent, in fact, he is often mistaken for an English officer; he even writes shorthand. Although still a young man, he is fairly old as far as police service goes. When a comparative youth, he "pounded the beat" in St. Henri, later joining the Montreal police force. For several years he acted as private secretary to Chief Campeau, in which capacity he became thoroughly familiar with the executive duties now entrusted to him. Following the resignation of Inspector Lamouche in 1909, he was raised from the rank of captain to that of inspector of the eastern section of the force.

Warning To Tourists.

Canadians intending to visit London are warned by Scotland Yard through the Dominion Government police against confidence men who have lately been getting a very profitable living out of visitors.

These tricksters, it is pointed out, know that if arrested they will escape prosecution, because the victim has usually booked his return passage home and therefore cannot stay in London to prosecute, and without a prosecutor the London police must liberate the prisoner.

The principal hunting grounds, according to the police circular, are the British Museum, Trafalgar Square, in the vicinity of the steamship offices on Cockspur street, and Westminster Abbey.

Hatless Professors.

The rigid convention of professorial circles at Toronto University, has had a little shock through the action of Dr. Satterly, who, the students state, has lost his hat so often that he has now refused to wear one at all. He has been discovered on very snappy cold mornings proceeding to the University carrying a cane but without either hat, coat or gloves. Dr. Satterly is a professor in physics and comes from Cambridge. Prof. Teows of the German department has been seen occasionally without his hat.

Taking No Chances.

A well-known Toronto lawyer was arguing a case on appeal which he had lost in the court below, and appealed to the High Court.

"Hadn't you better assume that the court knows such an elementary principle of law as that?" said one of the judges.

"I assumed that in the court below," retorted the lawyer, "and that is why I lost."

HE MADE GOOD IN WEST

HON. W. GARIEPY HAS BEEN IN ALBERTA FOR 20 YEARS.

The New Minister of Municipal Affairs in the Sifton Administration Served His Apprenticeship as an Alderman in Edmonton for Four Years and Headed Union of Municipalities In 1911.

Hon. Wilfrid Gariepy, B.A., B.C.L., K.C., M.P.P., the new Minister of Municipal Affairs in the Alberta Government, is one of the many eastern Canada boys who has made good in the western provinces.

He was born in Montreal in 1877 and is a son of Joseph H. and Etudienne Boissonneault Gariepy. He was educated at St. Laurent College, Laval University and McGill University and went to Alberta in 1893. He is a member of the well-known legal firm of Gariepy, Giroux & Dunlop, of Edmonton, and was appointed King's counsel by the Government of Alberta in 1913. He was an unsuccessful candidate for the Alberta Legislature in 1909, but elected for Beaver River in 1913. He was an alderman in Edmonton in 1907-10.

HON. WILFRED GARIEPY.

Mr. Gariepy is a director of the Edmonton Children's Aid Society, and has been a school trustee since 1904, and also a director of the Edmonton Exhibition Association for a number of years. He was president of the Alberta Union of Municipalities in 1911, and is at present the president of the Edmonton Liberal Club and a member of the executive of the Edmonton Canadian Club.

He is a prominent member of the St. Jean Baptiste Society, of which he was president in 1907, and is also a member of the Knights of Columbus, of which he was grand knight in 1911. He is also president of the French Canadian Congress of Alberta.

A Frank Autobiographer.

Miss Annie Elizabeth Fredericka Horniman, M.A., founder of the first repertory theatre in England and Ireland, and director of the famous company of players which filled two engagements in Montreal, is a woman of striking individuality and singularity of character. One evidence of this was furnished on her visit to Montreal in 1912, when, in addressing the Nomads' Club, she uttered some unflattering comments upon Montreal's failure to completely appreciate the artistic performances of modern plays which were being presented by her organization. A still more convincing and unique proof of her unconventionality is found in the English "Who's Who," for the brief paragraph in which her career is summed up is unquestionably written by herself, and contains some inimitable personal touches, as witness the following excerpts:

"Observed her sisters in early youth, and by their disapproval became interested in theatres and the suffrage; learned and traveled as she could; studied astrology; had a fruitful failure at the Avenue Theatre in 1894, her first attempt with dramatic affairs; later on made the Abbey Theatre, Dublin, for the Irish National Theatre Society; bought the Gayety Theatre, Manchester, and started the first repertory theatre in England, 1908. Recreation: Mending her clothes when she has the leisure."

Animals That Weep.

Laughing is believed to be peculiar to man, but the same is not true of weeping, which is a manifestation of emotion that is met in several animals. Among the creatures that weep most easily are the ruminants. All hunters know that the stag weeps, and we are also assured that the bear sheds tears when it sees its last hour is approaching. The giraffe is not less sensitive, and regards with tearful eyes the hunter who has wounded it. Dogs weep quite easily. The same is true of certain monkeys. As for the elephant, there is abundant evidence of the ease with which it weeps. It sheds tears when wounded, or when it sees that it cannot escape; its tears roll from its eyes like those of a human being in affliction.

Screw-making Industry.

Will Gillingham's new industry of screw-making bring the town back to its old wide repute? For before the rise of Chatham, Gillingham was an important place with four quays and a "harborowe" in which the Royal Navy was stationed. Gillingham goes itself into history quite early by being the scene of a great battle between Edmund Ironside and the Danes, and until the reign of Elizabeth is boasted its archbishop's palace. And the town has had its share of famous inhabitants, including William Adams, the first Englishman to "discover Japan effectually."—London Daily Chronicle.

IDENTIFYING STSPECTS.

British System Gives Every Chance to the Accused Person.

A strange fascination exists for the public in the personality of criminals, as is shown by the numerous plays and countless cinematograph plots around the exploits of some famous "dramatic" detective or "crook." The powers possessed by some of the detectives of literature and the drama are very amusing when compared with the work of the real detective who specializes in crime. The private inquiry agent has no more standing in the matter of crime than an ordinary citizen.

The system for the recognition of a suspect by persons who allege they are able to identify him is a model of fairness in Great Britain, although in many other countries the prisoner's chance is tampered with by corrupt police.

In the first place, the detective officer in charge of the particular case, though present, takes no part in the proceedings connected with the identification, which is carried out entirely by the uniform inspector or other officer in charge of the police-station at the time. The various witnesses are never permitted to see the prisoner before he is placed with others for the purpose of identification, nor are they shown photographs or assisted by verbal or written description of him. Before the witnesses are brought into the suspect's presence the latter is placed among a number of persons—eight or more—care being taken that they are, as far as possible, of similar age, height, general appearance, and class of life as the prisoner.

The accused is asked to stand where he pleases, not being allotted any special position. He is also asked if he has objection to any of the persons or arrangements made. The usual response is a laconic "All right, guv'nor," but should he desire his solicitor or friend in attendance no objection is made.

Now the witnesses are introduced one by one and each is asked to touch the person they identify. On leaving they are not allowed to communicate with other witnesses who are waiting, whilst the accused is permitted to change his position, if he desires, after each witness has left.

Every circumstance connected with the identification is written down by the officer who carries it out, whether the accused be identified or not, and care is taken that when a witness fails to identify the suspect, the fact is recorded as carefully as when he is identified. Any statement made by the accused is recorded and read over to the detective in charge of the case in the suspect's presence, the latter being invited to sign the statement.

Decrease in Fur Trade.

The fur trade in the far north is still on very much the same basis as when Cartier and Champlain first traded beads and knickknacks with the wondering chiefs at Quebec. A million and a half dollars' worth of merchandise goes north from Edmonton every spring to be exchanged for the two and a half millions of fur that come back in midsummer and autumn. So far as the fur trade in Canada is concerned, the traders claim that there is no perceptible falling off as yet; that, in fact, more fur is being brought to market each year. But in Russia, Germany, Japan and Australia there is a general decrease in the supply. In the past twenty years the world's catch of the twelve most important furs has fallen off from five per cent. to seven hundred per cent., while the demand for the more expensive varieties has multiplied enormously. The ceaseless effort to satisfy this demand can have but one end, and it is only logical to expect that even the great game preserves of the Canadian North and Alaska will in time be hunted bare.

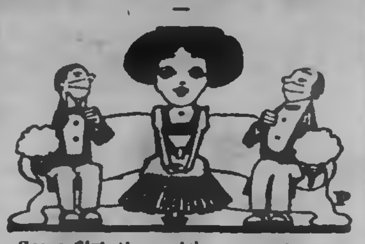
PERT PARAGRAPHS.

THE man with neither home nor friends is fixed to have a whaling good time except for one thing—he has no money.

As soon as weddings go out of fashion we won't hear so much about divorce being on the increase.

Sometimes it is hard to be well and keep on good terms with your doctor too.



Some flirtatious girls appear to carry a sort of mental rubber stamp that they endeavor to impress upon the men they meet.

It is hard for us to learn to work, and often the more we learn the harder it becomes.

He laughs the best who gets the highest salary for doing the monkey act.

Even a deadbeat may be a live one at his particular branch of endeavor.

A man may be full of hot air and have advice to burn without being a warm proposition.

Many a man who thinks he is it finds on collecting all of the evidence that he is nit.

When you like to do a thing it is preposterous for people to think there is harm in it.

Explained.

He couldn't read a single line,
He couldn't spell a word,
And yet he was the smartest chap
Of whom the world had heard.
How could he be so wonderful?
You'll know when you've been told.
We got it from his mother straight—
He was just three days old.

"I have designs on your son," said the frank and rather attractive young woman.

"Well," gasped the startled parent, "isn't this rather sudden? How about it? Are you a new woman coming to ask my consent?"

"Not exactly. I am a tattoo artist, and he hasn't paid me for the elaborate designs I worked on his arm."

This Queer World.

"I wonder why that couple look so happy?"

"They were just married."

"Oh, I see! And this other pair coming so blithely along here—they were just married, too, I presume?"

"Oh, no; not at all!"

"Weren't they?"

"No; they were just unmarried."

M. Corteline, the well-known French dramatist, took a corner seat in a train at the St. Lazare station in Paris one day and proceeded to make himself comfortable. A few minutes later another traveler entered the compartment.

"Pardon me," said the newcomer, "but I had taken that place."

"Indeed!" remarked Corteline without moving.

"Yes," the other persisted. "I had put a newspaper there."

Corteline fished out the newspaper from underneath him. "But this is yesterday's paper," he pointed out. "And you can't take a seat in the train the day after!"

The retort so floored the other man that he retired hastily to find another seat.

THE ARIZONA MAYOR-EDITOR'S CHRONICLES OF A RED LETTER WEEK

IS ON HIS OFFICIAL DIGNITY.

Never Again Will Armed Argument Bluff Him—Weather Bureau Isn't Infallible, and the Gulch Is No Place For Overambitious Showmen.

By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1913, by Associated Literary Press.]

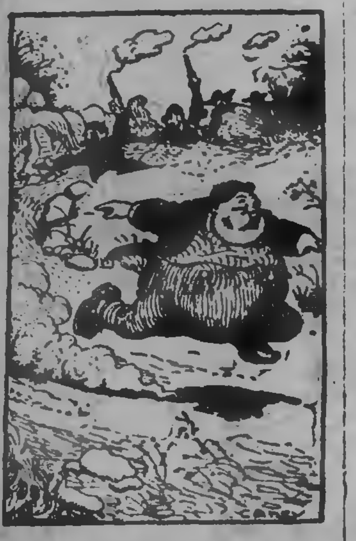
FOR the seventh time we have been elected mayor of this town by the largest majority ever given a candidate for any office. We are the only man ever elected to a third term as mayor. We think we can say without egotism and without denial that we are the only human critter in this territory who has been picked up by an enthusiastic multitude after the ballots were counted and carried half a mile on the shoulders of eminent statesmen.

The reports telegraphed around the country the other day to the effect that the mayor of this town (who is ourself) had been thrown out of a window at a meeting of the aldermen contain only a small grain of truth. As presiding officer we refused to entertain a motion which was clearly out of order. Simultaneously with our refusal we reached for our gun, but at once discovered that it had been left at the office. Six aldermen at once drew down upon us and demanded that we entertain the motion, and, not being anxious to be made a fish net of, we promptly and cheerfully complied. No one was thrown out of a window. No one was shot. No one struck a blow. Six aldermen simply bluffed the mayor to a standstill for the first and only time in his life, and the business of the corporation proceeded after the usual program.

At the next meeting we shall have at least two guns, but we do not anticipate any trouble. There have been several occasions when we held the six aldermen up and satisfied them of the soundness of our position, and we have faith that we can do it again. We admit that we lost prestige in the affair, but with six guns looking at us we had to lose something or other and concluded to let the prestige go.

Our Weather Bureau.

We have again established a weather bureau in connection with the Kicker office, and every day at noon we shall put out a bulletin giving the probabilities for the coming twenty-four hours. A year ago Colonel McPartland entered our office and proceeded to kick the upholstery out of everything he could reach because we predicted a cyclone which didn't come. Six months later Major Taylor did the same thing and shot the hands off our eight day clock to boot because it rained when we predicted dry weather.



DUSTING DOWN THE RIVER ROAD.

We now wish it distinctly understood that our only facilities for weather predicting are a set of compasses, a carpenter's rule, a lead pencil and a rheumatic leg. We shall make mistakes, but they will be errors of the rule and pencil instead of the heart. Our aim will be to come as closely as possible, and with that the public must be satisfied.

Arousing Public Wrath.

Last Tuesday a party arrived in town and set up a sideshow in which "the Kentucky fat boy" was the principal attraction, although a three legged kangaroo was supposed to hold him a close second. It was soon discovered that the kangaroo was a stuffed Japanese dog and that the fat boy, who was advertised to weigh 380 pounds, was padded out with hay or some other substance. Some of the audience wanted to feel of him to make sure that all was aboveboard, but this the showman would not permit.

Soon after his refusal the ball opened. The air was thick with flying fur of the kangaroo, the fat boy was dusting down the river road, and the showman was disappearing into the woods to the east. Somebody set fire to the tent, which was totally consumed, and then the joyful crowd enthusiastically dispersed.

We are a backwoods town and a primitive people, but three legged dogs and stuffed boys can't pull the wool over Uncle Joshua's eyes at 15 cents admission. A spotted cow might be worked off on us for a rhinoceros from South Africa, but even then the showman ought to have the Lord's Prayer ready at hand.

Valuable Advice.

"A cat sits on my back fence every night, and he yowls and yowls and yowls," complained a young lawyer's client. "Now, I don't want to have any trouble with Neighbor Smith, but this thing has gone far enough, and I want you to tell me what to do."

The lawyer looked as solemn as an owl and said not a word.

"I have a right to shoot the cat, haven't I?"

"I would hardly say that," replied the young lawyer. "The cat does not belong to you, as I understand it."

"No, but the fence does."

"Then," concluded the light of the law, "I think it safe to say you have a perfect right to tear down the fence."—Everybody's.

Ready Answer.

The schoolmistress was examining her pupils before some visitors.

"Who knows what useful article is furnished for us by the elephant?" she asked.

"Ivory," was the prompt reply of nearly all.

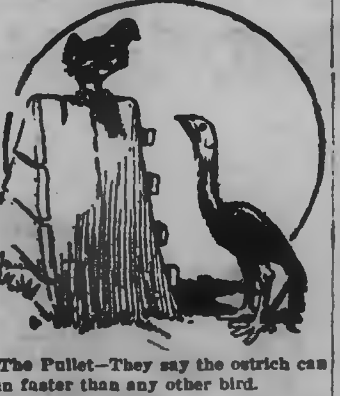
"And what do we get from the whale?"

"Whalebone," several answered.

"Quite right. And what from the seal?"

"Sealing wax," replied Peter.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Champions.



The Pullet—They say the ostrich can run faster than any other bird.

The Turkey—Mebbe so. But anyhow I hold the trotting record.—Chicago News.

Worse Yet.

"He's a frightful bore, your baron. Here he's been buzzing the whole evening long about Kant and Schopenhauer."

"You have my sympathy. For my part I detest philosophical discussions."

"Philosophical discussions, indeed! Kant and Schopenhauer are the names of the baron's two horses."—New York Post.

Better Off.

Father—Upon my word, you children are getting too dainty for anything. Jam and butter on the same piece of bread, indeed! Why, when I was your age I was glad to get enough dry bread to eat.

Robert—You have a much better time living with us, don't you, father?—National Monthly.

EXPLORED FAR WEST.

David Thompson, One of B. C.'s Big Pioneer Travelers.

One of the great waterways of the Central region of Southern British Columbia is the Thompson river—two waterways it may be called, because the river has two branches, the North Thompson, and the South Thompson, which unite at Kamloops, and flowing on to the southwest as one stream, pour their waters into the Fraser at Lytton. The Thompson river is one of the arteries of British Columbia, and its narrow valley affords a route for hundreds of miles for the first of our transcontinental railways.

The name of that waterway is a monument to one of the most learned and useful explorers of British Columbia, David Thompson, the astronomer and pioneer, and one of the most successful explorers of the many who served the old Northwest Company. Many tributes to the man and his work have been paid by the historians of this continent, but perhaps none is more to the point than that written by the American historian, Bacroft, who writes these words of praise of David Thompson, the British-Canadian explorer: "No man performed more valuable services or esteemed his achievements more modestly."

Another tribute in few words, but from high source, is that paid by Begg, the historian of British Columbia, who writes: "He (David Thompson), was well-educated; and his meteorological and astronomical observations to this day command respect."

Thompson's career is interesting, because of the element of adventure that runs throughout, but still more interesting, because it accomplished so much towards giving to Eastern Canada accurate and comparatively full information respecting the vast region which extends from the foothills, westward, to the shores of the Pacific, and particularly of the rich mineral and agricultural country that to-day is known as Southern British Columbia. He was born in 1770—seven years after Eastern Canada had been ceded by the Treaty of Paris, to the British Crown—and his parentage was Welsh. His education he received at the ancient institution, in London, commonly known as "The Grey Coat School," so called because of the quaint garb worn by its pupils. At the age of 19 years, he entered the service of the Hudson Bay Company, going out to Fort Churchill at the mouth of the Churchill river, which flows into Hudson Bay, from the southwest.

For five years he remained in that service, and then for the following nine years he was engaged in making surveys of the Churchill, the Nelson and the Saskatchewan rivers and their tributaries. Then he joined the Northwest Company, the aggressive and powerful rival of the older company with which Thompson had first been associated. He became the astronomer and the geographer of the Northwest Company, traveling over a large part of the vast territory lying between the Missouri river and Lake Athabasca.

Shortly before this time both Alexander Mackenzie and Simon Fraser had crossed the Rocky Mountains by way of the upper valley by the Peace river, far to the north even of Yellowhead Pass. Thompson found passes far to the south. In the year 1800 he reached the head-waters of the Bow river by means of the pass through which the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway now runs; and he followed for some distance one of the branches of the Columbia river until hostile Indians compelled him to turn back.

Seven years later he again crossed the mountains, ascended the Columbia river to its source, when he built a fort to which he gave the name Kootenay. He subsequently reached Kootenay Lake, and on a later trip he ascended the Athabasca river, which flows out of Athabasca Pass, by means of which he crossed the Rockies.

A Fatal Compliment.

This one is told of a very young married woman: When her very young husband came home for dinner he found her flushed, but very triumphant. When they were seated at the table she could hardly wait to say:

"How do you like your meat, dear? Don't you think I have begun pretty well as a cook?"

And he answered:

"Yes, darling. If there's anything in the old saying that 'well begun is half done' you have certainly begun well on this steak."

It started their first quarrel.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

PRINCE OF REALTY MEN

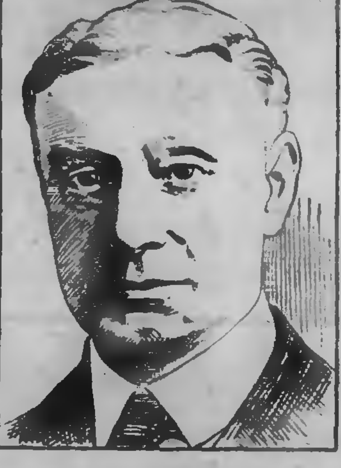
MALLABY-DEELEY TAKES PLACE AT HEAD OF FRATERNITY.

The Man Who Paid the Duke of Bedford Three Million Pounds for Nineteen Acres In the Heart of London Took Only a Few Minutes to Calculate the Chances and Put Through the Deal.

The stupendous land sale about which most of the world has been talking, and which has resulted in in the transference of nineteen of London's richest acres from the Duke of Bedford to Mr. Mallaby-Deeley, M.P. for the Harrow Division of Middlesex, England, has a special interest because no neighborhood in London is richer in historical associations, while the land and property is of such fabulous value that the price paid by Mr. Mallaby-Deeley for the estate must have exceeded by an enormous sum that given for any other single property. The price realized by the sale is just under £3,000,000, which works out at the rate of £155,000 per acre. One of the most interesting facts regarding the gigantic sale was that the negotiations lasted only a few weeks, the bargain being concluded by Mr. Mallaby-Deeley after a thirty-minute interview with the Duke of Bedford.

"A few calculations made by me on the corner of my blotting-pad formed the basis of my second and final offer," says Mr. Mallaby-Deeley, who is a man of amazingly quick decision and judgment, "and I am told that piece of blotting-paper is now a treasured document kept by my agent."

The annual rental of Covent Garden Market alone is £20,000, while upon the property stand four theatres the ground rents of which amount to £24,000 a year. Another huge source of income are the market tolls of Covent Garden, which are said to bring in £25,000 a year. Under the famous Charter of 1671 which Charles II. granted, and which not only made Covent Garden the principal vegetable market for London, but also gave the Bedfords the market monopoly and manorial rights which have been criticized so freely, the Duke of Bedford has the right to levy tolls on the vegetables, flowers and fruit exposed for sale or stored in the market, as well as on the hundreds of carts which bring in the produce.



H. MALLABY-DEELEY, M. P.

The story has often been told of how the Russells came into possession of the Covent Garden estate three and a half centuries ago. How, in 1506, the Archduke Philip of Austria was driven by a violent hurricane to take shelter in Weymouth; and how, at the house of a Weymouth gentleman, where he was hospitably entertained, he took such a fancy to jolly Squire Russell that he carried him off to Windsor. There the squire became so popular with royalty that when various fat abbeys and flourishing acres were bestowed upon kingly favorites he received a very fair share. Indeed, the Russell share led Burke to characterize the Dukes of Bedford as "the leviathans of all the creatures of the crown," adding: "The grants to the house of Russell were so enormous as not only to outrage economy, but to stagger credibility."

That there is no more romantic spot in the metropolis than the Covent Garden estate is proved by the many volumes which have been written around its historical associations. The whole of the property once belonged to the Church, and it is interesting to recall that Covent Garden is a corruption of "Convent Garden," and that it was not only used as a garden by the monks, but also as a place for "burying their dead out of sight." Stone coffins and other relics of the dead have from time to time been turned up during excavations. At one time it was the footpad's home, being infested by the Mohawks and common footpads who would not venture into the City proper, where the watch was more efficient. Ultimately Covent Garden developed into a resort for the fashionable and the gay and a home of the "bloods." The present market was built in 1830.

Blooms But to Die.

The taliput palm (Corypha umbraculifera) of Ceylon, whose leaves are put to such numerous uses by the Cingalese, bears fruit but once during its life. This elegant tree measures about ten feet around the trunk and attains a height of about 180 feet. The flowers, the appearance of which presages death to the tree, are inclosed in a tall spathe, which bursts with a loud report, disclosing a huge plume of beautiful blossom. The inflorescence is succeeded by equally conspicuous bunches of fruit. When these have ripened the tree withers rapidly and in the course of a fortnight may be seen prostrate and decaying on the spot it adorned.

Fifteen years ago a prominent merchant on George Street took out a 10-pay 15 year endowment policy No. 69879, for $2000 on his life at age 45 in the Sun Life of Canada, premium $189.50.

Had this man taken a non-par policy his premium would have been $172.50 or $17.00 per year less.

Now, this man paid $17.00 per year for 10 years only, or $170.00 all told and it yielded him $637.75 in profits. Just figure out what rate of interest that is on the $17.00 per year, paid extra for profits, and see if you would not like to invest a few dollars at the same rate. ONLY ONE MORE DAY OF GREAT OPPORTUNITY OFFER

This is the Last of Opportunity Offer—Prizes Can be Won With a Little of Your Earnest Effort.

Only one more day and the Opportunity Period in The Daily Review's Great $2,500 enterprise will be a thing of the past. Whether you have made the best of your time or not these last two weeks of golden opportunity, to-morrow night will tell. Better put in your hard licks to-day and get every subscriber possible before this offer ends. This is the largest vote offer of the contest. Subscriptions will never again count as many votes as they will if they are turned in by to-morrow night.

Tug of War is Now On.

Right now the contest has reached the stage where heavy returns are being received, and the results of the ballot issue on subscriptions will soon be apparent in the standing of various contestants. The contestants are entering upon a tug of war, which will last until the hour when the final ballot has been cast. A contest in which the element of popularity is paramount is now on, and there will be no recision of interest until all is over.

There are hundreds upon hundreds of homes where subscriptions are waiting the call of some contestant in order to place the votes they have at their disposal, and it might as well be you who gets the votes that will win you a handsome touring car or one of the other valuable prizes that someone is going to have for his own in the next few weeks.

If you can't come conscientiously after viewing these prizes and state that they are worth an effort, we will give up completely and nevermore urge you to see what an opportunity you are missing.

Now is the time to become obsessed with the desire to own an automobile. It will give you position among your friends, and standing in the community. Those who have so modestly been saying, "I am above going into the contest," will take off their hat to you and will envy you in your position and covet your possession. With the poet they will say:

Of all sad words of tongue or pen,
The saddest are these,
It might have been—mine.

THE BILINGUAL ISSUE RAISED

English-Speaking Roman Catholics Want French Teacher Dismissed.

CORNWALL, Feb. 26. — Donald McDonald, acting for himself and other ratepayers of Roman Catholic Separate School Section No. 14, on the boundary between Lancaster and Charlottenburg Townships, Glengarry County, has issued a writ to restrain Mederic Perrier, Emerie Ouimet and John Menard, trustees of that school section, from continuing to employ the present teacher, Miss Leontine Senecal, on the ground that she is not a qualified teacher, and that she has been illegally engaged.

Trouble has been brewing for some time, and the writ by the English-speaking ratepayers is the outcome.

The plaintiff further seeks to restrain the trustee defendants from employing or using the rates of the Separte School Section for the maintenance of the school house in such section until a properly qualified teacher is in charge, and to restrain the defendant, Leontine Senecal, from teaching in said school, and to restrain the defendants from using or allowing the use of French as the language of instruction or communication in the school of such Separate School Section.

HOW MONEY WAS SECURED FROM TRENT CANAL FOR CAMPAIGN PURPOSES

Bankers, Barbers, Book-keepers, Grocers and Furniture Dealers Were Entered on the Pay List as Laborers---Suspended Officials Receive Notice

Mr. J. Harris McClellan, superintendent of the Trent Canal, and other officials, suspended by the Department, have received official notice from Ottawa, of their suspension.

A dispatch from Ottawa says:

"It is understood that some $2,000 was unaccounted for and the explanation given by the superintendent that the money had been diverted to the Liberal campaign fund in Peterborough in the election of 1911.

"It is suspected that on other great public works throughout the country similar irregularities have taken place and an investigation into the administration of other undertakings by the old Government will be made.

"The evidence in the case has been supplied by the officials themselves, under cross-examination and the total loss to the country including the amount which was diverted for election purposes, will run into a very large amount.

"It is claimed that some $2,000 was diverted directly to the Liberal campaign fund in Peterborough in the last general election."

LABORERS TOGETHER.

The report on the investigations will show that a large number of local people were entered on the pay list, possibly without their knowledge or consent. However, the names are there, some of the entries being as follows:

A station agent was placed on the pay list as a laborer, in clearing up dry lands. This was to pay for a special train to take Hon. Geo. P. Graham and his party to Fenelon Falls for a meeting, held in connection with the campaign. Ticket agents also had their names affixed to the list as laborers.

The name of a young lady also figures quite prominently for several months, the money being used to pay accounts at a local bookstore. The accounts totalled about $200.

A liquor dealer was a hardworking laborer and carpenter, so to speak, in order that accounts for liquor, might be settled.

A bookkeeper and the manager of a local newspaper also "soiled their hands" on the long end of a pick and shovel and other implements of labor, at least they were so entered on the pay list.

The "gang" also included two local bankers, a lawyer, two barbers, grocers and furniture dealers.

NURSES MAY REMAIN.

Stay of Two Weeks Granted In Case of Canadian Women.

DETROIT, Feb. 28.—Chief Immigration Inspector Frick yesterday granted a stay of two weeks in the case of Miss Edna Schawlm, the Guelph, Ont., nurse at the University of Michigan Hospital, who was Thursday ordered deported to Canada in company with Miss Elizabeth Wilson, another nurse, for an alleged violation of the contract labor law.

The university authorities believe that at the end of the two weeks they will have no trouble convincing the Federal authorities that Miss Schewlm's case does not come within the purview of the contract labor law, and, furthermore, that the upholding of such a view would be detrimental to the best interests of the United States, because of the fact that many professional vacancies in this country can positively not be filled without at least bringing from abroad specialists who can instruct Americans in their fields.

TORONTO, Feb. 28.—F. M. Clement, B.S.A., has been appointed director of the Provincial Government Experimental Station at Vineland, in succession to A. D. Harkness, who recently resigned. Mr. Clement is a graduate of the Ontario Agricultural College, where he specialized in horticulture. He afterwards acted as district representative for some years in Elgin County, distinguishing himself in the horticultural branch. Over a year ago he was appointed assistant in the horticultural department of Macdonald College, at Ste. Anne de Bellevue, which position he now holds. He will assume his new duties about the first of April.

MR. G. HOWARD FERGUSON,

WAS MEMBER OF POLICE FORCE FOR TWENTY-NINE YEARS

DEATH OF P. C. McGINTY.

Charles McGinty, for twenty-nine years, a member of the local police force, died last night at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Wm. Reiney, 11 Bethune street. He was 64 years of age.

The late Mr. McGinty was born in the township of Pickering. Forty years ago he came to Peterborough. He was in the employment of the city before joining the force and during all these years, he enjoyed the confidence of his superiors and the friendship of all. No other officer was more popular than P. C. McGinty. As an officer, he was considerate and thoughtful. He never faltered in the discharge of his duties, in consequence of which he was always more or less prominent in cases coming before the Court.

He was a member of the Catholic Order of Foresters.

His wife predeceased him eight years ago. Thos. McGinty, of this city, is a son, and a sister, Mrs. Roach, resides in Toronto.

The funeral will take place on Monday morning at nine o'clock to the Church of the Sacred Heart, and St. Peter's Cemetery.

Plans For Armories Held Up.

BRANTFORD, Feb. 28.—The Militia Department plans great things for Brantford, and wants the new armories to be built here large enough to accommodate four extra units — signaling, medical, engineering and service corps—which will ultimately be organized here. But the Public Works Department, which superintends the construction of buildings, contends that the building now planned is more than sufficient, and that the cost is even now too great, especially as Brantford has secured much in the way of public buildings. So the plans for the armories are held up while the two Ottawa departments come to an agreement.

Money is Voted to Enforce the Scott Act in Province

TORONTO, Feb. 28.—The tabling of the supplementary estimates, to the amount of $1,739,323.49, in the Ontario Legislature yesterday by Hon. I. B. Lucas marks the direction of financial assistance to several new projects and the support of many which are now well established.

One of the more significant items on the list appears in connection with several miscellaneous sums, and sets aside $5,000 for the enforcement of the Canada Temperance Act. This seems to make clear the intention of the Government to take some hand in the control of the new counties which have recently adopted this means of liquor restriction. It has been a public question for some time as to the authority of the province to enforce the Scott Act, it being under the direction of the Federal Government and the officers acting under the criminal code.

An attempt will be made by the Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines to better conserve the timber of the north, and to this end $25,000 is set aside for additions to the fire-ranging staff. In the same Department provision is made for the appointment of a cartographer and additional mining inspectors. The Government also from this time forth will have the regular services of an electrical and telephone expert, a real estate valuator for the succession duties branch, as well as increased assistance from new inspectors in many branches.

Among the items for public works the new Whitby asylum has $300,000 to continue the construction. The moving of the Central Prison of Toronto to Guelph during the year is covered with the year's expenses in full by $275,000. The Ottawa Normal School remodelling accounts for $50,000, and the schools for deaf and blind at Belleville and Brantford have grants of $50,000 each.

The growth of the fish-hatching trade, which is now under the supervision of the Government, demands a new fish car fitted up with modern improvements for the transportation of fingerlings and spawn from one branch to another.

CANTATA RUTH HEARD BY LARGE AUDIENCE

GUSTAVE EVANTUREL,
Liberal member for Prescott, in the Ontario House, who, after a bitter speech against the alleged "alliance" between the Ontario Government and the liquor interests, was shown to have sought a big retainer to act as defender of the Hotelkeeper's Association in and out of the House.

George Street Choir and Assisting Vocalists Are Heard

Last night a large and appreciative audience enjoyed a decided musical treat, when the sacred cantata, Ruth, was given by Mr. Renwick and his splendid choir of George Street Methodist Church assisted by Prof. Cameron, of Belleville, and a number of local musicians. The instrumental part was organ and piano combined with Mr. Renwick at the organ and Miss Pearl McKee at the piano.

The programme opened by a number of selections from different composers, before the Cantata Ruth was given. The first number, an anthem, "I waited for the Lord" Mendelssohn), with solos by Mrs. J. H. Renwick and Mrs. J. E. Middleton, was beautifully rendered.

Prof. Cameron, of Belleville, was the only vocalist outside the local singers, in solo, and it is hoped may often be heard here again. In his solo, "For He shall give his Angels Charge" (Jeffers), his powerful resonant base voice was heard to great advantage. The Ladies' Quartette, "Far Away," by Mrs. McCarrell, Mrs. Telford, Miss P. McKee, Miss R. McKee, was given with expression and feeling. Miss Lottie Hanson in her solo, "Beyond," (St. Quentin), was enthusiastically received and is deserving of all praise.

The last number an anthem, "The Roseate Hues of Early Dawn" (Slater), with solo parts by Miss M. Armstrong, Miss L. Garbutt, Mr. J. Miller, Mr. W. Dartnell, was one of the gems of the evening.

Too much cannot be said in praise of the old, sweet cantata, Ruth, the rendering of which was given so beautifully last night. The blending of organ and piano seemed the perfect accompaniment and there was no drowning of the voices, which so often proves a detriment to the enjoyment of the audience.

Mention is due to the trio, "Farewell, the hour has come for parting, Farewell, love's link must break at last," soprano, Miss M. Armstrong, First Alto, Miss L. Garbutt, Second Alto, Mrs. M. Rehill, which was so well and feelingly given and appreciated. In Part Second, the transition from "Sorrow" to "Joy" was very marked.

The duet, "With Joyous heart I greet the [illegible] Mrs. Renwick and Miss Sanderson, was very sweet and expressive. "Fare thee well my mother dear," was given with much pathos. The chorale "Nightfall," "Look down O Lord from realms above," the introduction to the closing chorus, the triumphant Wedding chorus, "Hark! Hark! the cymbals clash," and the finale, "Rejoice, rejoice, for blessings round us fall," concluded one of the most enjoyable evenings Peterboro music lovers have been provided for some time.

Mention might be made of the well balanced chorus, but the George St. Methodist Choir is so well and highly known, that further words are unnecessary.

Rev. Mr. Peever, in a few pleasant words, introduced Prof. Cameron to the audience, to which Prof. Cameron replied.

The members of the chorus were:

Altos—Mrs. M. Rehill, Mrs. M. McCarrell, Misses B. Fallon, R. Fusee, E. Fusee, L. Garbutt, N. Heaslip, D. Hanson, R. McKee, E. McIlmoyle, I. Sanderson, N. Wright.

Tenors—Messrs. C. B. Adair, Jas. Brown, L. Fraser, Geo. Johnston, J. Miller, M. McCarrell, W. Taylor, W. A. Carson.

Bassos—Messrs. W. H. Cunningham, F. Cole, W. Dartnell, S. Ivey, W. Mallory, H. McCabe, H. W. Solly, E. Telford, C. H. Thompson, H. S. Weldon.

Sopranos — Mrs. J. H. Renwick, Mrs. E. Telford, Mrs. Sanderson, Misses G. Allison, A. Allison, E. Bennett, A. Beatty, M. Bessence, M. Higgins, G. Huycke, L. Hill, L. Hanson, E. Kemp, F. Jackson, L. Smith, E. M. Blunt, M. Armstrong.

The following vocalists kindly assisted:

Mrs. J. E. Middleton, Miss L. Burke, Miss E. P. Fick, Miss E. Elliott, Mr. John Anderson, Mr. Locke, Mr. D. Fleming, Mr. W. F. Skitch, Mr. J. M. Green, Mr. A. Barton.

TO EXPLAIN NEXT WEEK

Evanturel Given Another Opportunity, but Postpones It.

TORONTO, Feb. 28.—In the few brief moments of the House yesterday afternoon, the opportunity was extended by the Government to Gustave Evanturel of Prescott to make a statement explaining the position in which he is placed. The member, however, stated that he was prepared to do so early in the coming week, rather than at present.

Hon. J. J. Foy immediately before adjournment rose and called the attention of Mr. Evanturel, who was perusing a newspaper, to the fact that, if he wished to speak, he then had opportunity. Both the Opposition and the Government were surprised at his postponement.

Early in the day Mr. Rowell acknowledged that he had written a personal note to him, and made the attitude of the Opposition quite plain. The inference was that they felt he had only one course to adopt. Mr. Evanturel, however, stated that he would consult his constituency before he would consider resigning his seat. During the day he also held a brief conference with the Attorney-General and with G. H. Ferguson.

THE WANDER-THIRST.

SIR ERNEST SHACKLETON, in the London Daily Mail, speaks very freely of his Antarctic exploration scheme and of the motives that prompt him to leave civilization for the cold regions of the Pole. "I have often been asked," he says, "what can one see in the cold, inhospitable regions of the Antarctic." He hesitates to give an answer, and says there must be an intangible something which draws one to those wild wastes of snow and ice. Despite the memories of bitter cold and hard work, the rough and scanty food, there is a certain fascination in exploration, and when one begins organizing there comes a longing for the time when the last out-posts of civilization are left behind.

One would have thought that the disaster which befell the Scott party would be sufficient to warn others from venturing their lives over the same ground, but the facts prove the opposite, for Shackleton has received letters from all kinds of people offering themselves for the expedition.

There is what has been called a "wander-thirst," which is well expressed in the lines quoted by Sir Ernest Shackleton; they are, we believe, taken from a poem by Gerald Gould, and appeared in the London Spectator some years ago:

"Yonder the long horizon lies,
And there, by night and day,
The old ships draw to port again,
And the young ships sail away;
And come what may, but go I must,
And if men ask me why,
You can lay the blame on the sun and stars,
And the white road and the sky."

Life is a great adventure and we must take whatever comes and make the best of it, things are on the move and we must move with them. There are all kinds of birds, most of them are migratory, and there are migratory men, and "Birds of Passage" who sing us a few notes and feed in our gardens for a few brief sunny days and one morning we look out and find them gone.

THE SORROWS OF CORELLI.

MARIE CORRELLI is said to be "in a tantrum." This is nothing new for that lady novelist, for most of her work seems to have been done in delirium, or, at least, in a mild form of hysteria. She has now burst out in a fresh place, not in a book this time, but in a letter to the Birmingham Daily Mail, which published a paragraph asking "Where is Marie Corelli?"

She writes: "I certainly have withdrawn for a time into a retired literary corner overpowered by the crowd of stupendous geniuses (according to publishers' advertisements) who occupy it, considering it but just and decent to stand aside out of the glittering galaxy of these many marvels of the age who (if publishers' advertisements and newspaper booms mean anything) have arrived unto their own. I am not waiting till the clouds roll by, but only till the dazzling procession of publishers' planets sweep onward in their brilliant course, leaving the trails of Bernard Shaw, Joseph Conrad, G. K. Chesterton and De Morgan fire behind them." want they will have, and if they do not want me I don't want them and there need be no strained relations between us."

No strained relations? From the tone of this letter the relations are already sufficiently strained. Miss Corelli's remarks apply to readers as much as they do to the "galaxy of marvels" referred to. If the reading public are being led astray by publisher's advertisement, by what were they led when Miss Corelli herself was in the heyday of her popularity? It is not long ago since a new novel by this lady was preceded by great trumpeting; publishers' heralds went before her proclaiming her the queen of novelists, even the titles of her books were lurid and obviously intended to hit the eye as as well as the imagination. "The Sorrows of Satan," "The Mighty Atom," "Temporal Power," etc.

Miss Corelli must not complain about the publishers, they did their best for her when she was in the running. She is merely reaping the reward of extreme popularity, it is a fickle and unreliable thing. G. K. C., Bernard Shaw and the rest are following in her train, and there are others coming up in the rear. Sigh no more Marie, you are not so badly done to after all, for from all accounts you made a good thing out of it, and that is some consolation.

FACING THE INEMY.

MR. ROWELL says: "I would rather go down to defeat fighting the liquor interests than win twenty victories with their support."

The Leader of the Opposition's attitude reminds one of the old Irish cobbler, who was at one time a soldier, with a weakness for whiskey. He had long ago signed the pledge, but he always kept a bottle of whiskey on the bench in front of him. The priest noticing the whiskey said: "Pat, I thought you had given up the liquor, and yet I have noticed you always have a bottle on hand."

To which Pat replied: "Well, yer Reverence, it's like this; I've been a soldier, and I was always strongest and boldest when I was facing the inemy."

Mr. Rowell never waxes more heroic than when he is facing the "inemy," the Bar, with his abolition hatchet. In this he is the lineal descendant, or successor, of the late lamented Carrie Nation, who gained immortality as a saloon smasher in the United States.

If such a thing did happen, that Mr. Rowell should abolish all the bars of Ontario, what would he do with his hatchet? That "fighting spirit" (unfortunate word) which the Globe speaks of, what would become of it? No one could imagine Mr. Rowell becoming eloquent or rampant only in front of a bottle of whiskey. He seems to have as insatiable a desire to smash bottles as others have of opening them and drinking their contents.

RUSSIAN AND CANADIAN WHEAT.

LIVERPOOL cables state that making all allowance for difference in grade and quality, etc., Russian wheat is being offered on the Liverpool market "much below" the price of the Canadian article. Siberia is larger in extent than our Canadian West with equal advantages in soil and climate. Wages and the cost of living are less there. The result will be that if Canadians hope to retain even their home market it must be by a radical fall in prices, or a duty against the foreign article.

New Zealand butter, Australian beef and mutton, with Russian wheat and Argentinian cereals and cheaper conditions of production mean hard times for the Canadian farmer if he does not "watch out." Shall the cheap nations overcome us? Civilization may carry its own penalty. We cannot and will not lower our conditions of life and production to suit a lower level of national and domestic life.

OLD AGE PENSIONS.

ONE of the serious things about the enormous waste that has gone on in the arrangement and carrying out of national undertakings in Canada in recent years is the fact that they prevent Governments from doing what they ought to do for the social betterment and comfort of the people.

Old Age Pensions and the Atlantic Shipping scheme are necessarily postponed. The loss to the farmer and to Canada through the exorbitant rates exacted by the present Atlantic Shipping Pool is very great. It is the real cause of the trouble in the West. The relief of the old and the widow must also wait. It is not the loss in money that is so terrible, it is the immediate effect of the waste and loss that is so terrible.

T. V. C. FRAUDS.

IN REFERENCE to the gross frauds that have been practiced in connection with the canals of Canada, and more particularly the Trent Valley Canal, that staunch Liberal paper, the Montreal Mail, says:

> "The affair, although it has been expected for some time, has caused a flutter in Parliamentary circles. It is claimed by Conservatives that only the fringe of the method by which the Liberals secured their campaign funds has yet been touched by Mr. Ferguson. It is further claimed that the same system has been in vogue on nearly all of the Canadian canals, and that even grosser revelations are anticipated, as Mr. Ferguson proceeds with his work.
>
> "In the Trent Canal case, it is stated that former Liberal members of adjacent constituencies and also unsuccessful candidates had their expenses met out of the sums voted for the work of the canal, and that the method adopted was to have bogus names placed on the payrolls. The salaries of these bogus men were handed over to pay the campaign expenses."

TORONTO'S two policewomen, says the Montreal Gazette, made the rounds of the city's dancing places recently, and whenever their presence was noticed the tangoers and other prancers moderated their efforts. Here is a pointer for those who would tone down the up-to-date dances. Let them put the policewomen on the job. A policeman attempting such a reform would be laughed at so much that the chief would have to transfer him to an outlying district, where the only gambollers would be the suburban goat and the night cab horse in the pasture. No one as yet has had the temerity to laugh at Geraldine the Cop.

A HOUSE FLY got into the lens of a moving picture show in Pittsburgh, Pa., and nearly caused a panic. When the machine began to work there appeared on the screen a monster with legs like the limbs of a tree, eyes as big as saucers, and covered with hair that looked like oat straw. At sight of the horror the women and children began to scream, and a panic was narrowly averted. If a fly magnified is more horrible than some of the pictures they make up for the "movies" these days, it must have been horrible.

GEORGE MOORE purposes to write a drama in which the personalities of Christ and Saint Paul are contrasted. The scene is to be laid in Palestine. In order to study the country and obtain accuracy of detail, Mr. Moore is about to start for Jerusalem. "What I should like to describe," he says, "is the contrast between two characters—between an ironical mystic—that is Jesus—and Paul, the man in the full tide of belief. That is what I am going to try to write. I don't say I shall succeed, and I think I shall write it first as a story. That will enable me to become familiar with the subject, to 'get into' it. The play will follow later."

SPARING THE ROD

By Walt Mason

"Spare the rod and spoil the child," said a famous sage of old; but his wits were running wild, or his heart was hard and cold. It was taught in school and church, long ago, that every dad should equip himself with birch and assault the growing lad. In the olden foolish days boys were whipped for every lapse, and it only served to raise mutiny in manly chaps So the boys ran off from home, where they looked for love in vain; and as pirates they would roam up and down the Spanish Main. Or they learned to lie and sneak, in their fear of oaken stave, and, with teardrops on the cheek, longed for an untimely grave. I would rather that I had portion in the brimstone fire than be parent to a lad who could fear and hate his sire. And no boy his dad can love if his heart with fear is sore, of the cudgel poised above, and the whip behind the door. Spare the child and spoil the rod—put the darned thing in the fire—and the son will see a God in the person of his sire.

Birthdays of Note

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY TWENTY-EIGHTH

This is the natal day of Dr. Wilfrid Grenfell of Labrador, who is now forty-nine years of age. The story of how he came to take up his grand work among the people of the Labrador coast is full of interest. When a student at Oxford he is said to have been greatly impressed by the message of the late Dwight L. Moody. This led to his offering himself as a volunteer worker to the Deep Sea Fishermen's Mission, who sent him out on their hospital ships. One day when he was off duty in London, a friend came to him and began to tell him about his experiences whilst on a trip to Labrador. As he described the hardships endured by the inhabitants and their lack of medical attention, his words so affected the young doctor that he exclaimed, "That's the place for me," and forthwith made ready to set out for the scene of his future labors.

SUNDAY, MARCH FIRST

The Hon. J. P. B. Casgrain, Dominion Senator, who is fifty-nine years of age to-day, has constituted himself one of the authorities on the transportation problems of the country. He was originally a civil engineer and for some years was chief engineer of the Montreal and Pacific Junction Railway. He is to-day interested in a number of companies and takes a prominent part in politics in Montreal. A few years ago he ran for mayor of the city but was defeated. He has been a member of the Senate for fourteen years and has acted as chairman of the railway committee.

HAS SHOWN LENIENCY

Government's Dismissals are Less than Half those of Laurier's.

OTTAWA, Feb. 28. — The House spent practically all day in committee of supply and dealing with the estimates of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. During the day Hon. J. D. Hazen was called upon several times to explain dismissals.

In reply to questions from G. W. Kyte (Richmond), the Minister said since taking office he had discharged 510 civil servants in his Department. The present Government, he said, had removed so far 7 per cent. of the officials in the outside service. The Liberals, he declared, during their first two years in office had dismissed 16 per cent.

In reply to Mr. Carvell, the Minister said he would not send out instructions to the present officials to keep out of politics, but if attention were called to any specific case of interference in his Department he would take such steps as to prevent its recurrence.

Finance Minister White, asked last night about the new Dominion loan of £5,000,000 now being offered on the London market, said that the proceeds would be devoted to the redemption of outstanding treasury bills amounting to $1,000,000, and to the purchase of Grand Trunk Pacific two per cent. bonds guaranteed by the Government.

Hon. Dr. Roche has given notice of a resolution to provide that the time within which any grantee or his qualified substitute may surrender to the crown all rights under the Volunteer Bounty Act of 1908, and may thereupon be paid the sum of five hundred dollars, be extended to December 31, 1914.

Tarzan of the Apes

by Edgar Rice Burroughs

Copyright, 1912, by the Frank A. Munsey company.

For a few moments all were silent. Then Mbonga emerged, a look of mingled wrath and fear writ upon his hideous countenance. He spoke a few words to the assembled warriors, and in an instant the men were flying through the little village searching minutely every hut and corner within the palisade.

Scarcely had the search commenced than the overturned caldron was discovered and with it the theft of the poisoned arrows. Nothing more they found, and it was a thoroughly awed and frightened group of savages which huddled around their king a few moments later.

They stood in little groups, talking in low tones and casting affrighted glances behind them from their great rolling eyes.

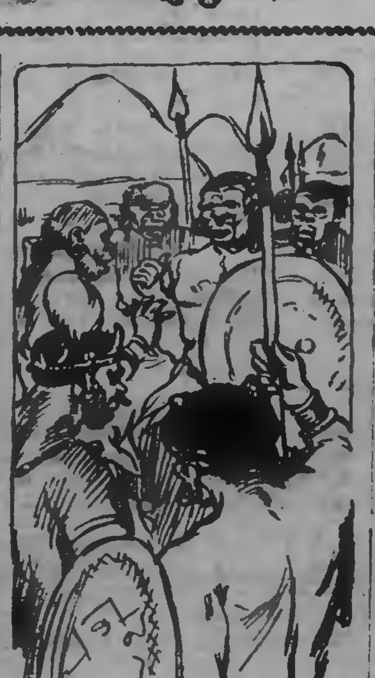
Tarzan of the apes watched them for awhile from his lofty perch in the great tree. The sun was high in the heavens. Tarzan had not broken fast this day, and it was many miles to where lay the toothsome remains of Horta, the boar. So he turned his back upon the village of Mbonga.

It was not yet dark when he reached his tribe, though he stopped to exhume and devour the remains of the wild boar he had cached the preceding day and again to get Kulonga's bow and arrows from the tree top in which he had hidden them.

It was a well laden Tarzan who dropped from the branches into the midst of the tribe of Kerchak.

With swelling chest he narrated the glories of his adventure and exhibited the spoils of conquest.

Kerchak grunted and turned away, for he was jealous of this strange member of his band. In his little evil brain he sought for some excuse to wreak his hatred upon Tarzan.



It Was a Thoroughly Awed and Frightened Group of Savages.

The next day Tarzan was practicing with his bow and arrows at the first gleam of dawn. At first he lost nearly every bolt he shot, but finally he learned to guide the little shafts with fair accuracy, and ere a month had passed he was no mean shot, but his proficiency had cost him nearly his entire supply of arrows.

It was during this period that the young English lord found hidden in the back of one of the cupboards in the cabin a little metal box. The key was in the lock, and a few moments' investigation and experimentation were rewarded with the successful opening of the receptacle.

In it he found a faded photograph of a smooth faced young man, a golden locket studded with diamonds linked to a small gold chain, a few letters and a small book.

Tarzan examined these all minutely.

The photograph he liked best of all, for the eyes were smiling, and the face was open and frank. It was his father.

The locket, too, took his fancy, and he placed the chain about his neck in imitation of the ornamentation he had seen to be so common among the black men he had visited. The brilliant stones gleamed strangely against his smooth, brown hide.

The letters he could scarcely decipher, for he had learned little or nothing of script, so he put them back in the box with the photograph and turned his attention to the little book.

This was almost entirely filled with fine script; but, while the little bugs were all familiar to him, their arrangement and the combinations in which they occurred were strange and entirely incomprehensible.

Tarzan had long since learned the use of the dictionary; but, much to his sorrow and perplexity, it proved of no avail to him in this emergency. Not a word of all that was written in the little book could he find, and so he put it back in the little metal box, but with a determination to work out the mysteries of it later on.

It was the diary of John Clayton, Lord Greystoke, kept in French, as had always been his custom.

Tarzan replaced the box in the cupboard, but always thereafter he carried the features of the strong, smiling face of his father in his heart and in his head a fixed determination to solve the mystery of the strange words in the little black book.

At present he had more important business in hand, for his supply of arrows was exhausted, and he must needs journey to the black men's village and renew it.

Early the following morning he set out, and, traveling rapidly, he came before midday to the little clearing. Once more he took up his position in the great tree, and, as before, he saw the women in the fields and the village street and the little caldron of bubbling poison directly beneath him.

For hours he lay awaiting his opportunity to drop down unseen and gather up the arrows for which he had come. But it was not until night fell that Tarzan saw his chance. This time he took all of the arrows, for he had brought a number of long fibers to bind them into a bundle.

When the savages discovered that once more their arrows had been pilfered it seemed to them that they had offended some great god who ruled this part of the jungle. From then on an offering of food was daily placed beneath the great tree from whence the arrows had disappeared, in an effort to conciliate the mighty one.

But the seed of fear was deep sown, and had he but known it Tarzan of the apes had laid the foundation for much future misery for himself and his tribe.

That night he slept in the forest not far from the village, and early the next morning set out slowly on his homeward march, hunting as he traveled. Only a few berries and an occasional grubworm rewarded his search, and he was half famished when, looking up from a log he had been rooting beneath, he saw Sabor, the tiger, standing in the center of the trail not twenty paces from him.

The great yellow eyes were fixed upon him with a wicked and baleful gleam, and the red tongue licked the longing lips as Sabor crouched, worming his stealthy way with belly flattened against the earth.

Tarzan did not attempt to escape. He welcomed the opportunity for which, in fact, he had been searching.

Quickly he unslung his bow and fitted a well daubed arrow, and as Sabor sprang the tiny missile leaped to meet him in midair. At the same instant Tarzan of the apes jumped to one side, and as the tiger struck the ground beyond another death tipped arrow sank deep into his loin.

With a mighty roar the beast turned and charged once more, only to be met with a third arrow full in one eye, but this time he was too close upon the ape man for the latter to sidestep.

Tarzan of the apes went down beneath the body of his enemy, but with gleaming knife drawn and striking home. For a moment they lay there, and then Tarzan realized that the inert mass lying upon him was beyond power to injure.

With difficulty he wriggled from beneath the great weight, and as he stood erect and gazed down upon the trophy of his skill a mighty wave of exultation swept over him.

With swelling breast, he placed a foot upon the body of his powerful enemy and, throwing back his fine young head, roared out the awful challenge of the victorious bull ape.

The forest echoed with the savage and triumphant paean. Birds fell still, and the larger animals and beasts of prey slunk stealthily away, for few there were of all the jungle who sought for trouble with the great anthropoids.

And in London another Lord Greystoke was speaking to his kind in the house of lords, but none trembled at the sound of his soft voice.

Sabor proved most unsavory eating even to Tarzan of the apes, but hunger served as a sauce, and ere long the well fed ape man was ready to sleep again. First, however, he must remove the hide, for it was as much for this as for any other purpose that he had desired to encompass the destruction of Sabor, the tiger.

Deftly he removed the great pelt, for he had practiced often on smaller animals, and when the task was finished he carried his trophy to the fork of a high tree. There, curling himself securely in a crotch, he fell into deep slumber.

What with loss of sleep, arduous exercise and a hearty meal Tarzan of the apes slept the sun round, awakening about noon of the following day. He straightway repaired to the carcass of Sabor, but was angered to find the bones picked clean by other hungry denizens of the jungle.

He hastened on toward the point where he had left the tribe and, when he had found them, proudly exhibited the skin of Sabor, the tiger.

"Look," he cried, "apes of Kerchak! See what Tarzan, the killer, has done. Who else among you has ever killed one of Sabor's people? Tarzan is mightiest among you, for Tarzan is no ape. Tarzan is"— But here he stopped, for in the language of the anthropoids there was no word for man, and Tarzan could only write the word in English. He could not pronounce it.

The tribe had gathered about to look upon the proof of his wondrous prowess and to listen to his words.

Only Kerchak hung back, nursing his hatred and his rage.

Suddenly something snapped in the brain of the anthropoid. With a frightful roar the great beast sprang among the assemblage. Frothing and shrieking in the insanity of his fury, Kerchak looked about for the object of his greatest hatred, and there, upon a nearby limb, he saw him sitting.

"Come down, Tarzan, great killer!" cried Kerchak, ready for battle. "Come down and feel the fangs of a greater! Do mighty fighters fly to the trees at danger?"

And he emitted the volleying challenge of his kind.

Quietly Tarzan dropped to the ground. Breathlessly the tribe watched Kerchak, still roaring, charge the relatively puny figure.

Nearly seven feet stood Kerchak on his short legs. His enormous shoulders were bunched and rounded with huge muscles. The back of his short neck was as a single lump of iron sinew which bulged beyond the base of his skull, so that his head seemed like a small ball protruding from a huge mountain of flesh.

His back drawn, snarling lips exposed his great fighting fangs, and his bloodshot eyes gleamed in horrid reflection of his madness.

Awaiting him stood Tarzan, himself a mighty muscled animal, but his six feet of height and his great rolling sinews seemed pitifully inadequate to the ordeal which awaited them in their struggle with Kerchak.

His bow and arrows lay some distance away, where he had dropped them when showing Sabor's hide to his fellow apes, and he confronted Kerchak with only his knife and his superior intellect to offset the ferocious strength of his enemy.

Once Thought Necessary, but Now Your Search for Relief is Ended.

Wonderful Method Retains Rupture Without Knife, Danger or Pain

J. Y. EGAN, Specialist of Toronto

Old-fashioned truss torture is no longer necessary. KEPHALDOL

COMES TO CANADA.

Originated by Dr. Stohr, a famous physician of Vienna, Austria, Kephaldol is known and used throughout Europe and Great Britain.

Now, backed by the endorsements of hundreds of physicians and hospitals, it comes to Canada to relieve pain and cure Rheumatism, Sciatica, Lumbago, Neuralgia, Neuritis, Headache, LaGrippe, Fevers and similar troubles.

Kephaldol has received the highest commendations from the medical profession because of its direct strengthening action on the nerves without injury to the heart, and its lasting regulative and curative effect upon the whole system.

Unlike other pain-killing remedies, Kephaldol is absolutely harmless. It causes no intestinal irritation, and has no depressing effects.

Kephaldol will now bring to pain-wracked Canadians the untold blessings which it has already conferred in the Old Country—joy of perfect life again to those who, perhaps for many years, have dragged through a tormented existence.

Order Was Finally Restored.

A school inspector was testing a class' powers of observation. He made sure that the class saw that he had a gold mounted fountain pen in his waistcoat pocket plainly displayed. Then he left the rostrum, retired to the anteroom and there removed the fountain pen to an inner pocket. Returning, he stood with his coat thrown back and his vest displayed penless.

"Now, boys," he said, "tell me what I have forgotten."

There was a long pause, and then a small boy piped up:

"Please, sir, you forgot to say 'Excuse me' when you walked in front of the teacher."—London Tit-Bits.

A Skeptic.

An obstinate old Daytonian who was looking up one still afternoon at the Wright biplane circling smoothly and steadily through the air said: "When people first told me about this here flyin' I called 'em liars. Then when I read about it in the papers I said it was a fake." The old man, watching the biplanes moving in great curves like lazy birds, shook his head thoughtfully. "By crimus!" he said. "I ain't what ye mout call convinced yet, nuther."—Young's Magazine.

LIFE WITH THE ESKIMOS.

Their Flesh Strewn Ice Huts Resemble Slaughter Houses.

My first view of the interior of Uck-Gluck's arctic residence would have seen a disheartening one to a tenderfoot. To me, after nine hours of freezing, nothing had ever seemed quite so welcome and cheering as the hollowed out stone in which a liberal quantity of seal oil and moss was burning. (The moss was used as a wick, and so answered the purpose of both lamp and stove.) Three children were crowded together at the end of the igloo staring silently. Uck-Gluck's kooner or woman stood with an infant in her arms, grinning broadly and cheerfully at us.

The room was about eighteen feet in diameter and was a veritable shambles. Uck-Gluck possessed a reputation as being a great hunter, and he had been especially successful of late. Masses of flesh lay strewn all about the floor. There seemed apparently to be no effort or desire to keep it in one or two piles. It lay everywhere. There was the whole carcass of a walrus, cut up and strewn about, and almost directly at the head of the raised "platform" of ice which formed a bed for the whole family there was a great pile of entrails, preserved for dog meat. The walls of the igloo were spattered with blood, and weapons of the chase lay everywhere. These included spears and harpoons, long knives and a rifle that fired powder and ball.

A large quantity of meat, killed earlier in the season, had arrived at the age and stage where it possessed a very bad odor. This was not for the dogs. Uck-Gluck and his family would have fed them the fresh meat before they would have sacrificed this particular pile, which was just reaching that mellow and ripe condition which strongly appeals to their palate.

Bernard and Outta came into the igloo a few moments later, and so delighted were Uck-Gluck and his wife to learn that both of the kablunaks or white men were to eat and sleep under their roof that they disported themselves like children, dancing about and laughing and chattering in their own tongue. Bernard told me that in his pleasure Uck-Gluck was saying that in return for the honor the white men were showing him he would give the kablunaks the greatest hunting that white men had ever had.

As we had come to hunt, and as Uck-Gluck was noted all along the coast for his prowess, this was highly satisfactory. Bernard brought in his oil stove, and we began at once to prepare our supper, as we had eaten nothing but frozen meat since morning. We fried our own deer meat, heated a number of ship biscuit, a can of corn and a can of tomatoes and made about a gallon of tea. Uck-Gluck and his family accepted the tea and biscuits as great delicacies, but only Ishya, his wife, took advantage of the stove to cook her meat. With their knives the Eskimos cut off chunks from the meat strewn about and devoured it raw, laughing and chuckling as they feasted. One of the children, a boy of seven or eight, ate a strip of pure fat that must have weighed nearly a pound.—James Oliver Curwood in Leslie's.

Unquestionable Distinction.

It was a geography lesson, and the teacher had been asking what some of the different states were noted for. Looking at one of the little girls, she asked:

"Tell me, Florence, what Rhode Island is celebrated for."

For a moment the child was silent; then an inspiration apparently came to her.

"Rhode Island," replied the little girl, "is celebrated for being the only one of the United States that is the smallest."—Harper's Magazine.

Maternal Pride.

"Isn't it your son, madam, who is the adept in physical sports? A champion swimmer, if I remember right."

"Dear me, no! My son is not a swimmer. Swimming is commonplace! Everybody can swim. There's no glory in that. My son is interested in sports of the air."

"He's an aviator?"

"Not exactly. He fills the balloon for the parachute jumper." — Cleveland

HAVE PRETTY HAIR

Soft, Fluffy, Abundant—Use Parisian Sage. It Stops Falling Hair and Itching Scalp.

If your hair is not as soft and beautiful, or as fresh and full as that of some friend, do not despair —do as she does—give it daily attention. Beautiful hair is largely the matter of a little care. If it is too thin, make it grow. If it is too dry and brittle, soften it up—lubricate it. If you have dandruff, it is because the scalp is too dry and flakes off. Freshen up the scalp and dandruff will go.

Parisian Sage, sold in fifty cent bottles at drug and toilet counters, is just what you need—it softens the scalp, nourishes the hair roots, immediately removes dandruff, and makes the hair wavy, lustrous and abundant.

Parisian Sage quickly stops itching head; cleanses the hair of dust and excessive oil; takes away the dryness and brittleness, makes it seem twice as abundant, and beautifies it until it is soft and lustrous.

You cannot be disappointed in Parisian Sage. Always sold by The Warne Drug Co., or money back if not satisfied plan. Look for the trade mark—"The Girl with the Auburn Hair." It's on every package —accept nothing else.

Burned By Escaping Steam.

CHATHAM, Feb. 28. — The engineer and fireman of a Wabash freight train were severely but not dangerously burned near Prairie Siding here late yesterday afternoon, when an injector pipe in the engine cab burst. FULL ENQUIRY ORDERED INTO DEATHS IN MEXICO

President Wilson and His Cabinet Spent Two Hours in Discussion of Mexican Complications But No Decision is Reached Beyond Determination to Get at Facts of Tragedies.

WASHINGTON, Feb. [illegible] — Two hours of discussion of the Mexican situation in all its phases by President Wilson and his Cabinet yesterday developed a unanimity of opinion that the time had not yet arrived for any change in the policy of the Washington Government.

Though still reserving judgment on the facts surrounding the execution of Wm. S. Benton the President and his Cabinet, it was learned authoritatively, were inclined to regard as of serious moment the hanging by Mexican Federals of Clemente Vergara, an American citizen. Immediately after the Cabinet meeting, Secretary Bryan cabled Charge O'Shaughnessy for facts concerning Vergara's death. An explanation will be sought by the American Government of why any harm befell Vergara when assurances had been given to the American consular representatives that he was safe.

Incidentally the memorandum, circulated by the Huerta Government among the diplomatic represeatnatives in Mexico City, pointing out to the United States that the constitutionalists were unable to protect foreigners and therefore ought to be deprived of the right to get arms in the United States did not reach the State Department.

Secretary Bryan said it had not been received, and there were intimations from high officials that the memorandum meant little in view of the wanton murder of Vergara.

Practically every move that has ever been suggested fo the protection of Americans and foreigners in Mexico and for the restoration of peace in that country was discussed by the Cabinet. No conclusion was reached as far as could be learned, except that there should be aggressive pursuit for the facts in both the Benton and Vergara deaths.

The news that Gen. Villa had issued an order requiring that American consular representatives in Mexico be advised of all arrests of foreigners was received with satisfaction here. Assurances have been coming indirectly, too, that Gen. Carranza and other leading constitutionalists will see to it that no further international complications are caused on their side of the rebellion.

Britain Should Keep the Peace.

LONDON, Feb. 28.—The Nation, a Liberal London weekly, in discussing the Benton case yesterday approves the decision reached by the Foreign Office that British intervention in Mexico is out of the question, and declares that it would be "criminal folly" to "order a wholesale killing" and upset the good relations between the United States and this country because a British subject had been killed.

The Nation maintains that a British subject who jeopardizes his life and property in search of riches in a country like Mexico does so at his own risk, and the newspaper concludes with expressing the hope that nothing be done in the country to stimulate American intervention in Mexico by the force of arms.

HAND WRITING GOT THIS LAD

He Stole Hand-bag and Left Tell-tale Note.

OTTAWA, Feb. 28.—A 15-year-old boy, arrested Thursday in connection with the recent theft of a handbag containing $50,000 in checks and money orders from the city post-office, pleaded guilty yesterday and was given his freedom until Tuesday next, when he will appear in juvenile court for sentence. The checks and money orders were all recovered in a lavatory of the Canada Life Building about a week ago, and the boy's detection was effected through a scrap of note paper found on the floor on which the suspected lad had written a note to another boy. Comparison with specimens of his handwriting led to the arrest.

Wrecked By Gas Explosion.

BRANTFORD, Feb. 28.—A gas explosion early yesterday morning blew out every window in the home of William Rice, 42 Strathcona avenue, and wrecked the interior, not a bit of plaster remaining on the walls, while Mrs. Rice, who was lying ill in bed, was covered with falling material. The gas had leaked in from the street through the front wall, and when Rice opened the cellar door to fix the furnace, the lighted coal oil lamp he had in his hand set off the gas, which had accumulated.

C.N.R. Inaugurates Service.

CALGARY, Feb. 28. — The first C.N.R. passenger train out of Calgary pulled out of the local yards. It was made up of two passenger cars and a baggage car and the private car of Supt. Brown. About 150 passengers purchased tickets for Hanna and other points along the line, and locomotive No. 1,118 hauled the train. Supt. Brown stood on the rear platform and waved to the crowd as the train pulled out.

BROCKVILLE, Feb. 28. — Word was received here yesterday of the death in Vancouver, B.C., of Hilton Kearns, a young barrister, who was a former resident of Brockville. Mr. Kearns, who is 26 years of age, was unmarried.

One Year at Prison Farm.

ST. CATHARINES, Feb. 28.—One year at Guelph prison farm was the sentence yesterday imposed by Judge Carman on E. J. Thomas, who pleaded guilty to passing a worthless check for $25 at Niagara-on-the-Lake.

Thomas yesterday admitted similar acts in Buffalo, Niagara Falls, Thorold and St. Thomas, and the judge shortened the sentence for his frankness.

Made Dollar an Hour.

LONDON, Ont., Feb. 28.—Because he sold the first black fox he ever raised to an American buyer for $3,400, thereby clearing exactly one dollar profit for every hour he owned the animal, J. D. Wright of Plymouth Township has decided to go extensively into fox farming. He has seven sons and has made a fortune farming, but thinks he can make money easier with foxes.

French Cabinet Upheld.

PARIS, Feb. 28. — The financial debate in the Chamber of Deputies yesterday was the occasion for a supreme effort on the part of the Briandists to overthrow the Ministry. The effort failed, however, as the Government received a vote of confidence 329 to 242.

STRENUOUS WORK SOON TELLS ON YOU

Business Men and Breadwinners the Victims of Nervous Exhaustion

When worry is added to overwork men soon become the victims of nervous exhaustion—neurasthenia—the doctor calls it. Some have no reserve strength in their systems to bear the strain; others overtax what strength they have. If you find that you are nervous and not sure of yourself, that you sleep badly and wake up tired and aching, your nerves are out of order. Other signs are inability to take proper interest in your work, your appetite is fickle, your back feels weak, and you are greatly depressed in spirits. One or more of these signs mean that you should take prompt steps to stop mischief by nourishing the nerves with the food they thrive on, namely, the rich, red blood made by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These Pills have cured thousands of cases of nervous disorders, including nervous prostration, neuralgia, St. Vitus dance and partial paralysis. Here is an example. Mr. Jas. A. McDonald, Springhill, N.S., says:—"In the summer of 1912, as the result, I think, of hard work, I was completely run down and found it necessary to quit work. I slept poorly, and what sleep I did get did not seem to rest me, as I was constantly tired. My appetite was poor and fickle, and my nerves unstrung. I had treatment from a doctor for some time, but it did not seem to help me, and having heard a great deal about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills I decided to try them. In the course of a few weeks after beginning the Pills I picked up wonderfully, and was able to return to work feeling like a new man. I have not had a day's sickness since, and naturally am now a firm believer in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will work the same beneficial results in any other tired, worn-out worker if given a fair trial. If you cannot obtain the Pills from your dealer they will be sent post paid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

WRONG DOING IS NOT PROVEN

Nothing to Prove Tampering With Ballots, says Judge.

WELLAND, Feb. 28. — Finding that the temperance people had absolutely failed to establish any act of wrongdoing, or to show where or how the ballots were tampered with, Judge Livingstone, at yesterday's scrutiny, confirmed the count in Thorold Township, No. 4, and Stamford Township, No. 6, in each of which the wets made a gain of eight.

Mr. Haverson said he was not calling E. Coulthurst, the accused Bridgeburg official, as it would be unfair to ask him to give evidence when he was facing a criminal charge on another count.

The judge was emphatically of the opinion that he should be called to explain the large discrepancy at the poll. It is expected that Mr. Coulthurst will be called in the morning in compliance with his honor's wishes.

Yesterday's decisions leave the wet majority of thirty-one unchanged. It is expected the scrutiny will be completed to-day.

That lack of tools and utensils in the home is given as the reason for inefficiency in the home by Mrs. Christine Frederick, of New York city.

White Girl Labor Case.

REGINA, Feb. 28. — Alev Getyee, the Chinese vice-consul in Regina, announced that the Chinese will carry the "white girl labor" appeal to the Privy Council. The Supreme Court of Canada upholds the provincial legislation which forbids white females working for the Chinese in that province.

The Chinese vice-consul said it was purely a moral question, and one that cast certain reflections on the character of his countrymen.

DEPORTED MEN HEARD.

First Demonstration Held In Behalf of South African Laborites.

LONDON, Feb. 28.—A demonstration by the labor party to welcome the labor leaders deported from South Africa a month ago because of their connection with the general strike was held in the opera house here last night. The house was packed although an admission fee of $1.25 was charged.

Arthur Henderson, Labor member of Parliament for Durham, who presided, announced that the labor party had decided on obtaining the best legal advice to test the legality of the deportation of the men in both the English and South African courts. Resolutions pledging support to the deported men were carried with enthusiasm.

To End Plural Voting.

LONDON, Feb. 28.—The House of Commons yesterday passed by 215 votes against 162, the second reading of a bill providing that all Parliamentary elections be held on the same day. The bill was introduced by Sir Harry Verney, a Liberal member, and the Liberal party argues that it will largely mitigate plural voting, and the disturbance of business by prolonged general elections.

The Unionist party opposed the bill, but as the Government has taken it under its wing it is generally considered probable that it will be pushed through the House.

JEWELS FOR THE HAIR ARE GAY AND BRIGHT.

There is a vogue for jewelled effects in the hair ornament of the day and the evening, little combs and pins, barettes and bandeaux that make just the right amount of brightness in the coiffure that is likely to be demure and simple. Not only rhinestones, but colored jewels as well, either matching the costume or contrasting with it. There is an immense vogue abroad for these colored effects.

ADVERTISING

A STORE'S importance is rightly judged by its advertising. Not altogether by the size of the advertisement, but by size and tone, and quality of announcement.

What the store has to say is one thing. Quite as important is how it says it.

Given that the clerical force is competent and up-to-date, it will say, over the counter, the very best to be said in reference to the goods enquired for. It may, and should, suggest other goods, not in the customers view.

This implies that the customer is in the store. But what brings him or her there? The wish to buy and the belief it is a good place to buy at.

How is this learned of?

By advertising. The advertisement is a message, an intelligent middleman, doing service between seller and buyer. The space talks to thousands, even while the store is closed for the night.

Use The REVIEW and tell the story of your store and its opportunities for good service.

BOWSER'S BLUFF

Our Hero Endeavors to Keep a Painful Secret

By M. Quad

AT the breakfast table Mrs. Bowser took a long look at Mr. Bowser. He detected her and said:

"Think my nose dropped off during the night?"

"No, but I think you are fading away very fast."

"What do you mean by that?"

"You are pale; your eyes have a faraway look in them; you have scarcely eaten a thing for the last three days. Mr. Bowser, have you a secret sorrow that is gnawing at your vitals?"

"Don't be an idiot!" he growled.

"But something is wrong. Even the cook has noticed it."

"She has, eh? She'd better notice that mole on her chin!"

"But you are not yourself and haven't been of late."

"Cut it out!"

"If you have fallen into the clutches of an adventuress"—

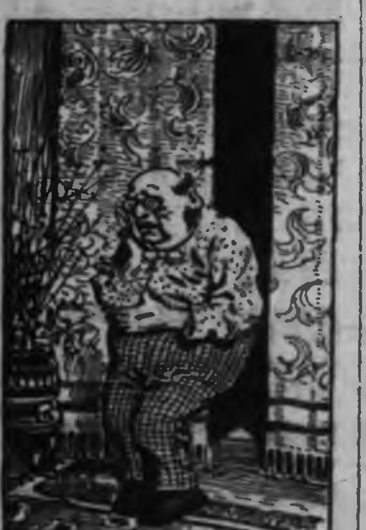
Mr. Bowser uttered a grunt and shoved back and left the house.

No, he was not himself.

He had it, and he had it bad.

Impudent Inquiries.

They had taken notice of it at the office as well. He was asked by the office boy which tooth it was, and he warned the lad that his freshness would cause his discharge, and when the same question was put to him by an old man on the street car Mr. Bowser had savagely answered:



CLAPPED HIS HAND TO HIS JAW.

"You are an old man, sir, and I respect your gray hairs, sir, but don't presume too far on my good nature!"

"But can't I ask if you have toothache?" queried the old man.

"No, sir; you can't. You can mind your own business!"

Yes, here it was at last—a full jeweled, swell front, rubber tired case of toothache, and all the peppermint essence, cloves, cinnamon oil and other remedies he had used on the sly, and all the white lies he had told Mrs. Bowser for three days had been in vain. As the "jump" suddenly struck him he uttered a groan and clapped his hand to his jaw, and the family cat walked over and sat down in front of him and looked for sympathy.

"What's the matter with you?" questioned Mrs. Bowser as she looked up from her book that evening.

"N-nothing," he replied, hoping that no other jump would follow and that he could make a sneak for the pepper sauce later on.

"I didn't know but that you had the toothache," she carelessly observed. "If you had I was going to ask why you didn't have the tooth pulled out."

"I think I'm old enough and big enough to know what to do when I have the toothache or any other ache.

Ill Feigned Indifference.

Mrs. Bowser knew that act No. 2 was coming, and she had no more to say. Mr. Bowser started to whistle and walked into the hall, but as soon as out of her sight he kicked himself and held his jaw. When he returned he casually remarked that it was mighty singular weather for that time of the year. He was doing his best, even to smiling at the cat, to make himself believe that old tooth hadn't a hollow in it big enough to tuck away a field bean, when the jump hit him again. Up went his hands, and up went his feet, and he groaned out a sort of death cry. The cat chuckled, and Mrs. Bowser exclaimed:

"What on earth is the matter with you tonight? You act as if you had the colic!"

"It's—it's just a slight attack of toothache," he replied, with a ghastly smile. "Got my big toe damp the other rainy day, I guess. It won't amount to a row of pins, however."

"If it does you'll go to the dentist's in the morning, of course?"

"Of course. You don't suppose I'm the sort of man to suffer around with the toothache for six or seven years?"

Mr. Bowser's voice had no weight in it, and his face was pale, but he had made up his mind to bluff the toothache and Mrs. Bowser in addition. The idea of going to the dentist worked an ice cold streak up and down his spine and made his toes crack, and he was secretly determined to die first.

By and by he remarked that he guessed he'd go to bed and catch up his sleep. Mrs. Bowser noticed how he suffered as he acquiesced, but she didn't express a word of pity. She had had eight or ten teeth filled or extracted, and on each occasion Mr. Bowser had ridiculed her lamentations and made sport of her tears. Only a month previously, when she had the toothache for five minutes, he offered to extract the trouble maker with a pair of fire tongs and wanted to kill the nerve with a hot poker.

Businesslike Mrs. B.

There was but little sleep for Mr. Bowser that night. He wanted to kick and groan, but he thought of forceps. He wanted Mrs. Bowser to get up and apply hot hops, hot salt, vinegar, mustard or something else, but the dentist seemed to be looking at him with a cold, cruel glare. When morning came he had a lump on his jaw, the fires of desperation in his eyes and a scared feeling clear down to his toes. He couldn't eat breakfast and said nothing of going to the office. Mrs. Bowser sat down with a good appetite and took ten minutes longer than usual to satisfy it, and when she rose up she said:

"You have got the toothache and we will go to the dentist."

"It's g-gone," he whispered.

"We are going!" she curtly continued. And she put his hat on his head and his overcoat on his back.

Unseen by either, the cat followed at their heels, and after a walk of two blocks they arrived at the dentist's. On the dentist's face was an inexorable look. One glance satisfied Mr. Bowser that he could expect no mercy, and he stammered out:

"I—I was just fooling. I haven't got any toothache!"

Mr. B. Abandons Hope of Escape.

"Get into the chair!" commanded the dentist, with a murderous look.

"It must come out!" said Mrs. Bowser unfeelingly.

Mr. Bowser uttered a groan a yard long and feebly climbed into the chair.

"Open your mouth!"

"It's gone—all gone!"

"No wonder your tooth aches. Here's a hole big enough for a rabbit to hide in!"

Mr. Bowser looked at Mrs. Bowser and tried to make her understand that he wanted the cavity filled with soft filling—breadcrumbs or cotton or something extra soft—but she simply said to the dentist:

"Pull it out!"

"Oh, I'll yank it quick enough!" replied the man of the forceps. And he made a pass, grabbed on to something, and Mr. Bowser felt the earth heave up and the heavens take a drop.

Emerges Exultant.

There were tears in his eyes as he handed out his dollar and took the tooth as a souvenir; but as soon as he reached the sidewalk he was elated and exultant. He was also ready to give Mrs. Bowser a setback, and when she asked how he felt he turned on her with all dignity and replied:

"What! Are you and the blamed old cat here? Where 've you been? I had a tiny toothache, and as I didn't want it bothering around I had it pulled. Easiest thing in the world. I rather like it. If it had been you— But that's the difference between a man and a woman!"

Wifely Wisdom.

"How long before Mr. Jimpson will be home?" asked a man's voice over the telephone.

"He telephoned a few minutes ago that he had just left his office," answered Mrs. Jimpson. "He will pass six saloons on his way and will probably spend ten minutes in each one. I expect him home in something like an hour."—Birmingham (Ala.) Age-Herald.

Too Bad.

"Good gracious, Mandy!" exclaimed Jonah as they approached the church door. "We can't git married there. See that notice on the tree by the door?"

And Amanda slowly spelled out the notice. "D-o n-o-t h-i-t-c-h h-e-r-e."—Philadelphia Record.

And He Was One Himself.

"That chap has a kind heart. He has a chestnut tree on his place, and every day the children come and find nuts on the ground."

"But that tree no longer bears."

"I know. He buys the nuts in town."—Washington Herald.

Tact.

Winter Chores.

The winter nights
Are long and drear.
The chill wind bites
The good man's ear
And tweaks his nose
When with a "scat!"
Outdoors he throws
The clinging cat.

The fire he shakes
And banks with slack.
'Tis thus he breaks
His poor old back.
Shut out those sounds—
His language shocks.
He makes his rounds
And winds the clocks.

He's barred the door
And leaped in bed.
There is no more
For him to dread.
His wife awakes
At half past two,
And him she shakes—
"The rubber tree!"

A Remark Not Often Made.

"Pa, what is a near humorist?"

"A near humorist, son, is a person who says when he finds an oyster in a stew, 'Well, well, little stranger, what are you doing here?'"—Birmingham Age-Herald.

To Talk Against It.

"Where is your wife?"

"Visiting out west."

"Aren't you afraid she will meet a cyclone?"

"I hope she does. They will enjoy each other's society."

Long Wait.

"Do you think babies should be kissed?"

"Not until they reach the age of discretion."

"That would bar the poor things forever. There is no age of discretion when it comes to kissing."

Amiable Person.

"I do hate to be so uncomfortable."

"Then why distress yourself?"

"Oh, I mustn't stop."

"Why?"

"It makes Mrs. Brown more uncomfortable than it does me."

Modest.

"I suppose you had an elaborate wedding."

"Well, not so very. We just walked up to a justice of the peace, and after looking us over he said, 'You're it; $2.50, please.'"

Next Higher.

To be a Roman was greater than a king,
That's what the people said about the place.
No doubt the natives meant by such a thing
To be a Roman was to be an ace.

Some Excitement.

"What is that man across the stream waving his hands and shouting about?"

"He says we are fishing on his private grounds."

"Oh, it's the call of the wild, is it?"

Unique Reason.

"You say you like to feel sorry?"

"Yes."

"That's queer. Why?"

"Because it is apt to mean that I have been having a bully time."

Enough.

"Johnny, what is Boston celebrated for?"

"Its beans."

"I don't mean that."

"Oh, yes; its bull pups."

But when he does get there he stays.

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

THE man whose conscience never gives him trouble may be upright and honest, and then again he may be a dope fiend.

Second thoughts are best if the thinker has a good follow-up system.

Time flies, but the Wright kind of aviating machine is after it on the wing, with odds on the wing.

When a man invites you home to dinner you can't tell from his manner until he gets almost home whether it is a surprise to his wife or not.

Some men contend that any kind of a lie is justifiable if it has the coin behind it, but there is where most kinds fail.

The man who insists on doing as he pleases wants to call the police when others try to do the same.

Crowning Feast.

Oh, the watermelon,
Hidden in a pool
Where the running water
Makes it fresh and cool,
Gathered in the moonlight,
Didn't cost a cent!
What a feast of riches
For a colored gent!

Right across the open
Lies a tempting patch
That for size and sweetness
Hasn't got a match,
And the sleepy owner
Doesn't keep a gun.
'Sides, he has so many,
Wouldn't miss just one.

Rich and ripe and luscious,
Mellow to the core,
And so good you eat it
Till you'll hold no more.
Just as sweet as honey,
And a stolen kiss
That a fellow gathers
Has no edge on this.

Oh, the watermelon,
Large and red and ripe,
Not the kind you purchase,
But the kind you swipe!
Doesn't seem so wicked
When you test the treat,
'Cause the watermelons
They were made to eat.

Know the Sound.

Ting-a-ling went the doorbell.

Inside a heart fluttered in unison with the tintinnabulations and a pair of small feet pattered toward the door.

"Ethel must know that ring," said a caller who suspected something.

"Sure. It is her engagement ring," replied the irrepressible small brother, who wasn't supposed to know what was going on.

Bright Boy.

Holding up a globe before a bright little boy in school the teacher asked what country is opposite to us on the globe. "I don't know, ma'am," was the reply. "Well, now," pursued the teacher, "if I were to bore a hole through the earth and you were to go in at this end, where would you come out?" "Out of the hole," replied the pupil, with an air of triumph.—New York Globe.

ALLIANCE ENDS

Rev. Canon Greene is re-elected President.

TORONTO, Feb. 28.—The concluding session of the Ontario Alliance convention was taken up chiefly with the report of the committee on political action which, among other recommendations, called upon the Alliance to continue in its support of the Rowell policy in the Legislature.

At the re-opening of the convention E. Fielding presented the report of the committee. Mr. Fielding and Ald. F. S. Spence made eloquent appeals to the convention to stand by Mr. Rowell.

G. E. Nicholson, of Chapleau, and W. J. Shields opposed the re-endorsation of the Rowell party, but the convention was overwhelmingly in favor of standing by the Liberal party. A clause of the report, however, commended the amendments to the license act enacted on the motion of Hon. W. J. Hanna last session prohibiting bottle selling in bar rooms, and limiting the hours of sale.

The proposed amendments to the license act which were tabled on Thursday were adopted yesterday. They called for the abolition of the three-fifths clause, the elimination of the word "knowingly" in the clause respecting minors, and applied for all legal holidays to be included in closed days.

An address on the progress of prohibition in the United States was given by Ernest H. Cherrington of the National Anti-Saloon League. He aroused enthusiasm by declaring that seventy-two per cent. of the United States was "dry" either by state prohibition or local option.

The convention elected the following officers by acclamation on the report of the nomination committee: Hon. president, Joseph Gibson; president, Rev. Canon Greene; vice-presidents, Theron Gibson; treasurer, A. O. Hogg; secretary, Rev. Ben H. Spence.

Theron Gibson, the retiring treasurer, was presented with an illuminated address and a carved mahogany desk.

She did not call his bluff,
But said: "I cannot do it, sir.
You are not fly enough."

Why He Went to Sea.

"He was cut out for a sailor."

"Who cut him out?"

"The iceman. You see, they were both going with the same girl."

READING AND ITS PLEASURSE

By F. M. Dela Fosse.

Fiction—Part One.

The question is constantly asked why no mention is made in these articles concerning present-day books, rather than those that are, as one friend kindly expressed it, "as defunct as Queen Anne." The answer is easy. The fundamental idea in writing these short articles has been to draw the attention of readers to the fact that there is a literature of the past as well as of the present, and that it is by no means necessary to feed oneself up on the fiction of the present day to the exclusion of the best books of the days that are gone by. The novels of forty years ago were on an infinitely higher plane than those of twenty years ago or of to-day, and although there is a seeming tendency at the present moment to hark back to the paths of that respectability that was so eminent a feature of the mid-Victorian novel, a long way has still to be travelled before the journey will be consummated. With many people the reading of fiction seems to be the be-all and end-all of their literary recreation. From one year's end to the other they will read absolutely nothing but fiction and read it in such a manner as leaves no impression whatever, good, bad or indifferent on their understandings. They simply read to kill time. This is said in no carping spirit, for a man has no more right to lay down peremptorily the law as to what another shall or shall not read than he has to say whom he shall or shall not marry. But literary preferences, like love preferences, are sometimes inexplicable, and it cannot be altogether wrong to throw light on the dark places of literature in order to bring into relief works that have been kicked into the gutter of oblivion by the hurrying feet of oncoming multitudes.

Pride in Literature.

It is right that we should bear in mind the great works of the past, if for no other reason than to sustain our pride in a literature that has no superior in the world, and to use it as an incentive, to continued effort and emulation.

It may be of interest to some readers to know by what steps the novel has arrived at its present status. It will suffice for our purpose to go back a mere matter of twenty years, to mark what tremendous strides the novel has made even in that period. In 1894 there were published in England no less than 184 three-volume novels. The price for a work of such a description was a guinea and a half, roughly speaking, about $6.25 of Canadian currency.

But there came a sudden and wonderful change. The circulating libraries refused to accept any more three-volume stories and this action proved a death knell to their publication. It did not take long to kill them off. In 1897 only four works of the description mentioned were issued in England. The short novel at once came into vogue and before anyone was aware of it a new era in literature had dawned. The shorter novel brought out a host of aspirants for public favor and the reduction of the purchase price from one and a half guineas to six shillings opened the floodgates to a public to whom the former high-prices had proved almost prohibitive.

Read and Forgotten.

Bulwer Lytton, writing in 1830, stated that novels were among the least ephemeral of reading matter. If he were living now he would have abundant evidence to cause him to change his opinion. The life of even the most popular novel at the present time can scarcely be reckoned at more than three months. Florence Barclay's and Gene Stratton Porter's books, by dint of advertising, sell in the hundreds of thousands, but no sooner is a book by either of these authors read, than it is as promptly forgotten. For there is really nothing much in such books. They are healthy in tone, but they offer no golden gleanings to be taken away and treasured up in the brain.. The booksellers, after they have sold all that their patrons require of the work of this or that author, usually have hundreds of volumes on their hands. A percentage of these circulate through the public libraries, and the balance find their way either to the Jews who buy them at about a penny a piece in order to peddle them through the country, or they are consigned to the pulp mills preparatory to reincarnation in some other form.

There was a tremendous run last year on "The Rosary," and "Laddie." To-day they are hardly ever asked for. The book, however, that has had the greatest run since the Library was opened is Winston Churchill's "The Inside of the Cup," and this shows that the taste of the public is being directed to something higher and more intellectual than is to be found in much that has proved tasteful reading in the past.

There is something pathetic in the short life of the novel and in the knowledge that even those few that win their way to the public heart comprise but a very small percentage of the number that are published every year.

Andrew Lang once estimated that over 100,000 people were engaged in the writing of fiction in England alone. The number must have greatly increased since his day and the statement of a publisher that he accepts on an average about 13 M.S.S. out of every 500 submitted would seem to prove that the writing of novels has degenerated from a business into a habit.

Why is it that publishers accept fiction for publication rather than works of a more solid description? Here again the answer is easy. In the first place novels are much cheaper to produce and certainly much easier to sell. "Literature is all very well for the aristocrats of the trade," said one publisher, "but it is impossible to build up a business on it." Publishers are in the business for a living not as benefactors of the public. They may be looked upon, however, as quite ready to supply the public with what it demands and this is why the literature of a country can always be regarded as a very fair index to the character of its inhabitants.

The Novel With a Purpose.

There is not the least doubt but that a change is impending, and that the novel of sickly sentimentality, or the one dealing with a certain phase of social life is giving place to the novel with a purpose. The spirit of unrest is abroad and books dealing with anything tending to the betterment of the masses are gaining daily in favor.

Serious objections were once urged against all books of fiction on the ground that they presented a very distorted view of life and created emotional unrest in young minds. For these reasons many parents forbade their children to read novels and clergymen openly condemned them. But this is all changed now. The greater novelists are discussed in schools and universities, and, even in lists of books required to be read for entrance examinations three or four novels are often to be found. Clubs study them and social movements are based upon and helped by them. These facts go to show that we are entering upon a higher and brighter plane and that the dreams of the pioneers of education for the masses are beginning to bear fruit in the demands for a purer and more purposeful literature.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Boracic Acid.

Boracic acid, or, to be correct, boric acid, is one of the most useful antiseptics for domestic use. Dusted on dry it may be applied to small areas of abraded skin, such as gravel rash, or to irritating surfaces. As a lotion for sores of almost every description a solution of a teaspoonful to a cupful of water may be applied upon lint covered with oiled silk. A gargle of the same strength is useful in certain inflammatory affections of the throat.

THE LATEST IN LOCKS.

And the Wonderful Key Combinations to Which They Respond.

The wonderful things that can be done with modern locks are demonstrated in a new skyscraper in Omaha. Every key supplied to tenants and employees will open many doors in the building, and all kinds of combinations have been made so that with one key a person can open all the doors he should have the right to open—and not another door will respond.

Each tenant, for instance, with the key to his office, can enter any washroom in the building, or he can enter the main door of the building at night—though in this instance his turning the key in the lock rings a bell to warn the watchman. The manager of the building has a master key for each floor, which will open every door on that floor. He has another master key that he can turn in any lock and thereby prevent that lock from responding to any other key until he wishes. This enables him, for instance, to lock out of his office a man who refuses to pay his rent or to close a man's office during his vacation.

A grand master key will open all the utility doors of the entire building, such as storerooms and washrooms. An account is kept of every key, and if the keys to any office are lost a part of the lock to that office can be quickly changed to require a new key, yet the altered lock will respond to the correct master keys and ordinary keys, but to no others.

To carry the plan to a climax a special type of key is used and blanks for that kind of key cannot be bought on the market.—Exchange.

RAISED THEIR KINGS' PAY.

One of Them Had Even Threatened to Go Out on Strike.

The increase in the cost of living has made all sorts of people demand higher wages. This movement has extended to kings.

The kaiser has recently in response to his repeated requests had his civil list raised from $4,000,000 to $4,750,000 a year. The king of Bavaria has just succeeded in getting his salary raised from $1,050,000 to $1,350,000, much against the wishes of his subjects.

The kings of Saxony, Wurttemberg and Baden have also evidently been feeling the pinch of the price of bacon, as they, too, have managed to get substantial increases of pay.

Royalties' rises are seldom given graciously by their subjects, the people who pay.

A strike of kings is as yet unknown, however, though something remarkably like one occurred in Siam last autumn, when the king openly threatened to put his country to the inconvenience of having their sovereign spend a year's holiday in Europe, doing no work and appointing no representative, unless his wishes in the matter of increased taxation were met more willingly.—London Stray Stories.

Something of a Cynic.

There is an amusing reference in the present Lord Tennyson's biography of his father to Frederick Tennyson, a number of whose poems have just been published for the first time. "Frederick Tennyson described himself as 'a person of gloomy insignificance and unsocial monomania.' Society he dismissed contemptuously as 'snookdom,' and likened it to a street row. The 'high jinks of the high nosed' (to use another phrase of his) angered him, as did all persons who 'go about with well cut trousers and ill arranged ideas.'"

No "Bone in Her Teeth."

When the new Dreadnought Texas, the largest and perhaps the fastest of our battleships, had its trial off the Maine coast its bow threw up a dark wave on each side, instead of the usual mass of white spray that gives rise to the nautical expression, "Carrying a bone in her teeth." The difference is owing to the cycloidal curve of the bow, a form of construction that largely reduces the resistance of the water. Naval experts believe that it will permit greater speed in vessels of the battleship class.—Youth's Companion.

Sticks to Her Village.

Wollstein, a village near Cassel, in Prussia, has been abandoned by its inhabitants on the ground that life there is hopeless. The soil is sterile, and the authorities refused to link the village to the outer world by rail. Only one inhabitant remains, Frau Hoeft, a shepherdess, who is eighty years old and declares that she will die in the village where she was born.

Garden of Titans.

Charles Frederick Holder, in Travel, describes a little known region of California as the "Garden of Titans." The Colorado "Garden of the Gods," he asserts, sinks into insignificance beside the new wonderland.

In France there is one saloon to every eighty-two inhabitants.

NAT. C. GOODWIN MADE MANY LAUGH

Nat C. Goodwin and his company in "Never Say Die," pleased a large audience at the Grand Opera House last night. "Never Say Die" abounds with humor, the piece is superbly staged and the supporting company gives Mr. Goodwin splendid support. The audience applauded and smiled at the first appearance of Mr. Goodwin and laughed continuously till the curtain went down at the close of the third act.

Mr. Walter Cluxton, who is an old Peterborough boy, has an important role, as Dr. Galesby and he acquits himself in a highly creditable manner.

LONDON'S LONE FARMHOUSE

Relic of the Past in the Heart of the City to Be Razed.

London's last farmhouse, which stands within a mile of Charing Cross, is about to be pulled down, and with it will disappear one of the most interesting landmarks of the metropolis. So far as can be ascertained, the house was built about 1770, but records show that the farm was there much earlier, for the London Gazette of Oct. 5, 1683, contains reference to Christopher Capper, who grazed cattle on the land, which was known as Capper's farm. The house was called Cantelowe Close.

The Cappers were tenants of the Dukes of Bedford, and their farm lands stretched northward to Tottenham Court road and were bounded on the east by what is now Bloomsbury square. The original lease was granted by Gertrude, dowager Duchess of Bedford, and it contained a clause that the tenant should provide sheds for at least forty cows. This same clause stands in the lease today, although the time of keeping cattle in Bloomsbury is far past.

The farm changed hands about the middle of the eighteenth century and came into possession of the Misses Capper, two maiden ladies, who were evidently of peculiar habits. Kites and bathing appear to have been the bane of their lives. Whenever a boy was seen flying a kite one of these women would, it seems, mount a horse and, armed with a large pair of shears, set out to cut the kite strings. The other sister's specialty was to seize the clothes of the boys who trespassed on their premises to bathe.

But farming was soon to be crowded out of the Tottenham Court road district by the tradesmen who rode or drove in to business daily from their country homes. More recently the farmhouse was built around and hidden by shops.—London Cor. New York Sun.

Motor Luxury.

Every motor show is the occasion for an exhibition of luxury gone mad. While we are told, on the one hand, that this is the age of much cheaper motoring, we are confronted every year with exhibits of ridiculously costly coachwork and fittings, designed, one would imagine, for the pampered and cockered bodies of degenerates. These things bring motoring into disrepute. There is a limit of comely comfort and convenience. When the limit is passed it becomes mere vulgar ostentation.—London Saturday Review.

Guarding the Shamrock.

Special precautions are being taken by Sir Thomas Lipton to guard the secrets of the new Shamrock which he is having built to race for the America's cup in 1914. A large shed with a glass roof has been erected, and everything is under lock and key. No workman can enter the shed without passing a special watchman. As the builder of the yacht remarks, "A bridge player does not show his hand to a keen opponent."—London Tit-Bits.

Fireproof Films Wanted.

The French government has forbidden the use of celluloid moving picture films and ordered that only films that are not inflammable be used. Consequently the moving picture men are all in the air, as, according to Thomas A. Edison, there is no other material known that can be used in making such films.

SPECIAL CORNER FOR AFTER DINNER READERS

THE LYNDHURST AFFAIR

The Story of a Son's Sacrifice

It was on a crisp February morning that the dreadful news ran from lip to lip until the whole village of Lyndhurst was aroused from its drowsy existence.

On the outskirts of the village was the Blatcher place. It had been the show place of the town. The house stood well back from the street, with handsome maples and elms surrounding it. It had now long been vacant and was falling to decay. No one ever entered the grounds except boys, who are proverbially fond of deserted places.

A murder had been committed. Boys seeking to detach an enormous icicle that hung from the roof of the dilapidated house had been horrified to see the body of an old man sitting in an upper room.

"And there ain't nobody lived in the house for twenty years!" cried Simon Dale, the postmaster, as he led a curious crowd up the street toward the house. "There ain't been a soul there since old Philo Blatcher died and his son, young Philo, went to Asia or Africa or some other outlandish place. I expect young Philo's dead long ago, but there ain't nobody to take interest enough to find out, not being another relative. If he is dead I expect the property 'll revert to the state."

"But what about the old man that Billy Breen saw through the winder?" insisted Asa Fitch. "How'd he come inside?"

"Mebbe some tramp that's been housing there. 'Twon't be no mystery when the constable gets around. Here he comes now."

The constable was the postmaster's brother, and so these two by right of high office in the village took temporary charge of the case.

Constable Ben Dale smashed a windowpane and gained entrance to the big house that had stood in the midst of large grounds, untenanted, unvisited, for twenty years. The trees and shrubs had been untrimmed and grew rankly, almost hiding the house from the street.

When the constable unfastened the front door it was to admit a chosen few. How Miss Alvina Petty managed to slip inside no one ever knew. But there she was, the only woman among half a dozen men, who tramped up the carpeted stairs, stirring the dust of years into a choking cloud.

"'Tain't no sight for a woman," protested Constable Ben as he paused, with a hand on the knob of the front chamber door.

"Awful tender with wimmen all of a sudden," sneered Alvina. "Everybody knows it sickens you to kill a chicken, and you let your wife do it, but she never eats chicken because she has to kill 'em. I guess I can stand anything you can, Ben Dale."

Somebody tittered, and Ben Dale opened the door and entered the room.

Billy Breen had reported truly.

In one corner of the dusty room was a handsome four post bedstead whose silken covers had been tossed back as if the bed had been recently slept in.

Beside the empty fireplace was a large chintz covered chair, and in this chair was the dead body of a white haired man. His head drooped to one side as if he slept, but there was a rigidity about his attitude that hinted at something else.

One hand hung over the arm of the chair, and the outside of the hand was streaked with blood. On the floor was a little wet spot.

Constable Dale touched his finger to the spot.

"Blood," he whispered hoarsely; "wet blood! It was done last night!"

A shudder ran through the crowd. Then the postmaster nudged somebody, and they all turned and looked at Alvina Petty, who was trembling like a leaf and staring at the face of the dead man.

"I said it wa'n't no place for wimmen!" ejaculated Ben Dale as he straightened himself.

"Who is it?" whispered Alvina weirdly. "Who do you say it is, Ben Dale?"

For the first time the constable looked closely at the man in the chair. Then the color forsook his fresh face, and he almost reeled.

"Good heavens, boys—it's—it's old Philo Blatcher himself!"

"So 'tis!" breathed the postmaster.

"But we buried him twenty years ago!" protested somebody.

Then Alvina's voice, curiously repressed to a whisper, caused them all to turn and stare at the little spinster who once had been known as the prettiest girl in Lyndhurst, but now, with her white hair and her pale, wrinkled face, looked older than her forty-five years.

"This isn't old Philo Blatcher," whispered Alvina, still staring at the man. "It is young Philo, his son."

"Young Philo? You're crazy!" cried Ben Dale, pushing forward. "Why, young Philo had black hair and"—

"It is young Philo grown old," broke in Alvina. "I ought to know!"

Silence followed her outburst. One man whispered to another that Alvina had once been engaged to young Philo Blatcher and ever since his disappearance twenty years before she had acted queerly. Young Philo could not be more than fifty now, and this man looked much older.

Alvina was speaking again.

"He had come back home again after years of wandering, and on the very first night—see, the bed had not been slept in for many years, but he was going to use it—on the very first night he was killed—killed by an enemy. Some Chinese tracked him home and killed him!"

"You're crazy as a loon, Alvina!" cried Ben loudly, as he grasped her shoulder.

"I'm not. I've got eyes and common sense and a heart!" cried Alvina passionately. "See the blood on his hand. There is a wound in his shoulder here. In the side of the chair is a knife. See the carved ivory handle? It's a foreign knife! Where has he been lately—China? Maybe it's a Chinese knife! Look out in the snow for the tracks of Chinese shoes. Find out if anybody has seen a Chinese around. Hurry, Ben Dale, or he will get away!"

So great was Alvina's energy that all within the room were imbued with her enthusiasm. In a moment they had scattered and left Alvina alone with the man in the chair.

When she was alone Alvina went and knelt there and said little hushed words that no one could hear, that no one ought to hear save the man for whom they were intended, and she thought his ears were closed to her voice forever.

But suddenly he sighed deeply.

Alvina screamed, but no one heard her.

Again he sighed, and this time Alvina did not scream. She bent close to him and saw his eyelids flutter. Then she flew for restoratives. It is doubtful if any one save Alvina knew where old Philo Blatcher had kept his Scotch whisky and Holland gin and Jamaica rum in the little corner cupboard in the west parlor.

Alvina knew, and she brought a bottle and a crystal glass and gave the man in the chair to drink of the fiery liquid, holding his gray head against her breast as she coaxed him.

Presently he opened his eyes and smiled at her.

"I almost knew you'd be waiting for me, Alvina," he said weakly, for it was indeed young Philo come home after his long exile.

They talked for a long time, and Philo sat up in his chair and Alvina dressed the deep wound in his left arm.

When Ben Dale and the others came trooping back, they paused outside the closed door. Within the room they could hear Alvina's voice talking. They heard her address some one as "Philo," and Ben Dale shook his round head.

"Crazy as a loon," he told them, "although she was bright enough about guessing it was a Chinaman who done the job. Wonder what she'll say when I tell her we found him asleep in the old mill and how, when we tried to get him, he jumped into the river and was drowned. She'll go plumb crazy!"

But they were the ones who acted demented when they opened the door, for there sat Alvina Petty, pink with excitement, talking animatedly to the erstwhile corpse, who was sipping a glass of hot toddy as calm as you please.

Alvina had kindled a fire from the contents of the wood box beside the hearth, and she had heated a pannikin of water. There they were as sociable as anything and looking rather annoyed at the intrusion of Ben Dale and his companions.

"I thought you was dead," said Ben Dale when, after a hurried retreat, he ventured to put his head into the room.

"Not quite," said young Philo grimly, "although that Chinaman almost made a job of it—robbed me of $500 in Shanghai and then when I prosecuted him followed me here to get his revenge. Has any one seen him?"

"We saw him, and then he went under the ice in the river. With the channel flowing swift, he must be down to Rivermouth by this time," said Ben Dale grimly. "Guess he won't commit no more murders."

If the report of the murder aroused the good people of Lyndhurst it is certain that the discovery that it was not a murder at all, but that Philo Blatcher had returned home to marry Alvina Petty and open the old house that had been closed so many years, caused greater excitement.

Philo soon recovered from his wound, but he was very grateful to Billy Breen, whose adventurous spirit had been the cause of Philo's discovery. He might have died from loss of blood and his body have lain undiscovered for months had not Billy's hunt for icicles resulted in the finding of the man in the front room. So Philo Blatcher rewarded Billy Breen in a most substantial manner.

No one ever knew why Philo Blatcher had remained abroad for twenty years after his father's death; no one knew save Alvina, and she never told the story of the son who had made a great sacrifice to save the father's honor and that it had taken Philo twenty years to make restitution for his father's shortcomings in Lyndhurst. Now Philo had come home to receive his own meed of happiness.

So now Alvina reigns in the old Blatcher homestead. Instead of being the village seamstress she is the first lady in the village, and to the romance of the affair is added the mystery of the revengeful Chinaman who had crossed the ocean and a continent to take a life and who in the end lost his own.

But to Philo Blatcher the best part of the story is that of Alvina's unwavering faith in him and the certainty that some day he would return to claim her.

Shattered His Idol.

Swinburne's admiration for the scenery inspired the walk which every morning, wet or fine, he took across Putney common. It led also to visitors to see the poet walk.

One modest admirer, says the London Chronicle, traveled far to catch a glimpse of Swinburne in the flesh and, having read of the poet's habits, visited the hostelry at which he called each morning in passing. There sat the literary demigod reading the Pink 'Un, a flashy, low grade paper. But worse followed.

Said the pilgrim to the girl behind the bar, "I suppose you know that is Swinburne, the great poet?" Came the answer: "Yes; I've heard so. But he isn't much good to us. He only drinks beer."

He Missed It.

After the services were over one of the congregation turned to his wife and said, "On my way to church I picked up a button and put it in my change pocket, where I had a quarter."

"Gracious, my dear!" anticipated his wife, very much horrified. "And you dropped it into the collection basket by mistake?"

"No, confound it," replied her husband, "I put in the quarter!"—Magazine of Fun.

BEETLES IN PANTOMIME.

Ingenious Trainer Has Taught Them To Play For Movies.

What do you say to a pantomime acted entirely by insects? Such a performance would be impossible, of course, on an ordinary stage; but it is being done, and beautifully done, too, on the cinema screen.

The actors and actresses, principal "boy," principal "girl," and all, are just beetles—Prof. Lozshki's trained beetles—and the little creatures display almost human intelligence.

There is, for instance, a skating scene, in which they cut better figures than the average man. Santa Claus, a huge stag beetle, is a quaint figure, who climbs down a big Christmas tree and raises smaller trees in the wilds, which he loads up with wonderful presents.

The beetles all receive gifts, and there is no grumbling or trouble except when the pantomime demon attempts to steal a Christmas cracker which a little mamma beetle is endeavoring to carry home to her baby beetles. Then follows a terrific struggle, the bonbon explodes, and the two are blown to pieces.

These performing beetles, it should be explained, are specially trained for cinema work by Prof. Lozshki, a Russian, who has spent the greater part of his life in studying the insects.

He claims that he has found them to possess not only great intelligence but considerable histrionic ability, and, strange though the assertion may sound, few people will be inclined to contradict it, once they have seen one of his wonderful insect dramas performed upon the screen.

In one of these, entitled, "A Drama of the Middle Ages," whole armies of beetles, clothed in quaint old uniforms and carrying various mediaeval weapons, march and counter-march in the most natural manner. They erect scaling ladders, storm a castle, and fight fiercely on the battlements for the mastery. On the screen the insects are magnified to the size of real soldiers, and the effect is startling and almost uncanny.

In yet another of the Lozshki photo plays dragon-flies and daddy-long-legs take part; but these, the professor explains, are mere "supers." He relies upon his beetles for all the principal parts.

They are, however, not ordinary beetles. On the contrary, they have been trained from stock carefully chosen and cultivated. Lozshki started as a "beetle fancier" away back in the year 1881, and the present generation of beetles that he is now experimenting with is the 466th in direct descent from the original parent stock.

For the life of a beetle, it must be remembered, is short.

DEPUTATION WANTS GOVERNMENT TO ENTER OCEAN FREIGHT TRADE

In Reply to Request of Associated Boards of Trade, Millers, Farmers and Lumbermen, Premier Borden Suggests That Co-operative Effort Should First Be Attempted Instead of Forcing Paternalism.

OTTAWA, Feb. 28. — The ocean combine and the high freight rates upon traffic between Canada and Britain and especially the discriminatory rates against Canadian flour were brought to the attention of the Government yesterday by a large deputation of business men representing the Associated Boards of Trade, the Dominion Millers' Association, the millers of Canada generally, and the farming and lumbering interests of Ontario. They asked the Government to expend at once $5,000,000 in the construction of a Government-owned and Government-operated steamship line on the north Atlantic. The deputation was received by the Prime Minister, Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance, and Hon. Martin Burrell, Minister of Agriculture.

D. B. Wood, of Hamilton, representing the Associated Boards of Trade, presented in trenchant form the various points made in the printed memorial submitted.

Hon. Nelson Monteith, Peter Christie, ex-M.P.; J. D. Allan, of Toronto; W. A. Black, of Montreal, and C. B. Watts, of Toronto, also delivered addresses.

With regard to the north Atlantic shipping combine, the speakers said that since 1909 and more especially since 1911, that ocean rates upon nearly all commodities had been increased 40, 50, and 75 per cent. The rate upon wheat had been increased by five cents per bushel but the increase in the freight on flour was proportionately greater. It was evidently the policy of the ocean combine to carry wheat instead of flour. It was pointed out that a few years ago the difference in the rates between wheat and flour was only 2 1-2 cents per hundred pounds but now it amounted to 8 1-2 per hundred pounds. In short a discriminatory toll over and above the high rate charged for wheat was imposed upon flour amounting to 17 cents per barrel.

J. D. Allan, of Toronto, presented some startling evidence regarding ocean rates. He produced bills of lading for goods purchased in Leipsic, four hundred miles inland from Hamburg, from points in Italy and even in China, and by comparison with bills of lading from Liverpool and London demonstrated that the same merchandise could be brought from London, Liverpool or any British port. The scheme was to absorb the British preference.

Mr. Allan went on to show that the Russian Government owned and operated steamers plying between St. Petersburg in the summer and between other Russian ports all the year round and British ports. The vessels were of about 4,000 tons burden and cost $250,000 each. Such vessels could be built for about the same price by the Dominion Government and operated on the north Atlantic. Even though it would cost twice as much to build similar vessels in Canada, the Government could by an expenditure of $5,000,000 equip a fleet of ten vessels with an aggregate tonnage of 60,000 tons capable of transporting millions of bushels of wheat and flour every year from Canada to England and bring back British goods at a fair rate.

In the discussion that followed the Prime Minister asked whether these vessels were to be run at a profit, he suggested that some private company enter the field.

In the discussion that followed the Prime Minister asked whether these vessels were to be run at a profit or a loss. On being told at a profit, he suggested that some private company enter the field.

Meeting this suggestion, it was contended that the combine would destroy any private company by ruinous competition or force it to surrender.

The Prime Minister said that there could be no doubt that ocean freight rates had increased to a marked extent in the past few years, and there seemed to be good reason to believe that the rise had followed upon and was a consequence of a combination between the shipping companies. The first question should be directed to the capitalization of these companies, their percentage of profit, and the like. True, their rates had increased, but so, perhaps, had their expenses, the cost of coal, labor, etc. If they were making undue profits it might be that the millers, or the millers and farmers in combination, might co-operate in forming a steamship line and in patronizing the same. There was great pressure brought upon the Government to enlarge its sphere of activity, and if every request of this kind was granted we should soon have the most paternal Government on earth.

The deputation submitted seevral printed memorials, and were assured by the Prime Minister that their requests had been noted and would receive careful consideration.

Western College Merger.

CALGARY, Feb. 28. — A merger of Western Canada College and the University of Calgary will probably be consummated in a short time.

The board of governors of the university appointed a committee to confer with a like committee to be appointed by the board of Western Canada College.

It is understood that the matter of a merger has been considered by the college board and that they look upon it in a favorable light.

WETS ADD TO MAJORITY

They Now Have Total Lead of 82 Votes.

WELLAND, Feb. 27. — Evidence was produced yesterday in the Canada Temperance Act election scrutiny by the temperance people in support of their assertion that they were dishonestly deprived of a verdict in their favor. The drys are endeavoring to establish the correctness of the original count from the polling subdivisions where the "wets" now show considerable gains. During the examination by W. E. Raney, K.C., for the temperance people, Judge Livingstone remonstrated, claiming that too many assertions of manipulation were being made. It is expected that as a result of the evidence taken yesterday the ballots which had been numbered in three polls where there was a dry majority, will be rejected. In that case the wet majority would be increased by 98. The scrutiny will be continued to-day.

DISTRIBUTING FAMILY.

Kaiser Sending His Sons To Various Parts of Empire.

BERLIN, Feb. 27.—Another step was taken by Emperor William yesterday in his policy of distributing his sons throughout Germany. It was officially announced that Prince Eitel Friedrich was to be appointed in the autumn commander of the king's mounted rifles at Posen, where he will be the first resident of the imperial palace.

The crown price is on the staff in Berlin. Prince Adalbert is a naval officer at Kiel. Prince August William is a civil official at Nauen, and Prince Joachim is serving with his regiment at Cassel.

Conciliation Efforts Fail.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 27.— Unable to reach an agreement on a new wage scale to take the place of the present one which expires March 31, the joint conference of operators and miners from Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, which has been in session since Feb. 10, yesterday adjourned sine die.

It was announced that this action does not necessarily mean a strike.

Officer Killed In Duel.

METZ, Germany, Feb. 27.—Lieut. Haage, of the 98th Infantry Regiment, stationed here, was killed yesterday in a duel with Lieut. von La Valette Saint George, a comrade of the same regiment. The encounter was brought about owing to a "gross insult," according to the official report, which does not say who was the insulter, or give any other details.

LIVE WIRE VICTIMS.

Quickness In Rescuing Them From Contact Is Essential.

For his own benefit and that of his comrades the scout should know how to avoid accidents from electricity. The third rail is always dangerous, so do not touch it. Swinging wires of any kind may somewhere in their course be in contact with live wires, so they should not be touched.

A person in contact with a wire or rail carrying an electric current will transfer the current to the rescuer. Therefore he must not touch the unfortunate victim unless his own body is thoroughly insulated. The rescuer must act very promptly, for the danger to the person in contact is much increased the longer the electric current is allowed to pass through his body. If possible the rescuer should insulate himself by covering his hands with a mackintosh, rubber sheeting, several thicknesses of silk or even dry cloth. In addition, he should if possible complete his insulation by standing on a dry board, a thick piece of paper or even a dry coat. Rubber gloves and rubber shoes or boots are still safer, but they cannot usually be procured quickly.

If a live wire is under a person and the ground is dry it will be perfectly safe to stand on the ground and pull him off the wire with the bare hands, care being taken to touch only his clothing, and this must not be wet.

A live wire lying on a patient may be flipped off with safety with a dry board or stick. In removing the live wire from the person or the person from the wire do this with one motion, as rocking him to and fro on the wire will increase shock and burn.

A live wire may be safely cut with an ax or hatchet with dry wooden handle. The electric current may be short circuited by dropping a crowbar or poker on the wire. This must be dropped on the side from which the current is coming and not on the farther side, as the latter will not short circuit the current before it has passed through the body of the person in contact. Drop the metal bar; do not place it on the wire or you will then be made a part of the short circuit and receive the current of electricity through your body.—From "Boy Scouts of America."

WILD SLIDE DOWN THE SNOW SLOPE OF A MOUNTAIN PEAK

Perilous Experience of An Explorer Who Was Imprisoned a Whole Night in a Treacherous Crevasse in a Glacier on the Brink of a Gaping Chasm.

Some thrilling experiences once befell Frederick Chamberlin while he was exploring the Alps. In the Wide World Magazine he writes of an adventure that befell him on the afternoon of a September day when he was descending the snow slope of a mountain:

"Suddenly I found myself in front of a particularly nasty serac, or ice ridge, that gave very little foothold. The surface was not broken and crumbly, but just smooth, treacherous ice. However, I was not going to be daunted, so I wormed my way up and was about to descend the other side when without warning my feet shot from under me, and I started careering down the slope at break neck speed.

"Down I slid, straight through a funnel shaped hole into a partly formed crevasse. I brought up sharply against a small bar of ice that only just prevented me from continuing my headlong career into a gaping chasm below.

"For a few seconds I lay half stunned; then I carefully got on my feet, felt my body all over to see that no bones had been broken and looked round for my ice ax, but that had disappeared.

"I saw a slight crack in the surface of one of the sides, and I tried to draw myself up, but my fingers could not get a firm hold in the slippery ice, and I was soon forced to give that up. Then I tried lying flat on my back in the funnel through which I had entered my prison and, firmly planting my knees against its sloping roof, endeavored to work myself back. Here, too, I failed.

"Being by this time quite desperate, I took out my little pocket knife to try to cut steps in the slope. My still torn fingers let the knife slip at the first attempt, and, although I groped about for a long time, I failed to recover it.

"My last chance had gone with the knife. The darkness creeping on and enveloping everything, the dead silence, the bitter cold, were all beginning to take effect, and I groaned at the prospect of the long night in front of me. I dared not lean too far back, for that slender bar of ice might give way. I called out loudly at intervals, but the sound was stifled by the overhanging walls.

"Soon it was pitch dark, and to while away the time and keep my spirits up I loudly sang a popular American song. But soon my thoughts became gloomy again. There was no sound but an eerie drip, drip, down below, and sometimes the grinding, tearing, booming collapse of a whole serac would set my nerves quivering. I shivered incessantly, for I was wet through from constant contact with the ice, and the night seemed interminable.

"When I was on the point of utter collapse the first gray daylight mercifully began to filter into my prison. Now I must make by last desperate attempt to escape.

"As a forlorn hope I looked about again for my knife. My eyes caught a glint on a fan shaped piece of ice, and there, just over the dark chasm, where providentially it had fallen the night before, I spied it. Determined not to lose it again, I attached it to my wrist by a piece of string and started digging at the steep ice slope.

"Three and a half hours I slaved in the ice cavern, and then was able to crawl up, digging my toes in at every step, till I could draw myself up into comparative safety on the ledge above. I lay there, gasping for a few seconds; then, taking the greatest precautions all the while, I passed between the remaining crevasses and at last descended safely to the firm rocks."

Reading Advertisements.

It is not alone the people who are interested in trade who read advertisements. Few people nowadays pay either newspapers or magazines who do not read them closely worded and well illustrated bids for business. If you should ask the average person just why he or she is in the habit of looking over the advertisements, the chances are that you would get no direct and satisfactory answer, but the real fact is that subconsciously the public has come to regard what appears in the advertising columns as interesting reading matter.—Portland (Ore.) ELECTRIFIED CELLULOID.

Pulling a Couple of Strips Between the Fingers Changes Them.

If you will take two thin lengths of celluloid, put them in contact and then suddenly and rapidly pull them between your fingers you will observe they both have become electrified—not only on their outside surfaces, where the friction of your fingers caused a negative electrification, but also on the inner surface of the celluloid.

The strange part about this is that one of the inner surfaces of the piece is positively charged and the other one is negatively charged. If one of them is slightly curved during the friction the convex one will be positively charged and the concave sided one will be negatively charged.

It seems, therefore, to depend upon whether the surface is concave or whether it is convex—depressed or expanded—to produce negative or positive electricity. Even the most minute, imperceptible curvature is sufficient to give the expected result. It also is impossible to pull the strips of celluloid through the fingers without producing such strong electrification that one piece will support the other.

Even the vapor pressure of liquids is stronger at the convex surface than at the concave. If electrons are considered as particles of gas dissolved in solids—as they once were—or as negative electricity, there will be a greater tendency for the electrons to escape from the convex side, which therefore will be left positively charged. This also is in perfect accord with the latest researches upon electrons.

Interesting experiments can be made by following the above directions. Celluloid has peculiar properties for tests.—New York Press.

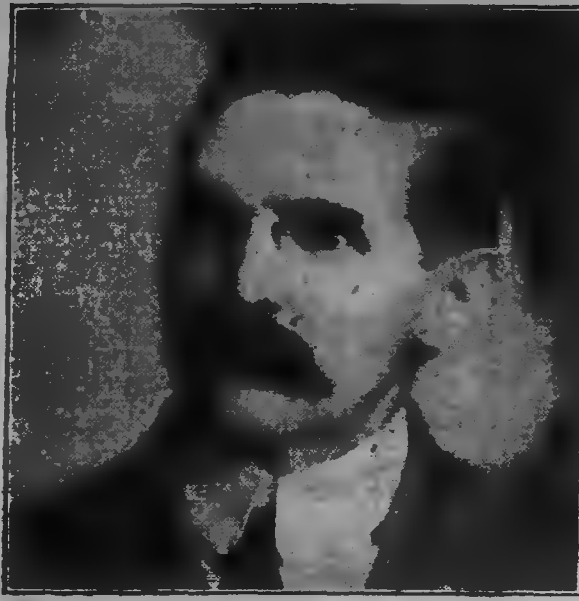
TORTURE RELIEVED RHEUMATISM CURED.

Superintendent Of Sunday School In Toronto Says "I Am Pleased To Tell You That I Am Cured", After Taking "Fruit-a-tives".



R. A. WAUGH, Esq.

55 Dovercourt Road, TORONTO, Oct. 1st, 1913.

"For a long time, I have thought of writing you regarding what I term a most remarkable cure effected by your remedy "Fruit-a-tives". You may publish this letter, whole or in part, if you wish to do so. I have lived in this city for more than 12 years and am well known.

I suffered from Rheumatism, especially in my hands. I have spent a lot of money without any good results, until I used "Fruit-a-tives". I have taken "Fruit-a-tives" for 18 months now, and am pleased to tell you that I am cured. All the enlargement has not left my hands and perhaps never will, but the soreness is all gone and I can do any kind of work. I have gained 35 pounds in 18 months. I am very grateful for what "Fruit-a-tives" has done for me".

R. A. WAUGH.

Rheumatism of any kind—whether in hands, arms, feet, legs, joints or back—is caused by uric acid in the blood. Uric acid is formed when there is any stomach trouble, coupled with any disturbance of the kidneys, bowels or skin, which prevent these organs from properly ridding the system of waste matter. This waste, or urea, acted upon by an acid condition of the stomach, forms uric in the blood. The only way that Rheumatism, Sciatica and Lumbago can be cured, is to cure the kidneys, regulate the bowels and improve the digestion and skin action. "Fruit-a-tives" cures Rheumatism because this wonderful fruit medicine gives new strength and vitality to the stomach, liver, bowels, kidneys and skin—purifies the blood and prevents the formation of an excess of uric acid. Rheumatism is as tubborn disease, but "Fruit-a-tives" will always cure it when faithfully used according to directions.

HANDLING THE DOUKHOBORS.

B. C. Now Falls Heir To Troublesome Russian Immigrants.

The invasion of the Kootenay district by a large colony of Doukhobors about a year ago has caused the Provincial Government no little trouble. The reason is that the Doukhobors refuse to recognize municipal or provincial authority, and take their orders from their leader, Peter Veregin. The Government appointed a commission last spring to inquire into conditions in the Doukhobor settlement, and while an exhaustive report was made, it did little in changing the situation. Not very long ago, the death of a woman in the colony brought matters to a head. The "Douks" buried her and made no report of her death. The Attorney-General's Department ordered an inquest, but not one of the settlement would say a word. All professed the most profound ignorance of the English tongue. The inquest had to be abandoned. The authorities recognize that to put any of the band in jail is simply to convert them into heroes or martyrs.

The Doukhobors ignore other statutes such as the Noxious Weeds Act, the return of births, marriages and deaths, and generally profess an intention of going just what they please. The property of the colony is held under the communal system. Hon. W. J. Bowser, the Attorney-General of British Columbia, in a recent speech in Toronto, discussed the matter, and promised to bring down legislation at the present session of the Legislature which would teach the "Douks" a much needed lesson. He said he did not propose to make martyrs of them, but at any infringement of the statutes a liberal fine would be bestowed, and this would be collected from the community as a whole. If one fine was not enough, other heavier ones would be imposed. He believed this would make them change their attitude toward the majesty of the law.

Absentee Husbands.

In an aggravated form, the problem of the husband in Canada who is unwilling or unable to support his wife and family in Great Britain, is being experienced this year. Boards of guardians in many parts of the country have to grant relief to maintain those left behind, and there as much grumbling.

It is only within the last few years that this question has become prominent. Last year it will be remembered a delegation from Scotland went to Canada to trace errant husbands. It was successful in bringing a number of men to their senses, and the consequent publicity seemed to have the effect of diminishing the number of cases in the north. Something of the kind is evidently needed elsewhere, and apparently will come.

The standing committee on emigration of the Royal Colonial Institute is conducting enquiries in this matter and proposes to communicate with the British and Canadian Governments with the object of securing concerted action for the punishment of men guilty of desertion.

Less Beef Exported.

Canadian exports of beef to England are dwindling and are likely to do so to a greater extent, according to J. E. Ray, trade commissioner, in his report to the Trade and Commerce Department recently. He says in part:—

"What little hope there was of receipts from this source attaining some degree of importance has been dissipated by the opening of the United States market for the free importation of meat and cattle, as a result of which large numbers of live stock have been taken across the American border. In 1913, only 328 tons were received in this country from Canada, as compared with 583 tons in 1912."

The report reveals also a decline in the imports of cheese from Canada during 1913, in comparison with 1912, of 58,802 cwt., and in comparison with 1911, 179,507 cwt. Butter imports from Canada last year declined by 163,670 cwt.

Lesson IX.—First Quarter, For March 1, 1914.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Luke xii, 13-34. Memory Verse, 15—Golden Text, Luke xii, 34—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

In the last verse of the previous lesson He said, "The Holy Ghost shall teach you." On the last night that He was with them, ere He suffered, He said, "The Comforter, the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, He shall teach you all things. He will guide you into all truth. He will show you things to come. He shall testify of Me (John xiv, 26; xv, 26; xvi, 13), and many other things He said of the Spirit of Truth. But we are blind and deaf and so slow to perceive or hear spiritual things.

Well might He say of each of us, "I have written to him the great things of my law, but they were counted as a strange thing" (Hos. viii, 12). When He spoke of false teaching even the disciples thought He referred to bread for the body, and now here is a man, one of the company, so little impressed by the great truths of our last lesson and the solemn things of the future that he is more concerned about a bit of earthly property.

Is it not so still, and are not men, with rare exceptions, so occupied with things temporal that they can scarce find time to give a thought to things eternal? How weighty and heart searching the Master's words, "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth" (verse 15). Since "covetousness is idolatry" (Col. iii, 5), how much we need the words, "Having food and raiment, let us be therewith content." "Trust not in uncertain riches, but in the Living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy" (I Tim. vi, 6-8, 17).

How aptly and forcibly our Lord set forth the truth in the parable of the rich poor man who could only talk with himself about the smallness of his barns and the abundance of his fruits and his goods, and if he had larger barns what an easy, merry time he might have for many years to come. He seemed to have no thought of God, who had caused his ground to bring forth plentifully, nor of the poor, with whom he might share his goods. There was no one to be considered but himself. He knew nothing of the love of God and therefore had no love for God nor for his fellow men. "But God said unto him, Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee" (verse 20).

Now what were barns and fruits and goods to him? He had to leave all and went out of the world poor indeed, like the rich man of Luke xvi, 19-20. How often we read of one who died at his desk in the office or sitting in his home or taken by an accident, and the words come to mind, "Thy soul is required of thee," and the great question is, Was he saved? and then, Was he rich toward God? It is possible to be saved as by fire and have no rewards for service, no crowns to cast at His feet (I Cor. iii, 11-15; Rev. iv, 10).

A true believer may still be so blinded by the god of this world as to fail to see the advantage of treasure in heaven and so lay up treasure for himself in this world which must all be left behind when he is called out of the world. From verse 22 He speaks to His disciples, truly saved men, all but Judas Iscariot (John xiii, 10, 11), and teaches them that since they are now children of God there is no room for anxiety about food or raiment. The kingdom is made sure to them (verse 32), and if they will now live to hasten its coming by living only unto God and winning souls to Him He will see that all things necessary for this life are given to them.

The teaching of verse 31 and Matt. vi, 33, is not that of seeking our souls' salvation, for the words were spoken to saved men, but it teaches saved people that as such their first aim in life should be the coming of the kingdom for which we pray when we say from the heart, "Our Father, who art in heaven. * * * Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as in heaven." There is no use talking of extending the kingdom, for there is no kingdom to extend. It was at hand when our Lord was here, in their very midst in the person of Himself, the King, but when they cried "We have no king but Caesar" and killed their Messiah they caused the kingdom to be postponed till He shall come again.

See carefully Luke xix, 11-15; Matt. xxiii, 39; Acts iii, 20, 21. We are in the age between the postponement of the kingdom and its coming at the second coming of Christ, the mystery hid in God from the beginning of the world, but specially revealed to Paul (Eph. iii, 9-11; Rom. xvi, 25-27). Seeking the kingdom seems to me to mean "counting all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord" (Phil. iii, 8) and making the supreme object in all church life, social life and business life, to make known in all nations as quickly as possible His great salvation for "whosoever will" that His body, the church, may be completed, this age end and the kingdom come.

Thus we may learn restful lessons from the ravens and the lilies and become rich toward God. As one has said, "Make thou His service thy delight; He'll make thy wants His care." It is no part of His service to entertain or amuse people, but the one great thing is to save souls.

EXPENSIVE CURIOSITY.

His Lordship's Persistent Questioning Led to Embarrassing Revelations.

A CERTAIN peer, who had a very long and very bushy beard, had dismissed his valet for the night. Shortly afterward, however, he was much annoyed to hear peals of laughter from below and called back the man to explain. The valet answered that it was just a little joke, but his lordship would have none of it and demanded the details angrily.

"Well," admitted the man, with reluctance, "it was really a little game we were having, my lord."

"What game?"

"Well, my lord, a kind of guessing game."

"Don't be a fool, Waters! I rang for you in order to get an explanation. What guessing game were you playing? Guessing what?"

"We blindfolded the cook, to tell the truth, my lord, and then one of us kissed her, and she had to guess who it was. The footman held the mop up, and she kissed it and then cried out: 'Oh, your lordship! How dare you?'"—London Tit-Bits.

She Knew From Experience.

Miss Emery had given little Tim a simple problem in addition that he failed to work out.

"Numbers are dry," she reasoned with herself and determined to make the lesson more interesting. "Suppose," she began engagingly, "your mamma sent you to the store to buy three pounds of lamb, two pounds of potatoes, half a pound each of carrots and turnips and one pound of tomatoes. What would you have then?"

Tim shook his head, but Marybell, only a year older, raised an eager hand.

"Well, Marybell?" said the teacher with a sorrowful glance at little Tim.

"Stew!" said Marybell sweetly.—Argonaut.

Consolation.

At the dental congress at Asbury Park Mr. J. P. Carmichael of Milwaukee, apropos of a disappointment in dental legislation, said philosophically:

"Well, let us not despair. Let us remember the old maid.

"An old maid, you know, went into a decline.

"'What's the matter with you?' her doctor asked.

"'Oh, doctor,' she sobbed, 'I've been disappointed in love.'

"'Naturally,' said the doctor. 'It never does come up to expectations.'"—Washington Star.

Qualifying the Statement.

The Sunday school teacher asked his class to give him the definition of a "pilgrim."

One little fellow said, "Please, sir, I think a pilgrim is a man who travels a great deal."

This did not exactly suit the teacher, so he said, "Well, I travel about quite a little, but I'm not a pilgrim."

"Oh, sir, but I mean a good man," eagerly replied the little one.—Harper's Magazine.

Circumstantial Evidence.

Mrs. Clarke came running hurriedly into her husband's office one morning.

"Oh, Dick," she cried as she gasped for breath, "I dropped my diamond ring off my finger and I can't find it anywhere."

"It's all right, Bess," replied Mr. Clarke; "I came across it in my trousers pocket."—New York Times.

BLOODROOT.

(By Bliss Carman.)

When April winds arrive
And the soft rains are here,
Some morning by the roadside
These gipsy folk appear.

We never see their coming,
However sharp our eyes;
Each year as if by magic
They take us by surprise.

Along the ragged woodside
And by the green spring run,
Their small white heads are nodding
And twinkling in the sun.

They crowd across the meadow
In innocence and mirth,
As if there were no sorrow
In all the lovely earth.

So frail, so unregarded;
And yet about them clings
That exquisite perfection,
The soul of common things!

Think you the springing pastures
Their starry vigil kept,
To hear along the midnight
Some message while we slept?

How else should spring requicken
Such glory in the sod?
I guess that trail of beauty
Is where the angel trod.

The Kimberley Gem

It Was Taken From the Owner, and He Was Obliged to Steal It

By ARTHUR STANTON

There was but one way out of the situation—I must become a thief, a thief of my own property. Possession is nine points of the law, and possession was with my opponent. He held the gem, and I could fight for it in the courts. I must get possession of it and let him fight for it by law. No; I could not do that either, for if I stole it the law would convict me of being a thief and restore the diamond to its supposed owner. If Benton hadn't peached I could have got away with my property without any trouble.

This is how it happened. Thrown on my beam ends, yet young and vigorous, I resolved to strike out for some new country where there were chances for a fellow to get a clutch on the rounds of the ladder. Fate decided where I should go. Loitering on the dock in New York, where a steamer was loading for South Africa, I went aboard, saw the purser and told him I would like to work my way across the big pond. I knew how to figure, and he needed a clerk, so he gave me a job, my pay being my grub and my passage.

Well, in time I found myself in South Africa and, being strapped, was obliged to go to work in the diamond mines to keep myself from starving. We were all searched on leaving work each day to make sure that we had no stones in our possession. It was hard work and poor pay, especially for me, who had been brought up in refinement. But I had to stand it.

One Sunday I took a long walk into the country. It was a hot day, and to get out of the sun I went to some low hills where there was shade and sat down on the bank of a stream. Stones and dirt were being constantly washed down, and, my eyes becoming fixed on a brown pebble, I picked it up and looked at it. It was about the size and shape of a large almond. It looked to me like a diamond in the rough, and if it hadn't been so large I might have suspected that it was a diamond. I hadn't been working in the mines long enough to become expert in such matters, so I put it in my pocket and took it home, intending to get Jim Benton, a fellow workman with whom I had fallen in and who seemed disposed to be chummy with me, to pass upon it.

I'll never forget the look on Jim's face when he turned it from the stone to me.

"How in the world did you ever get out with it?" he asked.

"Get out with it! What do you mean?"

"Out of the mines?"

"I didn't bring it out of the mines. I found it miles from the mines. What is it?"

"It's a diamond."

It was now my turn to look peculiar. I had a fortune in my possession, but I saw at once that I would be suspected of stealing it while at work and not only lose it, but serve a term in prison.

"For heaven's sake, Jim," I said, "don't say anything about it! I took a long walk today and found it by a stream. It must have been washed out by the water. It looked something like the stones we are digging out of the ground, but it was so large that I didn't think it could be a diamond."

Jim had a cast iron conscience and, believing that I stole the stone, considered it his duty to inform his employers, though he might have been moved by the hope of reward or the splendid position the act would give him with the management. Anyway, he went that very evening to the superintendent's house and told him the story. Not having got any promise from him to keep his mouth shut, I took pains to bury my treasure where no one would find it.

Early the next morning I was called to Hartwell's office. He told me he had understood that I had a valuable stone in my possession and demanded it.

I acknowledged I had a stone, but had found it outside the mines. He gave me my choice of giving it up or standing trial. I knew what standing trial meant. I had a valuable diamond in my possession which there was every reason to suppose came from the company's mines and I would be convicted. I agreed to give up the gem on a promise of not being prosecuted. I was only discharged.

Having told where the stone was to be found, I went to Jim, and from the way I talked to him he was convinced that I had really found the diamond and knew he had deprived me of it.

He was very much cut up and volunteered to do what he could to mend matters by telling Hartwell that he had done me an injustice.

"Don't make a fool of yourself a second time," I retorted; "if you really wish to undo what you have done do it in another way."

"How?"

"Well, the diamond is mine and I'm going to have it. You've got Hartwell's confidence. Learn from him where he keeps it and advise me."

"You're crazy. Do you suppose you can ever get possession of a diamond in the hands of the diamond company?"

"You do what I say."

Jim was so upset at having acted with such haste that he finally consented to do as I asked. That's the trouble with these frightfully conscientious people. They swing as far in one direction as the other. After all, it isn't the conscience that's bad, it's the judgment, or, more likely, the impulse. Jim, who was in high favor with the company on account of having peached on me, was given £500 for telling on me. He offered me all the money paid him for my forgiveness. I needed money to carry out my plan to get my diamond, so I accepted it as a loan, promising to return it if I succeeded in getting my property. By this time Jim, who was thoroughly repentant, agreed to help me all he could.

One day he came to me and said that diamonds were sent periodically to England. They were taken to the coast, where they were shipped by steamer. I at once made inquiries about the route with a view to finding some weak point on which I might operate and learned, among other things, that the gems were shipped just in time to catch the mail steamer for Europe. If through any delay they did not reach the coast before the vessel sailed they were locked up in the postoffice till the departure of the next ship.

I asked Jim to find out for me when my stone would be shipped, and he tried to do so, but only learned that it was still at Kimberley. I at once started over the route looking for some point where I might lie in wait and catch the convoy napping. I came to a stream where the carriers must be ferried over. It occurred to me that something might be done here, but after racking my brain I could hit upon no plan that seemed feasible. I went on, but as I proceeded I formed a scheme a part of which pertained to this ferry. Reaching the coast, I at once went to the postoffice to look over the ground there.

I had nearly all of Jim Benton's £500 in my pocket and was well dressed. I represented myself as a postoffice official, whose duties were to travel about and make reports on different postoffices. But I made no pretense at supervising the postmaster at this point. Instead, I invited him to dinner and treated him sumptuously. This gave me access to his office. I learned where diamonds were locked when delayed in transportation.

One evening after the clerks had gone home I sat with the postmaster in his office. Suddenly I fell over in a pretended faint and on reviving begged him to go for a doctor. He did so, and while he was gone with some wax I had provided for the purpose I took an impression of the lock on the safe where diamonds waiting transportation were kept. When he returned with the doctor I was so far recovered that I did not need the latter's services.

The next day I returned to Kimberley and charged Benton to keep a sharp lookout for the shipment of my diamond. It may be wondered that, since I was intending to steal my own property, I was punctilious as to taking this particular stone. It was, firstly, because I should have had to take a good many other stones to make up its value, and, secondly, Jim Benton's conscience was so stiff that if he had believed that I intended to take any but the stone I had found he might have swung the other way and peached on me again.

Jim did good work for me in looking out for the shipment of my stone. He was so thoroughly trusted by all those in authority that he could ask questions about it without exciting suspicion.

One day he came to me and said that a shipment of diamonds was to be made the next morning, and my stone was among the number. It was considered so valuable that a double convoy would be sent out. Within an hour I started for the coast.

Coming to the stream the party would be obliged to cross, I unchained the boat, pulled myself over and on reaching the opposite shore sent the boat adrift. As I saw it disappear on the current I felt sure the diamond convoy would be delayed. Then I went on to the coast.

I had the happiness to see the delayed diamond carriers coming in when the mail steamer was well out at sea. They took the gems to the postmaster, who, I felt sure, would lock them in his safe, and I had a key in my pocket that had been made from the impression I had taken. The party went back to Kimberley, and soon after their departure I reappeared at the postoffice, where I was heartily greeted by the postmaster, whom I told that I had inspected the postoffice at Kimberley and would await the next steamer for home.

The rest of my work was dead easy. I complained of not feeling well and was invited to lodge with the postmaster, whose rooms were in the same building with his office. In the middle of the night I went down in my stocking feet to the safe, opened it, felt among the stones till I recognised my diamond, relocked the safe and went back to bed.

There was no hurry for my departure, for the diamonds would not be taken out of the safe till put on the steamer. I sailed on the same ship with them and, on reaching Europe went to Amsterdam, where I had my stone cut and sold it for a fortune.

I concluded to forgive Benton, in consideration of his valuable assistance, for peaching on me and offered to give him a part of the proceeds. But he would take nothing and, for aught I know, is still handling a pick in the Kimberley mines.

Believed Himself Invisible.

The first Lord Lytton was certainly daft. One morning while he was entertaining a large company at his country seat the guests were assembled at breakfast in the great hall when their host came in in an old dressing gown, poured out a cup of tea and disappeared without uttering a word to any one. Arthur Russell expressed his surprise to his next neighbor, who said:

"He believes himself to be invisible."

And, sure enough, in a little time he appeared in his usual dress and saluted his friends as if he had not seen them since the previous night.

OH, my, Edwin, wilt thou love me?

  I will be forever thine!
I will joyfully thy bread win,

Only whisper, gentle Edwin,
  Whisper that thou lovest me!

Sweet, no longer in the city
  Shalt thou droop they little head;
Thou shalt tend thy flowers, my pretty,
  In thy garden here instead;
Thou shalt warble like a starling
  Mid the roses on the wall—
Thou thyself, my coy, wee darling,
  Fairest bud among them all!

I will keep thee in cigars, love—
  Nay, dear Edwin, wherefore groan?
By the moon and sun and stars, love,
  Thou shalt always choose thine own.

Then, my darling, do not tremble,
  Do not shrink from my caress!
Ah, I know it—don't dissemble—
  Darling Edwin, answer yes!

INITIATION OF MEMBERS

Eighteen Members Added to Sacred Heart T.A.S. at Sunday Meeting

HELD A DEBATE

The meeting yesterday afternoon of the Sacred Heart T. A. S. was featured by another large initiation. A month ago committees were appointed to endeavor to swell the membership during the Lenten season, and the result has been that during the past four weeks some forty-seven men have taken the pledge, twenty-nine last meeting, and eighteen yesterday. It is pleasing to note the number of young men and boys, aspiring to manhood, who are in this way building a solid foundation of their lives.

The meeting was further featured by a very interesting and instructive debate on "Resolved, that Capital Punishment should be Abolished." The affirmative was taken by Messrs. John Finn and John McCarney, while Messrs. John Theobald and Vincent Meagher spoke on the negative. The rather difficult subject, which, some two weeks ago, was discussed in the House of Commons, was handled in a way that was par-excellence, and although the negative won, the four young speakers, all acquitted themselves very creditably. Rev. Father Galvin, who acted as judge, stated in announcing his decision, that it was truly a revelation to him to find youths speak with such force and eloquence. Rev. J. J. O'Brien and Rev. J. V. McCauley also spoke in commendatory terms of the young orators and said they hoped to have an opportunity to hear them speak again in the near future.

ROAD MAKERS AT WORK

Road builders of the world are looking forward to the final linking up of the "Great Horseshoe Highway," which when completed will be the longest automobile road in the world.

It will measure over 7000 miles in length and will connect the three principal countries of the North American continent. Scenery, including that of the Sunny South, the Middle Eastern and New England states; Montreal and quaint Quebec; the Great Lakes and streams of Canada; the broad ranch and agricultural lands of the last Great West—the Canadian West; the matchless Canadian Rockies with their wonderful valleys and venerable snow-capped peaks, the Pacific Coast cities of Vancouver, Victoria, Seattle and Portland; then further south, Sacramento, San Francisco and the charming resorts in the southern part of the State of California, and finally, with a highly colored touch, the City of Mexico, will furnish the automobile travellers with no end of variety. No such trip can be found elsewhere in the world.

The highway will begin at Miami, go directly north through all of the principal American cities of the Atlantic seaboard to Montreal, west through Canada, to Vancouver, and thence south through the cities of the Pacific slope, finishing in Mexico city.

One of the most potent effects of the "Great Horseshoe" Highway is having on the country, is to encourage the building of good roads. The example set by making a first-class road of it, is influencing the citizens of each district through which it runs to build branch roads and thereby hold out still further inducements to the motor tourist to linger in the district.

RECORD VELOCITY TO WIND BLOCKADE ON RAILROADS COMMUNICATION CRIPPLED

Over Nine Inches of Snow Falls in New York and There is Much Suffering--- Cold Wave Touches Florida

Canadian Press Despatch

Toronto, Mar. 2.—The velocity of the wind at its height early last evening as recorded at the Observatory was 84 miles an hour, although it is admitted single gusts probably travelled higher than ninety miles. The highest previous record was fifty-seven miles in 1893. Trains which should have arrived here early this morning were still expected at noon. A very moderate snowfall being sufficient, with the high wind, to cause a blockade on railway lines.

Washington, Mar. 2.—The severest storm of the winter howled from East Port Maine to Savannah while a cold wave rolling down from the Great Lakes overspread Atlantic States as far south as Florida. No marine disasters have been reported. In all large cities from Cleveland to Baltimore, effects of the storm were felt in broken wires and impeded rail traffic.

New York, Mar. 2.—Nine and a half inches of snow fell in New York yesterday after which a howling gale set in and the temperature fell rapidly. So far as is known five persons have been killed. Railroad traffic is tied up and telegraphic and telephonic communication is crippled. No storm has produced so much suffering since the famous blizzard of March, 1888. With the accumulation of snow from two previous storms only half removed, the streets are in an awful condition.

DEATH ONE OF THE GREATEST AND GRANDEST TRIUMPHS OF LIFE

The Cross Was Not an Accident, But a Design Says Rev. R. G. Peever

MEMORIAL SERVICE

The memorial service in Charlotte street Methodist church Sunday morning, in honor of the late pastor, the Rev. T. J. Mansell, was of a singularly beautiful and impressive character. The church was crowded to its capacity, and the black draperies that were there at the public funeral service were still in evidence adding their solemn air to the service.

The first hymn sung was number 840, which begins with these strong lines:

"O God our help in ages past,
Our hope for years to come."

In the course of the prayer, the Rev. R. G. Peever, B.D., who conducted the service, made feeling reference to the Tender Shepherd who in His mercy had taken the head of that church. Christ still spoke to them through their sorrow and loss in their late pastor, friend and councellor.

The second lesson, from Second Kings, related the translation of the Prophet Elijah, and the choir sang very beautifully a fine rendering of Tennyson's "Crossing the Bar."

Having read the announcements, the minister then read a brief note from Mrs. Mansell and family, thanking the Official Board, the various societies and members of the congregation for their great kindness and sympathy extended to them during their recent sad bereavement.

THE SERMON.

Rev. Mr. Peever said that at first he hesitated when asked to conduct the memorial service for his late brother, but on second consideration he thought it the right thing to do and felt it was a sacred duty and very precious privilege to join with the congregation in their memorial service.

Speaking to the children present, he said he had heard their late pastor speak with pride of the boys who, during the course of his ministry, had followed in his footsteps as preachers of the gospel, and hoped that some in that congregation would dedicate themselves to the ministry.

The text was from 2nd Kings, chapter 2, verse 3, "Knowest thou that the Lord will take away thy master." Dr. Arthur said, "We are all men now, we will soon all be memories." Demosthenes once said:—"Yesterday I was not here, I shall not be here to-morrow, to-day I am here." At this point in the service a sudden gust of wind blew loudly around the building and caused an evident hush and pause in the church as though the elements were attending.

Death was one of the greatest and grandest triumphs in life. Christ looked forward to His death in this fashion. The cross was no accident, no calamity but a design far-reaching and glorious, concerning the children of men. The death of the Christian was no calamity, but a design, and what we cannot understand now we will see later.

This chapter impresses upon us the obligations of life. Jesus answered these obligations in a twofold way—first by personal righteousness, and in the second place by his useful work and life. In the nobility of his chmaracter He unfolded the character of God. The purpose of Christ was to reveal the Fatherhood of God by a life of personal righteousness. Christ was criticized in His day for various things—for healing on the Sabbath day, for eating with publicans and sinners for example, but the testimony of Pilate has never been contradicted—"I Find No Fault in Him."

The primary demand of life is not changed, and the speaker gave numerous references to illustrate the Christ life in this respect. He carried on the work His Father gave Him to do, and on Calvary He finished His work. Life is for work, the church stands with the world for work that it may build up righteousness in the land.

Paul said just before his death: "I have finished my work." The late pastor's departure was appropriate, for he had fulfilled his work and glorified his God by a life of glorious work and then was taken home to the Father. His departure was a great loss to the family and to the church, but it was tempered as a Swiss rivulet falling down the valley is changed into a beautiful soft, feathery spray. So God's gracious spirit will take this hard, severe, dispensation, temper it and make it a blessing and God's glory will be accomplished.

The following beautiful and appropriate lines, concluded the sermon:—

"His day has come, not gone;
His sun has risen, not set;
His life is now beyond
The reach of death and change,
Not ended—but begun,
O noble soul! O gentle heart!
Hail and farewell."

The singing af Rock of Ages closed the service.

EVENING SERVICE.

The evening service was also largely attended. A brother of Mrs. (Dr.) Neal, Rev. J. Frank Reycraft, of the London Conference, who was visiting in the city, conducted the service in place of the student who had to return to Toronto. The text was from Matthew 6, 27:—"Which of you by taking thought can add one cubbit unto his stature." There is no use worrying about things that cannot be helped. Every man must have a definite place in life to fill. Each star has its own work to do and if it has not, then the whole universe of God is out of gear. If he was not called to preach, or if he had not a definite place to fill as a preacher, he would not preach. But there were some things he could not control and the speaker went on to deal with these.

First there was his name. He had nothing to do with it, but he knew he must keep it clean. Then man was not responsible for his environment, but if he made the best of it he would be a blessing to himself and the community. Man was not responsible for his talents, but the one or two talent man must go after the one or two talent man. He could do more good in some cases than the pastor of the church. Man was not responsible for the generation in which he was placed. The church stands for the uplift of humanity and when it fails to stand thus it has outlived its usefulness. Men must help their fellows.

The greatest work of their late pastor was not his greatest sermon, not his biggest executive work, but his interpretation of Jesus Christ to man. We must look beyond, conscious of the fact that God does not make mistakes, and whether we are doing a great work or only minding a gap, as the speaker illustrated in a story, our duty is to do the work we are called upon to do.

The choir sang the anthem, "Blessed are the dead who are sleeping for they rest from their labours," and Miss Richardson sang a very beautiful and appropriate solo, the closing line of which was "Remain there forever at rest."

LITTLE CHANGE IN SIR GEORGE ROSS

Sir James Whitney will Leave the Hospital to-morrow.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Toronto, Mar. 2.—Sir George Ross is still slowly sinking with little perceptible change since Sunday. It was announced this morning that Sir James Whitney would leave the hospital to-morrow for his house.

Same Schepps Missing.

NEW YORK, March 2.—Doubt expressed by the lawyer for Sam Schepps that this important witness in the case against Charles Becker would be available at his second trial for the murder of Herman Rosenthal, caused a commotion Saturday among those directly interested in Becker's case.

At noon Saturday Bernard Sandler, attorney for Schepps, said that he had not seen his client since the recent decision by the court of appeals. He added that Schepps had promised to communicate with him immediately after the decision was handed down. The fact that he had not heard from Schepps made him believe that his clent had "dusted," to use the lawyer's own expression, and that in all probability he was beaded for South America.

FOUR WARDS FOR CHILDREN'S AID

Children of Edwin Bennett Have Been Neglected.

Port Hope Guide.

The case of the neglect of the four children of Edwin Bennett, of Cambellcroft, took up the time of the court yesterday from ten o'clock in the morning until three in the afternoon. The evidence showed that the children had been neglected and the surroundings were such that it would be better to have the children removed.

Police Magistrate White, on the evidence found that the children Rachel Bennett, Bertha Bennett, Olive Bennett and Lillian Bennett, were neglected children within the provisions of the Children's Protection Act of Ontario, by reason of the immoral relations admitted in the evidence as to their present surroundings, of their unclean and improperly clothed condition, and of the further fact that the acknowledged father was in custody without bail on a criminal charge of committing an assault occasioning actual bodily harm to his wife, who is lying suffering from serious injury and in a critical condition, and the elder of the children had been further acknowledged by witness Wade to be his illegitimate child.

He therefore ordered that the four children Rachel Bennett, Bertha Bennett, Olive Bennett, and Lillian Bennett, be delivered to the Children's Aid Society, to be sent to their temporary home or shelter until placed in a foster home, such placing as to the three younger children not to be had until the pending criminal charge against the father was disposed of.

The husband claims he will assist the children, but strenuously refuses to,support his wife.

A GOVT. REPORT ON B.C.

THE REVIEW recently received a report from the Dominion Government Department of Mines, dealing with the Geology of the Coast and Islands between the Strait of Georgia and Queen Charlotte Sound, B.C. The author, J. Austen Bancroft, was assisted in the field work by R. P. D. Graham, M.Sc., of McGill University, and the Department of Mines are to be commended for the able and thorough manner with which the subject was treated. The book is, however, not as readable for the general public as it might be, owing to the use of technical and scientific terms. This objection is a common, almost a necessary one in treatises of a scientific nature, and, while there has been evident care taken to make the book not too technical, yet it could be improved in this respect.

The scope of the work is clearly indicated by the opening paragraph:

> "The area discussed in the following report embraces one of the most rugged portions of the Coast Range in British Columbia, a mountain range that is almost entirely composed of plutonic rocks which vary from granites to gabbros in composition. Numerous marine passages and fiords intersect this district in a most labyrinthine manner, and from a study of their exceptionally steep and rock-bound shores, the more important geological relations of the district may be readily ascertained. These natural and well exposed sections, extending into the very heart of the mountain range, afforded an excellent opportunity for geological observations which, it is hoped, will contribute to the more complete knowledge of certain problems that are of interest to pure science, and which have an indirect but distinct economic bearing."

A little further on appears the following:

> "Some of the main geological problems presented by this area and treated in this report are:—the petrography of the igneous rocks of the Coast Range, the methods by which overlying strata are invaded by so vast a mass of once molten rock, and the regional and contact metamorphism of the stratified rocks. In addition to the broad physiographic relations of the region, certain interesting types, such as fiords, hanging valleys, etc., are described and their origin discussed."

This extract would give the ordinary reader a severe attack of blind staggers or jaw-dropping. It means that the book gives a scientific description of the lava rock, their various layers, the causes for their existence, the changes they have suffered, and certain exterior features of the locality. The book describes the tribes of Indians, their customs, arts, and way of living, together with the natural resources and the commercial enterprises that may develop therefrom in the future.

Ontario people as a rule have little idea of the actual features and worth of far away British Columbia. People here are too busy doing their own part in developing the Canadian democracy to know in detail the characateristics of that great land arising on the shore of the vast Pacific. Suffice it that each province continues to do her part as best she can, while now and then books like these appear to give an accurate and well arranged account of the development in distant parts that is making Canada a nation among nations.

THE LIBERAL PARTY AND EVANTUREL.

HOWEVER much Mr. Rowell may repudiate his Prescott supporter, Gustave Evanturel, however much Liberal newspapers may belittle the circumstance, the enormity of the offence assumes, none the less, its due proportions in the eyes of every fair-minded citizen of the Province of Ontario. Scandal in high places is always to be greatly deplored, but the brazen position taken by Mr. Rowell's supporter in the Assembly, only adds disgust to the aversion with which the people of Ontario regard the action of Evanturel.

That the feeling which undoubtedly prevails throughout the Province is known to the Government, is shown by the dignified and judicious position taken by the Acting Premier, the Hon. J. J. Foy. He has stated:

"The Government will take such steps as they think necessary, after calm, careful consideration of the matter, to deal with it properly and save the dignity of the House, which has been insulted by that action."

This statement, worthy of a strong government and leader, while voicing the opinion of Ontario, shows at the same time the strength of the Conservative party in Ontario. It shows that the Government has an eye for what is right, that the Acting Premier is quite capable of dealing justly with such disorderly action, and that the people have confidence in his doing so. Mr. Rowell may deny connection with Evanturel and the Liberal caucus may exclude him, but the ugly fact is at the door of the Liberal party in Ontario.

THAT PORKER that went to sleep on the railway track near Burke's Falls and put a freight train off the track, evidently had not heard of the "Safety First" order. Fortunately, the porker's life was the only one lost.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

IT IS REPORTED, says the Toronto Star, that an editor on a Toronto daily newspaper had a little fire in his office the other day. When asked as to the cause, he explained: "Well, I was looking through a pile of exchanges and carelessly threw the Orange Sentinel and the Catholic Register down together, and they began to smoke and blaze."

AN AGITATION to curtail the telephone service in Toronto on Sundays is now going on. All thoughtful persons will agree that the young women employed in the telephone service should not be required to work every Sunday as some of them have. The agitation might very well be extended beyond Toronto. The Telephone Company can well afford to curtail the Sunday service to hours, at least, that would not interfere with the employees pursuing their religious inclinations, and the public service would not be injured thereby.

THE DEBATE in the Dominion House the other day went to show that the walls of the Liberals respecting the decapitation of government employees for offensive partizanship had been much less than under the Liberals during the first few years after they assumed power. Some Conservatives will, no doubt, find fault with the Government for this, believing that "to the victor belong the spoils." With this view The Review does not agree, believing with Mr. Borden and his government, that no dismissals should be made without good and sufficient reason. During the first two years of the Liberal rule over 16 per cent. of officials in the outside service were removed, while the Conservatives are credited with only seven per cent. A very great difference.

THE TRENT CANAL affair is not yet officially before Parliament but will be probably very soon. The report by Mr. Ferguson, K.C., is only a brief report of fifteen pages on the 800 pages of evidence. The evidence is said to indicate a state of affairs that is very painful reading for all who hoped for better things, notwithstanding rumors. It will take a long time to have the evidence printed and put in the hands of those who want it. We are getting very lax in our characters and manners these days, and lack of firmness may in part account for the unhappy signs of degeneration around us.

By the Lady Editor.

Kingston Standard.

There is that word "obey" in the marriage service bothering the Bishops in England. Did any one ever know a sensible man expect his wife to obey him? There is no such idea in the wedded life of a happily married couple; there should be no such word in the marriage service.

The Golden West.

Westminster Gazette.

Finance is the big "worry" of Canadian agriculture—there are others which seem to me familiar—but when you come to balance up advantages with disadvantages it would seem that the man without capital is able to do something in Canada which he cannot do in England: he can secure a holding, a house, machinery, tools, and stock, and although he still has to pay rent int he form of interest on borrowed money, he is so much to the good.

It is not a gay life. Even the few distractions of the English country-side are absent. There are no birds to sing to you, and the flat prairie is treeless, vast and lonely. It is particularly hard on women. I cannot say if it is worth whole—I have often wondered if these men are really free and independent, or if the square, box-looking huts they inhabit are so many prisons. But the exodus to the Golden West continues.

There is much in a name. The "Golden West" sounds well.

All Look Alike.

Montreal Mail.

A futile attempt was made in court to call the names of a number of Chinamen charged with gambling and they were divided into batches to be sentenced. The opinion is growing that Chinamen ought to be numbered.

Lent a Physical Regulator.

La Presse, Montreal.

The Lenten law, which is imposed by religion, is also a law of physical conservation. Like the proscriptions of the church the prescriptions of health demand abstinence. Science teaches us that the spring is, for the whole of nature, and especially for organic nature, a time of awakening and re-birth. The blood circulates with more force and heat; the digestion is more active and complete. But this exuberance of life becomes a danger to health; so it is that Lent is placed between the privations of winter and the youth of spring, and the dictates of health, as always, coincide with the directions of the churches.

A New Trent Affair.

Mail and Empire.

There is a new Trent affair, namely, the suspension of the Trent Canal heads as the result of investigation into canal expenditures under the Laurier Government. It is said that $2,000 was diverted in the 1911 election campaign for use on behalf of the Laurier candidate in Peterborough.

Here Is A Day.

By J. Lewis Milligan.

Here is a day, and here is a man;
Muscle and brain and heart and soul;
Here is a world for to scheme and plan,
There is the night and the stars for goal!

Whether it all be a fleeting dream,
Or be it solid and fixed and real,
Heed not at all, but follow the gleam,
The beckoning star of your ideal.

Fate is a word that the Devil made;
Luck is the lie of the man who shirks:
Set your hand to your proper trade,
All things come to the man who works.

Be not cowed by a world of care,
Tarry not long in the house of tears;
Work! and the world will be glad and fair;
Rest is sure at the end of the years.

RICHES

By Walt Mason

The more cold coin a fellow collars, the hungrier he gets for dollars. When he is young and short of troubles, he says: "Some fifty thousand roubles will be a fortune quite imposing; when I have that I won't go nosing around in search of extra kroners, like some old greedy money loaners. By that time I'll be old and wheezy, so I'll sit down and take it easy." But when he has that bunch of guilders, he says. "Oh. chee! the fortune builders would laugh to scorn my paltry savings—methinks I hear their jocund ravings! So I'll go forth and nail a million—I will, so help me Colonel Lillian!" Then through the clanging marts he wanders, and all the sunny years he squanders, and travels at a pace that's killing to get the kopeck and the shilling. And when he's old and frail and battered, his heart worn out, his system shattered, from tolling up Gain's crooked trackage, he looks upon his handsome package, and sighs: "It is a measly bundle, and my old bones I'll have to trundle until my meagre roll is padded with other millions to it added." Then Death comes up, the Doom that wrecks us, and soaks him in the solar plexus, and in his shroud morticians wind him, and all his scads are left behind him.

Birthdays of Note

MONDAY, MARCH SECOND

The Hon. Robert Rogers, Minister of Public Works in the Dominion Government and one of the most discussed public men in Canada, is fifty years of age to-day. His career has been an eventful one. Born in the province of Quebec, he went west when still in his teens and entered mercantile life in Manitoba, in which he was most successful. His political experiences began in 1896, when he ran for the House of Commons, but was defeated. Three years later he contested the riding of Manitoba for the Legislature and was elected. He was soon taken into the government and in 1900 became provincial minister of public works, an office he filled until he joined the Borden Cabinet at Ottawa following the election of 1911.

SCHOOL TEACHERS LAZY.

"Sisters" on Other Hand Have Conscience Says Bishop.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont., March 2.—With imposing ceremony the Rt. Rev. R. J. Scollard, Roman Catholic Bishop of North Bay, opened the new St. Mary's School in Sault Ste. Marie yesterday afternoon.

Bishop Scollard was very emphatic in his declaration that it was their duty as Catholics to take their children out of the public school and send them to the separate school. In support of his contention, he stated that the separate schools throughout Ontario would compare favorably with the public schools, the difference between the public school teachers and the Sisters being that the Sisters had a conscience and worked every minute of their time, while the public school teachers only thought of putting in their time as easily as possible and drawing their pay.

The bishop denied that there were too many prayers in the Catholic school. "There is no God in the public school," said the bishop, "and they teach no religion."

The Stone of Infamy.

In many Italian cities there formerly existed what was called "pietra d'infamie," or a stone of infamy for the punishment of bankrupts. In Venice one stands near the Church of St. Mark, and in Verona and Florence they are near the old markets. On a day in carnival week the old time custom was to have all traders who had become bankrupt in the preceding twelve months led to the stone, and one by one each stood on its center to hear the reading of a report of his business failure and to endure the reproaches heaped on him by his creditors. At the end of a certain time each bankrupt was partly undressed, and three officers took hold of his shoulders and three others of his knees and, raising him as high as they could, bumped him on the stone deliberately twelve times "in honor of the twelve apostles," the creditors crowing like cocks while the bumping proceeded.

Way of Its Kind.

"How do you like the chicken?" asked the smiling host.

"Very fine," replied the polite guests in unison.

"The reason I asked you is because it died a natural death, and I was wondering if it made any difference in the flavor."

"Natural death!" exclaimed one as the others gasped and turned pale.

"Sure. We killed it with an ax. Isn't that a natural death for a chicken to die?"

Don't Poison Baby.

FORTY YEARS AGO almost every mother thought her child must have PAREGORIC or laudanum to make it sleep. These drugs will produce sleep, and A FEW DROPS TOO MANY will produce the SLEEP FROM WHICH THERE IS NO WAKING. Many are the children who have been killed or whose health has been ruined for life by paregoric, laudanum and morphine, each of which is a narcotic product of opium. Druggists are prohibited from selling either of the narcotics named to children at all, or to anybody without labelling them "poison." The definition of "narcotic" is: "A medicine which relieves pain and produces sleep, but which in poisonous doses produces stupor, coma, convulsions and death." The taste and smell of medicines containing opium are disguised, and sold under the names of "Drops," "Cordials," "Soothing Syrups," etc. You should not permit any medicine to be given to your children without you or your physician know of what it is composed. Tarzan of the Apes

by Edgar Rice Burroughs

Copyright, 1912, by the Frank A. Munsey company.

As his antagonist came roaring toward him Lord Greystoke tore his long knife from the sheath and, with an answering challenge as horrid and bloodcurdling as that of the beast he faced, rushed swiftly to meet the attack. He was too shrewd to allow those long, hairy arms to encircle him, and just as their bodies were about to crash together Tarzan of the apes grasped one of the huge wrists of his assailant and, springing lightly to one side, drove his knife to the hilt into Kerchak's body below the heart.

Before he could wrench the blade free again Kerchak's quick lunge to grasp him in those awful arms had torn the hilt from Tarzan's hand.

Kerchak aimed a terrific blow at the ape man's head with the flat of his hand, a blow which had it landed might easily have crushed in the side of Tarzan's skull.

The man was too quick and, ducking the blow, himself delivered a mighty one with clinched fist in the pit of Kerchak's stomach.

The ape was staggered by the blow and, what with the mortal wound in his side, had almost collapsed, when with one mighty effort he rallied for an instant, just long enough to enable him to wrest his arm free from Tarzan's grasp and close in a terrific clinch with his wiry opponent.

Straining the ape man close to him, his great jaws sought Tarzan's throat, but the young lord's sinewy fingers were at Kerchak's own before the cruel fangs could close on the sleek brown skin.

The greater strength of the ape was slowly prevailing and the teeth of the straining beast were scarce an inch from Tarzan's throat when, with a shuddering tremor, the great body stiffened for an instant and then sank limply to the ground.

Kerchak was dead and Tarzan of the apes the victor.

Withdrawing the knife that had so often rendered him master of far mightier muscles than his own, Tarzan of the apes placed his foot upon the neck of his vanquished enemy, and once again loud through the forest rang the fierce, wild cry of the conqueror.

And thus came the young Lord Greystoke into the kingship of the apes.

CHAPTER VII.

Man's Reason.

THERE was one of the tribe of Tarzan who questioned his authority, and that was Terkoz, the son of Tublat, but he so feared the keen knife and the deathly arrows of his new lord that he confined the manifestation of his objections to petty disobediences and irritating mannerisms. Tarzan knew, however, that he but waited his opportunity to wrest the kingship from him by some sudden stroke of treachery and so he was always on guard against surprise.

For months the life of the little band went on much as it had before, except that Tarzan's greater intelligence and his ability as a hunter were the means of providing for them more bountifully than ever before. Most of them, therefore, were more than content with the change in rulers.

During this period Tarzan paid many nocturnal visits to the village, where he often renewed his supply of arrows. The blacks had not as yet come upon Tarzan's cabin on the distant beach, but the ape man lived in constant dread that, while he was away with the tribe, they would discover and despoil his treasure. So it came that he spent more and more time in the vicinity of his father's last home and less and less with the tribe.

Presently the members of his little community began to suffer on account of his neglect, for disputes and quarrels constantly arose which only the king might settle peaceably.

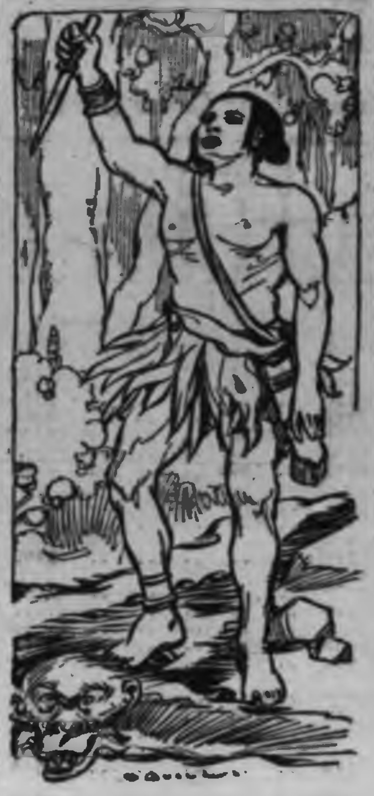
At last some of the older apes spoke to Tarzan on the subject, and for a month thereafter he remained constantly with the tribe.

Tarzan tired of it as he found that kingship meant the curtailment of his liberty. He longed for the little cabin and the sun kissed sea, for the cool interior of the well built house and for the never ending wonders of the many books.

As he had grown older he found that he had grown away from his people. Their interests and his were far removed. They had not kept pace with him, nor could they understand aught of the many strange and wonderful dreams that passed through the active brain of their human king.

Had Kala lived Tarzan would have sacrificed all else to remain near her, but now she was dead, and, the playful friends of his childhood grown into surly brutes, he felt that he much preferred the peace and solitude of his cabin to the irksome duties of leadership among a horde of wild beasts.

The hatred and jealousy of Terkoz, son of Tublat, did much to counteract the effect of Tarzan's desire to renounce his kingship among the apes, for, stubborn young Englishman that he was, he could not bring himself to retreat in the face of so malignant an enemy.



Loud Through the Forest Rang the Fierce Wild Cry.

That Terkoz would be chosen leader in his stead he knew full well, for time and again the ferocious brute had established his claim to physical supremacy over the few bull apes who had dared resent his savage bullying.

Tarzan would have liked to subdue the beast without recourse to knife or arrows. So much had his great strength and agility increased in the period following his maturity that he had come to believe that he might master the redoubtable Terkoz in a hand to hand fight were it not for the terrible advantage the anthropoid's huge fighting fangs gave him over the poorly armed Tarzan.

One day the tribe was feeding quietly, spread over a considerable area, when a great screaming rose some distance east of where Tarzan lay upon his belly beside a limpid brook, attempting to catch an elusive fish in his quick brown hands.

With one accord the tribe swung rapidly toward the frightened cries and there found Terkoz holding an old female by the hair and beating her unmercifully with his great hands.

As Tarzan approached he raised his hand aloft for Terkoz to desist, for the female was not his, but belonged to a poor old ape whose fighting days were long over and who therefore could not protect his family.

Terkoz knew that it was against the laws of his kind to strike the woman of another; but, being a bully, he had taken advantage of the weakness of the female's husband to chastise her because she had refused to give up to him a tender young rodent she had captured.

When Terkoz saw Tarzan approaching without his arrows he continued to belabor the poor woman in a studied effort to affront his hated chieftain.

Tarzan did not repeat his warning signal, but instead rushed boldly upon the waiting Terkoz.

Never had the ape man fought so terrible a battle since that long gone day when the great king gorilla had so horribly manhandled him ere the new found knife had, by accident, pricked the savage heart.

Tarzan's knife on the present occasion but barely offset the gleaming fangs of Terkoz, and what little advantage the ape had over the man in brute strength was almost balanced by the latter's wonderful quickness and agility.

In the sum total of their points, however, the anthropoid had a shade the better of the battle, and had there been no other personal attribute to influence the final outcome Tarzan of the apes, the young Lord Greystoke, would have died as he had lived—an unknown savage beast in equatorial Africa.

But there was that which had raised him far above his fellows of the jungle, that little spark which spells the vast difference between man and brute—reason. This it was that saved him from death beneath the iron muscles and tearing fangs of Terkoz.

Scarcely had they fought a dozen seconds ere they were rolling upon the ground, striking, tearing and rending—two great savage beasts battling to the death.

Terkoz had a dozen knife wounds on head and breast, and Tarzan was torn and bleeding, his scalp in one place half torn from his head, so that a great piece hung down over one eye, obstructing his vision.

But so far the young Englishman had been able to keep the horrible fangs from his jugular, and, as they fought less fiercely for a moment to regain their breath, Tarzan formed a cunning plan. He would work his way to the other's back and, clinging there with tooth and nail, drive his knife home until Terkoz was no more.

The maneuver was accomplished more easily than he had hoped, for the stupid beast, not knowing what Tarzan was attempting, made no particular effort to prevent the accomplishment of the design.

But when finally he realized that his antagonist was fastened to him where his teeth and fists alike were useless against him Terkoz hurled himself about upon the ground so violently that Tarzan could but cling desperately to the leaping, turning, twisting body, and ere he had struck a blow the knife was hurled from his hand by a heavy impact against the earth.

Tarzan found himself defenseless.

During the rollings and squirmings of the next few minutes Tarzan's hold was loosened a dozen times, until finally an accidental circumstance of those swift and ever changing evolutions gave him a new hold with his right hand, which he soon realized was absolutely unassailable.

His arm was passed beneath Terkoz's arm from behind, and his hand and forearm encircled the back of Terkoz's neck. It was the half nelson of modern wrestling which the untaught ape man had stumbled upon, but divine reason showed him in an instant the value of the thing he had discovered. It was the difference to him between life and death.

And so he struggled to encompass a similar hold with the left hand. In a few moments Terkoz's bull neck was creaking beneath a full nelson.

There was no more lunging about now. The two lay perfectly still upon the ground, Tarzan upon Terkoz's back. Slowly the bullet head of the ape was being forced lower and lower upon his chest.

Tarzan knew what the result would be. In an instant the neck would break. Then there came to Terkoz's rescue the same thing that had put him in these sore straits—a man's reasoning power.

"If I kill him," thought Tarzan, "what advantage will it be to me? Will it not but rob the tribe of a great fighter? And if Terkoz is dead he will know nothing of my supremacy, while alive he will be an example to the other apes."

"Ka-goda?" hissed Tarzan in Terkoz's ear, which in ape tongue means, freely translated, "Do you surrender?"

For a moment there was no reply, and Tarzan added a few more ounces of pressure, which elicited a horrified shriek of pain from the great beast.

"Ka-goda?" repeated Tarzan.

"Ka-goda!" cried Terkoz.

"Listen," said Tarzan, easing up a trifle, but not releasing his hold. "I am Tarzan, king of the apes, mighty hunter, mighty fighter. In all the jungle there is none so great.

"You have said 'Ka-goda' to me. All the tribe have heard. Quarrel no more with your king or your people, for next time I shall kill you. Do you understand?"

"Huh," assented Terkoz.

"And you are satisfied?"

"Huh," said the ape.

Tarzan let him up, and in a few minutes all were back at their vocations as though naught had occurred to mar the tranquillity of their primeval forest haunts.

But deep in the minds of the apes was rooted the conviction that Tarzan was a mighty fighter and a strange creature—strange because he had had it in his power to kill his enemy, but had allowed him to live, unharmed.

That afternoon as the tribe came together, as was their wont after darkness settled on the jungle, Tarzan, his wounds washed in the limpid waters of the little stream, called the old males about him.

"You have seen again today that Tarzan of the apes is the greatest among you," he said.

"Huh," they replied with one voice. "Tarzan is great."

"Tarzan," he continued, "is not an ape. He is not like his people. His ways are not their ways, and so Tarzan is going back to the lair of his own kind by the waters of the great lake which has no farther shore. You must choose another to rule you. Tarzan will not return."

And thus young Lord Greystoke took the first step toward the goal which he had set himself—the finding of other white men like himself.

* * * * * * *

The following morning Tarzan, lame and sore from the wounds of his battle with Terkoz, set out toward the west and the seacoast.

He traveled very slowly, sleeping in the jungle at night and reaching his cabin late the following morning.

For several days he moved about but little, only enough to gather what fruit and nuts he required to satisfy the demands of hunger.

THE SLIP OF THE SLIPPERS.

Harry Made It, and Poor Ellen Estelle Nearly Cried Her Eyes Out.

Ellen Estelle was seated in a big, comfortable chair reading a letter one afternoon when a girl friend called. Great tears were rolling down over Ellen Estelle's pretty cheeks, and her whole appearance was so pathetically sobby that the friend concluded that something dreadful must have happened.

"Why, Ellen!" sympathetically exclaimed the friend, rushing over to the tearful one and putting her arms around her. "What in the world is the matter? Can I do anything for you, dear?"

"I just got a letter from Harry," sobbed Ellen Estelle. "He is the meanest brute that ever lived! He is in Florida, and he has written me that he shot an alligator seven feet long."

"Well, what of it, sweetheart?" wonderingly returned her friend. "I don't see why that should grieve you so terribly."

"Oh, don't you?" returned Ellen Estelle, with more tears. "He says when he shoots another one he will have a pair of slippers made for me."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

One of the most beautiful natural rock carvings in the world is the Southern Cross, on the island of Grand Manan, in the bay of Fundy. It stands at the head of a ledge of rocks jutting into the bay from the foot of one of the immense cliffs at the southern end of the Grand Manan. Its shape is that of an almost perfect cross.—London Mail.

FIRST COUNT SUSTAINED

Coulthurst's First Figures Must Be Taken Says Judge

WELLAND, Ont., March 2.—Judge Livingstone sustained the first count of Deputy Returning Officer Coulthurst at Bridgeburg in poll No. 2 on Saturday. The count was 20 for and 54 against the Scott Act, which, according to the verdict of the judge, is the only count which can be taken, for the evidence given by many witnesses in this case was conflicting and showed that the ballots had been tampered with since the first count by the deputy returning officer. By this decision the wet majority is reduced to 34 votes in this poll, but there is still left a majority of 114 votes against the act in the county.

In 1A, Fort Erie, the wets gained seven, and in 1B, Fort Erie, where the wets gained two, Judge Livingstone was unable to find that any wrongdoing had been definitely established and confirmed the count as it now stands. In No. 6, Pelham, and No 3 and No. 6, Wainfleet, his honor rejected 180 numbered ballots, which increased the wet majority by 96; without these the wet majority would be 18.

Application was then made by Mr. Rancy to submit further evidence in regard to the Thorold Township poll No. 4. Mr. Haverson objected on the ground that the case had been closed and all evidence taken in this poll. His honor sustained Mr. Haverson in his objection, refusing to reopen the case, as he had been satisfied with the evidence submitted by the deputy returning officers and witnesses in this particular case.

TO IMPORT POWER.

New York State Company To Take 46,000 H.P. From Falls.

ALBANY, N.Y., March 2. — The Canadian-American Power Corporation, a new domestic corporation, is permitted to enter the public utilities field by a decision made public yesterday by the second district public service commission. It will import 46,000 h.p. into New York State. This permisison, however, coupled with the commission's consent to the absorption of the old Niagara Falls Electrical Transmission Co., is hedged with stringent limitations.

As a condition precedent to doing business the new concern is limited to an average charge of $19 a horse-power, and it must reserve at least 23,000 horse-power, half of its output "for direct service to consumers, as against transmitting or distributing companies."

The commission reserves the right to reduce the $19 price at any time, pointing out that Canadian companies are supplying power at $12.50 and even $9 to their own people, while the cheapest price to Americans of such transmitted power is $16 to the City of Buffalo, and $25 to the Buffalo General Electric Company.

'TWAS A "MOVEY" RAID.

Ominous Assault on Asquith's House Deluded Police.

LONDON, March 2.—An enterprising attempt by a band of supposed militant suffragettes to raid Premier Asquith's official residence in Downing street Saturday was frustrated by the police, who are always stationed in strong force in the vicinity.

Several automobiles, containing a dozen women, wearing the colors of the militant organization, dashed suddenly into the street from Whitehall and the occupants were about to start "hostilities" when the police surrounded them.

It transpired afterward that the "operations" had been promoted by an American moving picture concern, which had hired a number of chorus girls to represent the militants.

Girls Will Not Work Nights.

MONTREAL, March 2. — Proper police protection for girl operators in the districts where it has exchanges is a trouble that the Bell Telephone Co. is now being forced to add to its other worries. The first case in this district to be attended to has occurred in Outremont, where the company has found difficulty in getting operators for a new exchange owing to lack of light and police protection. Complaining of this to the City Council of Outremont, the company says women have refused to work at night at the new exchange because they are afraid of being attacked on their way home.

ROSS IS SINKING.

Death Only a Matter of Days Says Dr. William Goldie.

TORONTO, March 2.—Dr. William Goldie, the physician in attendance on Sir George Ross, issued the following bulletin at the General Hospital at 10 o'clock last night:

"While there is a crisis, it is not immediate. Sir George is sinking. It is not a matter of hours, but is a matter of days."

The news of the serious turn of his illness on Saturday and the grave tone of the bulletins proclaim that the end is not very far off. Yesterday the strength of the patient was well sustained, and, barring complications, which might be expected at any moment, the immediate death of the statesman was not anticipated.

The news of the change for the worse came rather unexpectedly in a bulletin by Dr. Goldie, in which he said:

"Sir George W. Ross, after a sudden collapse last night, is in a very low condition, and recovery is not expected."

The patient came to the General Hospital from Ottawa on Thursday, Jan. 29. Sir George Ross, who is leader of the Opposition in the Senate, spoke a few days prior to his arrival in Toronto, in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Following this he contracted a cold, which he attributed to the overheated Senate chamber.

Society Brand CLOTHES
Copyright 1913 Alfred Decker & Cohn

Last season we inspected all the leading clothing Houses of Canada, also Society Brand of Chicago, in search of new clothing that would interest our customers. We were particularly impressed with Society Brand Clothing for young men. We introduced Society Brand Clothing to the young men of Peterboro, and its merits were speedily recognized. This season we again present Society Brand Clothing, but under more favorable circumstances. A contingent of American Society Brand designers and tailors arrived in Canada; huge bales of English woollens were here in readiness, and Society Brand Clothing, with all its style, splendid tailoring and beautiful finish, improved by the use of English materials, and the price, less the cost of duty, is here for the fitting out of the particular, well-groomed young man. The preference this season is grey and brown, leaning towards the rougher weaves, and these are shown in splendid variety. Come in and see them. Whether you buy now or later, matters not to us. But we are anxious to have you know the character and quality of these Society Brand Clothes.

YOU WILL HAVE TO HAVE NERVE AND ACTION

If You Wish to be the Winner of One of the Handsome Prizes The Review is Giving Away it Will Mean Hustle These Next Ten Days

"The man who is afraid
To take his stand alone
But wishes to tread
Where the greatest number go
Should hasten to rest
Beneath a stone
For the great majority
Of them are dead.

Only the strong and determined candidate will win in this great battle of votes. The above verse was brought to the contest manager's mind during the busy day of the close of opportunity period. One could not help but notice the determined spirit of the candidates in the great contest, everyone seems to have the "I WILL" spirit and seem to know no defeat, every candidate is doing their best, and the reward will be ten thousand times as great for the winners of the many valuable prizes. Never was there such strong and determined people in a contest of this kind. Now we must look about us, someone is going to win. Is it you? The next ten days will tell. The second great epoch in the greatest of prize contests ended Saturday evening at 8 p.m., the interest in this great enterprise is grown to such an extent, and the hundreds of energetic candidates who are clamoring to have a few more days to cash their promisis the contest department has decided to only cut down the voting value of subscriptions a very little. The intrest in the great contest has reached a period of excitement for exceeding anything that has ever been attempted in this part of Ontario. On every corner, at every public meeting and every where you go you hear something about this great enterprise that is attracting the universal attention of the reading public of Peterborough and the surrounding country.

For Ten days.

For the next ten days the contest department is going to give every reader and the candidates something new and novel in the way of offering extra votes and it will give your friends a chance to help you more than at any other time during the contest, every reader and every candidate has friends, here is your chance to get them all together and get them to give you a year's subscription. This great vote offer will be termed the Club Offer, it will take a certain number of subscriptions combined together for you to secure extra votes and will be as follows:

4 six month subscriptions 80,000 votes.

4 one year subscriptions 160,000 votes.

4 two year subscriptions 520,000 votes.

This is your one great chance, you can secure as many clubs as you wish, after a candidate has secured one club, if they are unable to secure enough subscriptions to complete another they will be allowed the proportional vote, for instance, if a candidate should have six one year subscriptions the total vote would be 240,000 or one club and one half. Subscriptions out of the city carry the same voting value as the ones in the city and there is no difference in vote value from an old subscriber than one that is counted as a new reader.

If you have not seen the automobile that The Review is giving away in this Great Enterprise, just walk down George street as far as C. R. Banks' Sporting Goods Store, look in and you will see it there. But better still, step inside and Mr. Banks will be only too glad to show you the good qualities of the beautiful car, which will belong to some good energetic candidate within the next few weeks.

ONTARIO IN GRIP OF WORST WIND STORM IN MANY YEARS

Communication is Broken and Transportation Paralyzed by Violent Disturbance Moving Towards the East

TORONTO, March 2.—A storm exceeding in violence anything which has been experienced in many years swept over Ontario yesterday, doing thousands of dollars' damage and causing untold discomfort and fear. Railway service through Ontario was paralyzed. Toronto streets were flooded with signs, loose material from buildings and glass from plate glass windows that crashed through. Wires, trees, fences and poles were blown down. From the surrounding country come stories of similar devastation. The wind howled along at between 90 and 100 miles an hour, breaking into gusts occasionally that ran higher.

The storm, like the more disastrous gale of Nov. 9, 1913, was the result of a fusion of two storms over Maine. It started yesterday morning with a wind velocity of forty miles per hour, which steadily increased in violence during last night.

Over eastern Ontario the wind was higher than in Toronto, while in Montreal snow fell. Telephone communication with the east was cut off and telegraphic communication with Montreal was difficult.

West of Lake Huron there was no wind, and Alberta and Saskatchewan were having spring weather.

Several thousand dollars' damage was done to buildings throughout Toronto city by falling chimneys. The worst case reported was that at the house of Harry Partington, 1,634 Dundas street, where a tall chimney crashed through the roof and three floors of the house, doing damage to the extent of $1,500. Fortunately no one was injured, although a hole was ripped from the top of the house clear through to the cellar. At 1,826 Dundas street, the home of C. D. Cutts, the chimney also fell through the roof, causing damage to the extent of $200.

Almost without exception the trains coming into the Union Station were many hours behind time, the Port Huron train, for example, due at 7.30, arriving after 11 o'clock. The reason for this was that all the trains had to be despatched from station to station, losing valuable time in this way every fifteen or twenty miles.

Eastern States Cut Off.

NEW YORK, March 2.—A northeast storm swerving to the northwest, which brought first rain, then snow, raged over New York and vicinity yesterday, cutting the city almost completely off from telegraph and telephone communication. Reports showed its effects to be widespread. Three deaths due to the storm occurred here, two of them occurring together when a roof over a sidewalk collapsed under the weight of wet snow, crushing a man and a boy. Another man, blinded by snow, was killed by a train. Several persons were overcome by exposure and a number were injured in street accidents.

Trains for the most part left their terminals on time, but with wires down they were lost track of quickly. Concerning incoming trains, nothing could be learned except as they arrived late on all lines. Wet snow snapped telegraph and telephone wires, and with a gale blowing 72 miles an hour at time many poles toppled over. On some lines the poles fell across railroad tracks, blocking traffic.

As reports began to come in later it was learned the blockade of train traffic on some of the railroad lines were even more serious than had been thought earlier. The westbound Twentieth Century Limited for Chicago was reported halted by fallen poles across the New York Central tracks north of Ossining. Other trains on the line were stalled at various points along the Hudson river from the same cause.

EX-GOVERNOR GENERAL OF CANADA IS NO MORE

EARL OF MINTO PASSES AT AGE OF 69

Statesman and Soldier Had a Varied and Active Career Culminating in the Different Posts of Governor-General of the Dominion and Viceroy of India — Served Through Afghan War and Riel Rebellion

LONDON, March 2.—Lord Minto, former Governor-General of Canada and Viceroy of India, who had been seriously ill at his country home, Minto House, Hawick, Roxburghshire, Scotland, for several weeks, passed away at four a.m. yesterday. He was 69 years of age.

Gilbert John Murray Kynynmond Elliot, fourth Earl of Minto, was born in 1845, and received his schooling at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge. While at college he was ardent in following and participating in sports, and throughout his entire life sport of the right sort gave him pleasure, and he gave it his support. It is said of him that he wrote his graduation examinations dressed in a riding costume, covered with his academic gown, and that as soon as his paper was completed he leaped into the saddle and arrived at a race track just in time to enter and win the university steeplechase. The Minto Lacrosse Cup, now held by New Westminster, B.C., was donated by him during his term of office in Canada.

But the Earl of Minto's mind turned toward more than sport and constant pleasure. His painstaking and unselfish public service in almost every part of the British Empire proves that. In 1870 he retired from the Scots Guards, after being three years ensign there.

He followed the Carlist uprising in Spain as a war correspondent, and in 1877 served with the Turkish army, and was present at the famous crossing of the Danube. He was with Lord Roberts in the Afghan campaign, and in 1881 served as his private secretary in South Africa. In 1882 he volunteered in the Egyptian campaign.

Even in Canada he had to do with fighting, for when he came as military secretary to the then Governor-General, Lord Lansdowne, he was made chief of staff under Gen. Middleton in the Northwest Rebellion in 1885. The experience gained during this stay in the Dominion was put to use when, in 1898, at the age of 43, he became Governor-General of Canada. He remained as such until 1904.

In 1905 the Earl of Minto succeeded Lord Curzon as Viceroy of India. He was highly efficient in that office, and his opinions on affairs in India were taken in the highest circles. One of his unique reforms in India was the use of finger-prints on money orders in the postal service. He resigned the office of viceroy in 1909, thus bringing to a close his long career of service.

The Countess of Minto, who became his wife, in 1883, was Mary, the daughter of Gen. Hon. Charles Grey. There were two sons and three daughters. The Earl of Minto was possessed of great wealth, most of which he inherited.

Regret at Ottawa.

OTTAWA, March 2.—When informed of Lord Minto's death yesterday evening, Premier Borden said: "The news of Lord Minto's death will be received with profound regret by his friends in Canada. He served the Empire faithfully and well, both as a soldier and diplomat. As Governor-General of Canada and as Viceroy of India he filled high and sometimes difficult positions with ability, firmness and discretion.

"His associations with this Dominion, both in early and later life, won for him a well-deserved place in the affections and respect of the Canadian people, whose deepest sympathy will be extended to Lady Minto and her family."

FALLS FROM WINDMILL.

Young Farmer Tries To Fix His Neighbor's Mill.

INGERSOLL, March 2.—While at work at the top of a windmill shortly before noon yesterday, Albert waring, a young farmer, residing on the Governor's road, fell and was almost instantly killed. The fatality occurred on the farm of J. S. Nicho's. The windmill was not in working order, and Mr. Waring, who had no former occasions rendered the required service, was requested to remedy the difficulty, as Mr. Nicholls was ill. While at it he fell from the top of the windmill, a distance of thirty feet. His skull was fractured, and his death ensued in a few seconds. Mr. Waring was about 35 years old, and is survived by a wife and three children. He was well known and highly respected in the district.

SHIPPING TRUST INSOLUBLE.

U. S. Committee Says It Cannot Be Safely Dissolved.

WASHINGTON, March 2—Foreign and domestic shipping of the United States is so combined by agreements, pools and conference arrangements that an attempt to dissolve the combinations would cripple trade. This is the conclusion reached by the house merchant, marine and fisheries committee in the final report of the so-called shipping trust investigation, made public yesterday. The committee, after two years of exhaustive enquiry, recommends that both foreign and domestic shipping combinations be placed under the strict control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that, if necessary, the commission be enlarged to care for additional work.

JUDGE BARHORST DOES HIS DUTY TO RHEUMATIC SUFFERERS

If you suffer from Rheumatism and don't read this advice, then the terrible disease must have robbed you of your power to be fair to yourself. Read it:

"I, John Barhorst, Justice of the Peace of McLean Township, Ft. Loramie, Ohio, do certify that after treatment by three doctors, without result, I have been cured of a very bad case of Rheumatism, by using two bottles of RHEUMA. It is now two years since I used the remedy, and I am still as well as ever. Previous to using RHEUMA I was a cripple, walking with crutches, and I feel it my duty to let other sufferers from Rheumatism know what it will do. The result seems almost miraculous to me. I have advised RHEUMA to at least a dozen persons, and each one speaks as highly of it as I. I will answer any one suffering from the disease, if a two-cent stamp is enclosed.'—May 31, 1912.

You can secure a bottle of RHEUMA for only 50 cents at The Warne Drug Co., and they say if not as advertised, money back. It's just as good for Gout, Arthritis, Lumbago and Sciatica.

AMENDED SCHEDULES.

Sometimes we really feel afraid
This world is scheduled wrong;
Before we get the iceman paid
The coalman comes along.
—Peoria Journal.

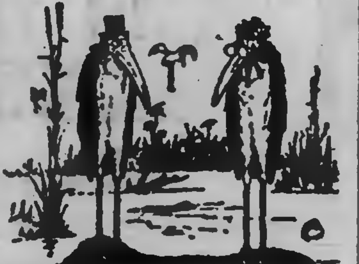
It's scheduled so we get a shock
When frost we see about;
We put the summer suit in hock
To get the "bennie" out.
—Cincinnati Enquirer.

It's scheduled so we want to pass
When flakes begin to fly,
For, though we burn but little gas,
The bill jumps twice as high.
—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

It's scheduled so we long to live
In warmer climes afar,
But railroads do not passes give,
And we don't own a car.
—Brooklyn Eagle.

The schedule's "punk," we are afraid.
This shows, of course, it's wrong;
Just after club dues you have paid
Your landlord comes along.
—Yonkers Statesman.

On Their Guard.



"M'randy, I hear tell they's lots o' them alligators round in these here waters, so we'll have to look sharp."—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Smart Man.

Various dishes in the Hungarian restaurant were numbered for the convenience of the waiters and the benefit of the patrons. A young couple entered.

The orchestra struck up the "William Tell" overture. Turning to her escort, the young woman said: "That's familiar. What is it?"

The man glanced up at the orchestra and saw the number 8 displayed. Then, with the air of one who is accustomed to cafe life, he looked up No. 8 on the bill of fare.

"That," he replied when he had located it, "is 'Filet Mignon,' by Champignons."—New York Tribune.

An Incomplete Case.

"Have you anything to say in extenuation of your conduct?" asked the judge.

"Nothin' in extenuation, judge, your honor," replied the prisoner, "but if you knowed all about this thing you wouldn't blame me for what I done."—Chicago Record-Herald.

THE SUMMER ATTRACTION.

SEATTLE, wonder city,
The marvel of the west,
Fixed up with company manners,
Its very Sunday best,
With hand outstretched to welcome
The one who ventures there—
Oh, occidental sister,
I'd like to see your fair!

They tell me it's a dandy,
A dream of shade and light,
A picture in the daytime,
A marvel in the night,
Where men of every nation,
Garbed strangely, come and go,
And that it beats a circus
Or any three ring show.

A mountain for a background,
Snow capped and in the stars,
A sort of next door neighbor
To little sister Mars,
A water front majestic
That's large enough to hold
A half a dozen navies,
Or so I have been told.

Invention, art and science
Have given a helping hand,
The nuggets from the northland
By grizzled miners panned
Displayed in stately buildings,
A fine and dazzling show,
Not matched in all creation,
I guess I'll have to go.

Worst of All.

Jack Podger was the most obliging man that ever lived. His services were given gratis to all applicants. He could mend a clock, repair a puncture, drown a kitten, paper a wall and, in fact, perform any operation known to mortal man. In consequence Jack's services were in constant demand.

A week or two ago, after cobbling a neighbor's boots, lancing his cousin's gum boil, sweeping the vicar's chimney and writing a testimonial for his charwoman's nephew, he went to bed. He was awakened by a terrific bang at his front door and immediately rushed to the window.

"What's the matter?" he bawled irritably.

"You'll excuse me for troubling you at this time of night," came the reply, "but the fact is our baby is so very cross, and we would like you to come and pacify him. He always laughs when he sees your funny nose."—Cleveland Leader.

Chance Revelation.

Taking down a magnificent sword that hung over the mantelpiece, the professor brandished it about his head as he exclaimed:

"Never shall I forget the day I drew this blade for the first time."

"Where did you draw it, sir?" an awestruck freshman asked.

"At a raffle," said the professor.—New York Post.

Not Sudden.

Miss Gladys—You appeared very abruptly with your errand. You must not come too suddenly into the room when Mr. Smithers is spending the evening with me.

HON. C. R. DEVLIN DEAD

Quebec Ministers Suffers a Relapse and Passes Away.

OTTAWA, March 2.—Hon. Charles Ramsay Devlin, Minister of Colonization and Mines in the Quebec administration, died at his father's home in Aylmer, Que., at 7.30 o'clock yesterday morning. He had been seriously ill during last week, and on Saturday he lapsed into a state of coma. Surrounded by the members of his family the end came peacefully yesterday morning.

Hon. Mr. Devlin's condition, which had been showing signs of distinct improvement throughout the week, took a serious turn for the worse Friday night and was considered so grave that the last rites of the church were administered Saturday morning. Dr. Quirk of Aylmer, who has been in attendance, said the condition of the patient was very low.

He was born in Aylmer and was in his fifty-sixth year. He entered political life in 1891, sitting in the Federal House for Ottawa County. From 1896 to 1897 he represented Wright County, and was appointed Canadian commissioner in Ireland in 1897. In 1903 he resigned to contest Galway County, Ireland, for the British House. He sat in the British House from 1903 to 1906. Returning to Canada in 1906 he was elected for Nicolet in the Dominion House. The following year he entered the Gouin Cabinet, sitting for Nicolet until 1912, when he was elected for both Ncolet and the new constituency of Timiskaming, choosing the latter seat.

Trial of Pay For Prisoners.

CALGARY, Feb. 28.—Prisoners in the provincial jail at Lethbridge are allowed 50 cents per day wages, and employed at road-making in summer and broom-making in winter. The wages are sent to the prisoner's family if he has one, otherwise are given to him at his discharge.

Civil Service Examinations.

OTTAWA, March 2.—Preliminary examinations for the outside service will be held on May 12, Toronto, Hamilton, London, Kingston, Ottawa, Montreal, Sherbrooke, Quebec, Fredericton, Moncton, St. John, Charlottetown, Yarmouth, Halifax and Sydney. On May 13 and 14 qualifying examinations will be held at the same places.

Inquiring to Know.

"You're a smart man, and I want you to answer me a question," said the boob.

"Shoot it," responded the wise guy.

"Is an inquisitive man a questionable character?" asked the boob.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Earache.

Hot applications, such as a hot water bottle or flannel cloths wrung out of hot water and applied to the ear, will often give instant relief, especially if the pain is caused by neuralgia in the face or head. If you do not have a hot water bottle a flannel sack filled with hops can be used. Make a small sack of flannel, fill it with hops and dip the bag into very hot water, wring it out as dry as possible and apply it to the ear.

This affords a very good form of moist heat, and if a dry flannel cloth is placed over the head, covering the bag of hops, this will hold the steam and make one of the best ways there are of steaming the ear. Of course as the hops become cold they can be dipped in the hot water again. Another method is to heat salt—just common table salt—until it is quite hot, put it in a flannel bag and apply to the ear.

Full Information.

In the smoking room of an eastbound Pullman, the other evening, there were two men—one of them grouchy, the other one receptive. After smoking two indifferent cigars the latter said to the former:

"How far are you going."

"Buffalo," acknowledged the other one, taken off his guard.

"Is that so? Well, Buffalo is a great town. I have a cousin living there, and I've been there myself several times. The last time was twelve years ago and over. Sir—what are you going to do in Buffalo?"

"Change cars." — Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Willing.

Outside one of the recruiting depots in an English town a sergeant saw a smart young milkman and, thinking to get a fresh recruit, said, "Young man, would you like to serve the king?"

"Rather!" said the milkman eagerly. "How much does he want? A pint?"

OVERDUE LINER SAFE.

Empress of Ireland Reaches Halifax After a Stormy Trip.

HALIFAX, March 2.—The liner Empress of Ireland arrived yesterday morning after a stormy trip from Liverpool. She brought the largest passenger list of the season and 374 sacks of mail. The Empress reported that on Feb. 24 she was in wireless communication with the overdue Uranium liner Principello in latitude 48 N., longitude 30, 38 W. The steamer is from Rotterdam to Halifax.

The Allan liner Alsatian got away early yesterday for Liverpool with five hundred passengers and a large cargo. Among the passengers were: Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways; W. D. Scott, inspector of immigration, and G. M. Bosworth, vice-president of the C.P.R., and wife.

Portugal Strike Ended.

LISBON, Portugal, March 2.—An announcement of the conclusion of the present revolutionary railway strike in Portugal was made Saturday by the committee directing the movement. All the strikers have been ordered to return to work.

The action of the committee is regarded in official circles as certain to bring about tranquility throughout the country where railroad, telephone and telegraphic communication has been interrupted for several days in consequence of acts of violence by the strikers.

Aviator Beachey Has Close Shave.

SANTA BARBARA, Cal., March 2.—While looping the loop here yesterday Lincoln Beachey lost control of his biplane and fell 1,600 feet, but managed to right himself four hundred feet from the ground and escaped with slight injuries. His machine crashed into a tree but was not greatly damaged.

PRIMITIVE CURRENCY.

Nails, Eggs, Tobacco and Codfish as Mediums of Exchange.

A curious medium of exchange in Scotland not many years ago was handmade nails. This is equaled by Switzerland, where eggs are still current coin. Eggs would be rather risky coin to deposit in the bank for several reasons, but not so wheat and oats, which have been used for all purposes of sale and purchase in Norway and have even been banked. The national corn crop of Mexico is maize and not very long ago formed the chief money of that republic.

In the time of our ancestors tobacco was used almost exclusively in Virginia instead of gold and silver. In Newfoundland dried codfish was at one time a great medium of exchange. It had the advantage of keeping indefinitely, and it is said that the Newfoundland miser got as much pleasure from the odor of his possession as though it were from Araby.

In savage lands they used more curious things as money. Salt circulated in Abyssinia; cubes of beeswax were the medium in Sumatra, cubes of tea were used in Tartary; in some of the Portuguese possessions the coin consists of straw mats. In the islands of the Pacific they depend upon feathers, while in Madagascar the natives count their wealth in iron shovels. China has had varied forms of currency, not the least curious being the coins made of clay, while Japan used the slightly more expensive substance resin.—New York Sun.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Strengthening the Lungs.

The lungs should be exercised by slow, deep and thorough breathing, and every man, woman and child should both night and morning and at frequent intervals during the day give a few minutes' attention to lung gymnastics. The exercise should be taken in fresh air—pure, uncontaminated outdoor air where possible. Inhale slowly, always through the nostrils, for provision is made there to arrest impurities which if carried to the lungs would irritate their delicate structure. Prolong the movement until the whole lungs are filled, the lower as well as the upper parts; then give less time to exhaling and let every other exhalation be forcible and accompanied by movement of the diaphragm, which will aid in emptying the stagnant cells in the lower parts of the lungs.

Try to realize to the fullest that breath is life and that the more air you breathe in the highest state of purity the more deeper your hold upon life will be and the more radiant your health and beauty. The lungs have their own muscular power, which in too many cases is but half developed. This deep breathing will soon enlarge and strengthen the lungs, and the more frequently you can indulge in it the better for your lungs and health.

VELOCITY OF LIGHT.

Roemer's Early Calculations Have Stood the Test of Time.

The first astronomer to demonstrate satisfactorily the speed of light was Ole Roemer, a Scandinavian scientist, who read his immortal paper on this subject before the Academy at Paris July 22, 1675. Roemer's calculations and conclusions have stood the test of time and subsequent investigations on all important points.

Knowledge as to the velocity of light was of tremendous importance to astronomical science, since it enabled astronomers to estimate accurately the enormous distances with which their science deals. Roemer found that light traveled at the rate of 186,000 miles in a second. The sun, being distant from the earth 92,000,000 miles, flashes light to us in eight minutes and fourteen seconds.

Yet the sun is a near neighbor compared with the so called fixed stars, which in reality move with inconceivable velocity, although the most powerful telescopes will not show that velocity as anything but rest. Beyond the outskirts of our insignificant solar system are other systems, and beyond them still others, so far as the sight of man, aided by instruments, may bridge the ghastly chasm of the infinite.

Distances beside which the immense line stretching from earth to sun is an invisible point are now measured by means of Roemer's special discovery as to the velocity of light.—Exchange.

USUAL GRANTS FOR TOWNSHIPS

Mr. Peck Also Secures Increases in Salaries at Normal School

Workmen's Compensation Act to be Introduced Shortly

Mr. E. A. Peck, M.L.A., has returned to his seat in the Legislature, after spending the week-end at his office.

Mr. Peck last week formally introduced the bill of the Peterborough Radial Railway, which is an application to increase the bonded indebtedness of the line from $20,000 to $35,000 per mile. The bill was referred to the Railway Committee.

Mr. Peck was in the House when the Liberal member from Prescott, after charging the Government with being allied with the liquor interests, was confronted with his own letter offering his services to the liquor men, his price being $10,000.

In the supplementary estimates brought down Friday, provision is made for an increase of $100 in the salary of the principal at the Normal School and an increase of $50 for the caretaker and the engineer.

Mr. Peck expects to secure the usual Government grants for the townships.

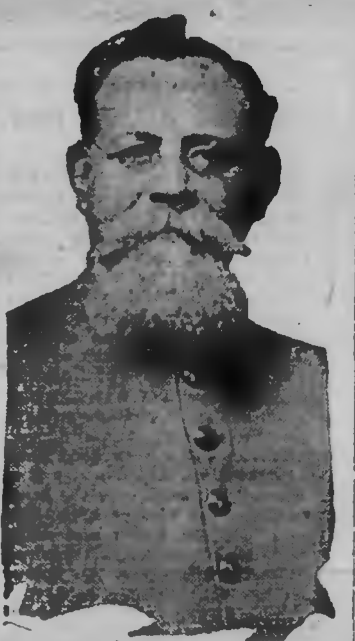
The Workmen's Compensation Act will be introduced in a week or ten days, and while a report will be received from the Good Roads Commission, it is not expected that action will be taken this session. The local House is waiting to see what steps the Dominion Government proposes to take.

BENTON WAS UNARMED; WAS DELIBERATELY SHOT DOWN IN VILLA'S OFFICE

Conclusive Information Received at Washington Shows That British Subject Had No Weapons — Commission of Enquiry is Refused Transport to Chihuahua

WASHINGTON, D.C., March 2.—William S. Benton, the British subject slain at Juarez, was unarmed and was shot to death in Villa's office, pistol bullets through the stomach ending his life, according to conclusive information which has reached Washington officials. While no statement to this effect was forthcoming to-day, slackening of official interest in the proposed post mortem on Benton's body was evident, the belief that the examination would be useful only in that it might serve to supplement the evidence of timid witnesses, who possibly would withdraw otherwise their oral statements.

Benton carried no arms when he approached Villa's office in Juarez, according to information; he spent two hours waiting for the interview that ended in his death, walking back and forth in front of the office building; he was shot through the stomach after he entered the office and received other wounds afterward, although the first was mortal.



GENERAL CARRANZA.

Official Probers Held Up.

JUAREZ, Mexico, March 2.—The Benton investigating committee yesterday was prevented from proceeding to Chihuahua to examine the slain Briton's body by rebel orders. Col. Fidel Avila, military commander here, declined to permit them to board the regular passenger train which was waiting.

The trip was suddenly postponed or abandoned yesterday shortly before the commissioners were about to take the train at El Paso, Texas. Those concerned said that any explanation must come from the State Department.

The commissioners, with their luggage, were at the train in Juarez when Zach Cobb, collector of customs at El Paso, drove up and informed them that they were not to go. "It is possible that you may go later," he told them.

The commissioners are Chas. A. C. Perceval, British consul at Galveston, and James Humbledon, a British subject, long resident in Mexico; R. E. Thomas, a lawyer of El Paso, who has made a special study of international and Mexican law; Dr. B. M. Worsham, of El Paso, and Majors W. T. Davidson and C. J. Manly, of the United States army.

Saturday night Perceval and other officials concerned with the investigation said they did not know when they would depart, although a train which came in from Chihuahua was available. Their movements yesterday morning were secret, but their return was less successful in this respect.

Carranza Obstinate.

NOGALES, Sonora, Mexico, March 2.—Gen. Carranza declined yesterday to furnish information to the State Department at Washington regarding the killing at Juarez of the British subject, William S. Benton. At the same time he gave assurances to Secretary Bryan that he would investigate the disappearance near Juarez of Gustav Bauch, an American citizen.

Until yesterday afternoon Gen. Carranza's replies were made to both queries at the same time and in the form of documents translated into English.

The stand was taken by the revolutionary leader that the death of Benton, a British subject, should be taken up through diplomatic channels of his country.

Blizzard In Winnipeg.

Winnipeg, Man., March 2.—Citizens who went home Friday night ankle-deep in mud and slush, following a 36-hour thaw, made their way downtown Saturday morning fighting against a raging snowstorm, backed by a cutting north wind and with the thermometer falling to 15 below zero. Conditions are the most unpleasant of the present winter. The probabilities are for continued cold over the week-end.

Just after noon Friday the thermometer stood 40 above zero and a number of people had discarded their furs.

THREE BENGAL TIGERS SHOT TO DEATH

In Kleine's Big Production of "Between Savage and Tiger."

The general public has no conception of the immense cost of producing photo drama spectacles. In George Kleine's latest success, "Between Savage and Tiger," a small fortune was spent on animals alone. Three Bengal tigers, a doe and a water buffalo are shot to death; a huge ship is completely destroyed by fire, and a number of elephants and horses are used in the production. All these cost large sums of money, to say nothing of the salaries of the actors and the terrific expense entailed in getting the correct scenic environment. This thrilling story of the jungle, in which love and heroism are potent factors, will be seen in Canada for the first time to-morrow (Tuesday), at "The Grand," opening with a matinee at 2.30 and 4.00 p.m. Evening 7.30 and 9.00. The prices for this attraction will be 10c. any seat.

Lillian Russell On Honeymoon.

NEW YORK, March 2.—"Our first real honeymoon," said Alex. Moore, husband of Lillian Russell, who sailed with the fair Lillian Saturday for a cruise to the West Indies and Panama.

"It may be for you," replied Lillian, "but not for me."

Miss Russell declared that she was looking forward to seeing Jamaica and other places in the West Indies. Strangely enough she said she had never spent a honeymoon in those placid climes.

Jacob H. Schiff and Mrs. Schiff were passengers on the Calamares, accompanied by Miss Lillian D. Wald. Mr. Schiff is going for a look at the canal, which he has never seen before.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO DEAL WITH RESIGNATION MEDICAL HEALTH OFFICER

Also Three Applications for Position—Medical Society Endorses Dr. McPherson

A committee will deal with the resignation of Dr. A. W. McPherson, Medical Health Officer, and three applications for the position. The applicants are Dr. Young, Dr. Brown and Dr. Amys.

Dr. McPherson's letter of resignation was read at Council meeting last night. After expressing himself to the effect that the increased duties were much greater than the amount of remuneration, Dr. McPherson wrote:

> "The attitude of the members of the Council, at last night's meeting, when the matter of increase was discussed, makes it plain that my services are either not appreciated or else not wanted."

Dr. J. B. Mann, secretary of the Medical Society, communicated a resolution passed by the Society. The resolution said in part:

> "We believe Dr. McPherson's experience and special qualification eminently fit him for the efficient discharge of the dules, pertaining to this department. In our opinion, he is the most competent physician in the city, for the position."

Ald. Duncan suggested that a committee be appointed to see the doctor, who might reconsider his action.

Ald. Duffus said there was no doubt that Dr. McPherson handled the situation well and he has the approval of the medical men.

Mayor Won't Coax.

Mayor Buller said he would not ask him to take back the position. The principle was wrong. Past Councils who so acted, had been the laughing stock of the citizens. "If he wants to withdraw his resignation, it's up to him to do it. I don't want him to resign if he wants the position, but I'm not going to coax him. He won't crawl himself, but he wants the Council to crawl. We have nothing to apologize for. He asked for an increase of $200, and the Council did no say they would or would not grant the increase, but would take the matter up."

Ald. Duncan—I'm not suggesting that anybody crawl, but I do suggest that the matter be left with a committee to deal with.

What he did not like about it was, he said, the fact of some of the men who attended the meeting of the Medical Society, had applied for the position.

MR. KENDRY APPOINTED

He Will Remain on the Board of City Trust Commissioners

The Bradburn Co., Limited, and City will have an arbitration over some property, and as a result, Mr. W. H. Bradburn, who was appointed to the Board of City Trust Commissioners, wrote the City Council that he would not accept the appointment.

The names of three citizens were proposed for the position, when Council considered the matter last night.

Ald. Johnston and Langford moved that Mr. Jas. Kendry be appointed.

Ald. Green moved that Mr. H. Rush be appointed and Ald. Stratton and Gordon moved in favor of Mr. E. F. Mason. There was no seconder to Ald. Green's motion and on the vote, Mayor Buller said Mr. Kendry was appointed.

Perhaps it was the lateness of the hour. Anyway little interest was shown in the vote and the next business was taken up to the accompainment of a subdued volley of queries, from Ald Anderson, as to the voice of Council by means of the motion of hands.

THIS TRAIN NO HOODOO

Axle of Engine Snapped After Arrival at Station

The C.P.R. express No. 34, running from Toronto to Ottawa, was so close to figuring in a railway disaster as it passed through the city at 1.28 a. m. this morning, that the escape seems miraculous. One of the axles on the front truck of the engine had become heated. When the train arrived, the engineer thought the axle too hot to proceed with, so arrangements were made whereby the mogul of a passing freight would haul the fast express.

The regular passenger engine was uncoupled and started to run to the freight sheds spur when the axle snapped, causing a wheel to fall off the engine.

RINKS, SLIDES, BATHING HOUSES

Ald. Johnston Wants Council to Act With School Boards

"There's nothing like starting it soon," said Ald. Johnston, last night, in moving a resolution that the City Council act with the School Boards and Y.M.C.A. officials in the interests of open air rinks, slides and bathing places, the rinks to be placed on the school properties.

The aldermen thought this a good move and the resolution was adopted.

IS CLEARED FOR BUDGET

Government Spends Day in Dealing With Opposition Queries.

TORONTO, March 3.—During the brief sitting of the Legislature yesterday the order paper was cleared of a number of questions put by Opposition members in anticipation of the Budget to-day.

The first of these, concerning the appointment and activities of License Inspector Snider, including his itinerary Jan. 23 to 27, when he had been in Brampton, Wingham, Clinton, Goderich, Ridgeway and Stevensville successively, was given by Hon. Mr. Hanna.

"In this connection I want to say that in supply I shall state what happened and what led up to it," he said. "With the facts all stated no one will question the good faith of any officer of the department."

Hon. Mr. Hearst stated that although no official report had come in yet, he understood that work had commenced upon the Lake Huron & Northern Ontario Railway, but no lands had been sold.

Lieut.-Col. T. R. Mayberry (South Oxford) introduced a bill to amend the Assessment Act, to permit municipalities to have a differential assessment on land and improvements.

With the view of giving an impetus to the iron industry in Ontario, Mr. R. R. Gamey (Manitoulin) is going to ask the Legislature to pass a resolution calling upon the Dominion Government to grant aid to enterprises developing the iron deposits in the province. At the meeting of the Associated Boards of Trade last week the matter was discussed and a resolution along lines similar to that of Mr. Gamey is now before the House of Commons.

Mr. Rowell's bill of former sessions to enable litigants to proceed against the Timiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway in the same manner as against any private corporation, without the necessity of securing a fiat from the Attorney-General, was read a first time.

CONCERT AND ORGAN RECITAL WAS ENJOYED

A distinctly good concert and organ recital was given in St. Andrew's Church last night, when a fairly large audience heard Miss Estelle Carey sing and Mr. W. H. Hewlett play the large pipe organ.

The opening organ piece was by Bach, and began rather dully as though the composer was down in the dumps. Then there came a suggestion of rain on the roof, gradually increasing in its musical patter until it ended in a few strong chords. The next piece was a minuet and trio by William Faulkes, which was sweet and pretty, swelling up and sinking down like a small boat upon the waves. Mr. Hewlett then played a serenade from Arcadian Idyll, by Lemaire. It was very gentle and soft, like the echoes of swet music, then it drifted into a line without much apparent range expressive of a satisfied, passive condition of mind, and concluded on shrill soft notes like the gentle music from the Pipes of Pan.

Miss Carey's first number was "Show Me Thy Ways," a beautiful sacred song, beautifully sung. She was at once a favorite, and her encore, a song about "Daddy and his Little Daughter," struck a plaintive and responsive chord in the hearts of all.

Throughout the remainder of the programme the work of the artists was of a high standard.

AN ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

The Quarterly Official Board of Charlotte Street Church take this opportunity of expressing their appreciation to the Ministerial Association, the surrounding clergy, the city congregations, the Mayor and City Council, the press, and all others for their sympathy and kindness so beautifully manifested to their lamented pastor, Rev. T. J. Mansell.

MAN AND HIS WIFE ARE BURNED TO DEATH IN BOARDING HOUSE FIRE; TWENTY BOARDERS MAKE ESCAPE

Canadian Press Despatch.

Campbellford, March 3.—At Healey's Falls, six miles north of here, an Austrian named Pete Bonivant, and his wife were burned to death, Monday morning in a fire which destroyed their boarding house, about 1.30.

Bonivant discovered the fire and roused the inmates. Twenty boarders, all Austrians, employed on construction work, escaped in their night-clothes. Bonivant re-entered the house to get his wife out, but the escape was cut off and only the charred trunks of their bodies were found in the ruins.

YOUNG GIRL ILL-TREATED

Four Men Incriminated by Her Story in Police Court

Joseph O'Toole, who was remanded to jail yesterday, faced the Magistrate again this morning and was remanded till to-morrow. O'Toole was arrested on a charge of vagrancy. This morning he did not plead or elect to a more serious charge.

Olive Fife, a girl of seventeen, told the Court, that she came to the city Saturday, after a visit to the home of her grandmother, in Smith. She met O'Toole at the Postoffice and afterwards at his request, she went driving with him.

They met Raymond Walsh, who got a bottle of liquor for O'Toole and Walsh accompanied them to Jackson Park, where she was seduced by both men. Later they returned to Jones' livery stable, and Vincent O'Toole and she went to the stable loft where she was again seduced.

They went to Head's for tea, and afterwards went for another drive. Holland met them. O'Toole left the cutter and she and Holland drove to the lift lock, where another offence was committed.

One point brought out in the girl's evidence was that Vincent O'Toole gave money to his brother.

The Magistrate characterized the men as brutes.

Mr. Gordon, counsel for O'Toole, admited the statements made by the girl in regard to O'Toole to be correct. As Mr. Gordon had to leave the court to attend Division Court in Lakefield, the case was adjourned till to-morrow.

Vincent O'Toole, Raymond Walsh and Leo Holland were remanded.

On returning to the livery stable with O'Toole in the cutter, Detective Meagher arrested them.

No Increase in Annual Grant to Peterboro Industrial

Prospective deputations please take heed.

J. H. Garbutt, President of the Peterboro Agricultural Society, and five of his directors, waited on the Council last night, in regard to the annual grant.

Mr. Garbutt explained the object of their mission in less than a minute. They were not asking for an increase, he said.

It was moved by Ald. Duncan and Ald. Duffus, and carried, that the usual grant be given. All of which goes to show that while the City Dads may not practice brevity, they appreciate that virtue in others.

INOCULATE ALL OF THEM

TORONTO, March 3.—"I have been asked to recommend that you should inoculate the whole population of Canada with typhoid vaccine, and I certainly see no reason why you should not do so." This somewhat startling statement was made to a gathering of the medical fraternity in the Physics Building last night by Sir William D. Leishman, the famous physician, while lecturing on the value of inoculation in preventing typhoid fever.

"In my short stay here," he continued, "I have learned that you suffer very largely from typhoid in this country; that it is, in fact, a scourge in some country parts and villages. If you organize a campaign so that people exposed to the risk of typhoid will be inoculated you will be doing a great deal of good, and we can thus compile very valuable statistics."

DELEGATES HAD BAD TRIP.

Pelee Islanders Went 18 Miles In Water and Over Ice.

LEAMINGTON, Ont., March 3.—The delegates appointed to wait upon the Dominion Parliament with a request for improvements to the harbor left here yesterday afternoon. The party numbered 125, although Mr. Borden had requested that only two men be sent. For their journey to the capital a special train was chartered at a cost of about $5,000.

Pelee Island sent but four delegates and they nearly perished in their attempt to get to the mainland. It is 18 miles across the lake to the island, and the four who got across started in a small rowboat. They had not gone far before they struck ice, and had to get out and carry their boat across the ice until water was reached again. This occurred several times, and the wind blowing 40 miles an hour made it so rough that the waves broke over their small craft, and they were covered with spray, which froze quickly.

BRITISH AUTHORS WANT BAN ON FAIR LIFTED

DR. CONAN DOYLE.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle forwarded to Premier Asquith a petition from prominent British authors urging British participation in the Panama-Pacific Exposition in 1915.

The petition dwells on the small expenditure involved compared with the great harm from deterioration of the good relations existing between Great Britain and the United States.

The signatories include William Archer, Mgr. Robert Hugh Benson, Henry Arthur Jones, Miss Mary Braddon, John Masefield, Sir Arthur Pinero, Owen Seaman, Humphry Ward and Silas Hocking.

Major Stephens Will Run.

MONTREAL, March 3—"My hat is in the ring," announced Maj. George Stephens on his arrival in Montreal yesterday to fight Mederic Martin for the mayoralty. Mr. Stephens conferred with his committee, headed by Sir Thomas Shaughnessy and Senator Dandurand, and made his preliminary arrangements for the campaign which promises to be the hottest in years of Montreal municipal history.

THE WORK OF THE W.C.T.U.

Three Members Are Appointed as Representatives on Women's Council

PRISON REFORM

The regular monthly meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held last Friday afternoon at the Y.M.C.A.

The large number in attendance proved that many are interested in temperance work.

The object of the union is to meet together for prayer and conference, to educate public sentiment to the standard of total abstinence, to train the young to save the inebriate, secure the complete extinction of liquor traffic, to enter into any Christian work to which the Lord might call.

Mrs. Peever, Mrs. Thistlewaite and Mrs. Fife were appointed representatives to the Local Council of Women.

Reports were read from the superintendent of departments. Miss Wills, who looks after the Surprise Soap Wrappers, reported on sending nearly 1000 to the manufacturers, who give 50c. per hundred wrappers. This money is used by the Society to keep a woman at the Union Station Toronto, to meet travellers and aid them in every possible way.

Plants and bouquets were sent to the public wards of the Nicholl's Hospital, by the superintendent of Flower Missions, and were much appreciated.

The treasurer's report showed a good balance on hand.

A letter of sympathy was sent to one of the members who had lost a friend during the past week.

At the last meeting of the Society it was decided to send the following letter to the local member of the Dominion Parliament.

We the members of the W.C.T.U., hope you will give your vote and influence to the Bill for Renumeration of Prison Labor and the state use of Prison Products. We believe the prisoner should earn his onw maintenance and be made to support those dependent on him, that they may not become a public charge.

We also ask your vote and influence towards prohibiting the publication in newspapers of the reports of entries and results of races.

Also, we ask your vote and influence in aid of the Anti-Cigarette campaign.

The following is his reply:

So far as I know I agree with your ideas in these matters. But let me say, that old-fashioned strict home-training is worth all the statutes in the statute book. People are so soft-hearted and pacific nowadays that human nature is running away from them and beyond their control. The element of human nature is being ignored apparently.

Mrs. Shields conducted an educational program on Prison Reform, prepared by Mrs. Emma Pugsley, Prov. Supt. Legislative and Law Enforcements. She pointed out how the prisoner should not be regarded as a poor unfortunate, but as one who is simply reaping the reward of his wrong doing. He is in prison because he is unfit to be at large.

Judge Mack, "the prisoners' friend," says:

"The state should not keep profit earned by convict labour, but give it indirectly to the prisoner, so he can support his family."

The Dominion Minister of Justice, Hon. J. C. Dougherty, stated to the W.C.T.U. that waited on him in Nov. 1912, that they were the first organization to bring this question to his attention.

The skilled laborer knows that unless this great and increasing army of idlers are made producers, the burden of thir support and that of their families, falls upon the taxpayer.

Dr. Gilmour, Warden of the Central Prison, Toronto, in a letter to Mrs. Pugsley, writes:

In remunerating prison inmates for their labour, each case should be considered separately and dealt with according to the needs and merits of the individual.

The social conditions of each man should be taken and if after investigation it is found that others are depending on him, he should be paid all that his industry will warrant.

The W.C.T.U. are asking that provision be made that every prisoner be given work for which he shall be paid. Out of the proceeds of the Government shall be refunded sufficiently for his maintenance and those dependent on him shall be supported.

Earnest prayer was offered by two or three members, after which the meeting closed.

SALE OF "COFFIN NAILS" RESTRICTED TO UPTOWN STORES AND HOTELS

By Providing Fee of $40 for Sale of Cigarettes—Stop "Babies" From Smoking

One of an unusually large number of by-laws, passed by the City Council, last night, provides a fee of $40 for the sale of cigarettes and thus practically restricts the sale to the uptown tobacco stores and hotels.

The by-law was fathered by Ald. Anderson.

Ald. Gordon held that the passing of the by-law would create a monopoly and would lead up to the practice of boys going to the hotels for their tobacco. The corner store was cut out. He argued that it was not fair to the barber shops. A nominal fee was suggested by the Centre Ward representative.

Ald. Anderson replied that he had not expected opposition. He believed the by-law to be one of the most important to be introduced in Council. The object was to cut out the sale of cigarettes in stores and confine the sale of "coffin nails" to the central district where the policemen were in a better position to keep tab. The dealers were willing to pay the $40 fee. He did not think it more convenient for the purchaser to go into the hotels than into the stores.

Ald. Green did not think the by-law would be a hardship. There were a number of stores in which it was not the desire to sell cigarettes. Some did sell because they felt they might secure trade in other lines. The by-law would stop "babies" from buying cigarettes. The dealers down town would not sell to the youngsters and they would not be allowed in a hotel bar.

The Makins'.

Ald. Johnston favored the by-law, but inquired as to the sale of paper and cigarette tobacco. He felt that these should be included.

Ald. Anderson explained that this could not be done, according to the statute, and as a result, no mention was made in the by-law.

Ald. Johnston suggested that this question be taken up with Mr. Peck, M.L.A., or Mr. Armstrong might mention it when attending the meeting of the Union of Municipalities, at Toronto.

CALLING FOR MORE HELP.

THE C. N. R. has exhausted its borrowing powers abroad and yet needs one hundred millions more to put the road in a workable shape. The road has cost so far 303 millions nominally. This money was raised from foreign loans on provincial guarantees and from subsidies. But where has it gone? Where does most of the money which the country is dragged in to pay, go to? The promoters are never poor. They seem to have made no mistake. But the present fact is that the C. N. R. is calling for help and the people of Canada are between a lot of fakers and a suspicious foreign investor. Is the country to be tempted into allowing itself to be bled? A more nervy hold-up has not occurred since the days of the Deadwood Coach, unless it be when the Govt. (with the assistance of the Opposition) coughed up 15 millions by way of a present last year. Seven millions of this was to go for paid-up stock. Ha! Ha! laughed Mc. and M. They passed a resolution declaring this stock paid up and sent the resolution to the Government. Financial men in the past seem to have found Canadians easy. One hundred millions and the line to Moncton from Quebec (grown up with weeds) lost utterly on the N. T. R. No wonder the members of the Borden Government are not well. It was a wise Foster who shook his head when he heard that Laurier was defeated. "This country is chin-deep in difficulties," he said, "I see no joy ahead."

COUNTRY BEFORE PARTY.

GRAFT knows no politics and grafters are members of a party only just so long as it suits their purposes. It is unwise and unjust to seek to foster charges on a party as a whole when that party is well known to contain men above suspicion, and when it is remembered what the other party has sometimes found within its own ranks.

Until people of both parties have courage and firmness enough to look to the good name of their country rather than to party advantage they will never continue to play the game of the grafters who without such help could accomplish little.

BORDEN GOVERNMENT PLAYS FAIR.

THAT THE Borden Government is setting an example for fairness and for trust in the good judgment of the Canadian people is apparent in the selection of members for the Redistribution Committee. The Committee consists of nine members, four of whom are Liberals, thus leaving a Conservative majority of only one. This Committee supervises the reconstruction of the electoral map of the Dominion. The importance of the Committee to the party in power lies in the fact that constituencies can be carved out in such a way as to be a decided advantage to its candidates in the elections. In the days of the Laurier regime, the Liberal party used this gerrymandering opportunity with the same ruthlessness that has characterized their supervision of the Grand Trunk Pacific and Trent Valley Canal construction. Party advantage at any price was the motto rather than faith in the Canadian people. But in the case of the Borden Government there is on this Committee only a majority of one, which means that the Conservatives cannot manipulate the constitutencies solely to their own advantage, even if they so desired. The majority of one secures only the carriage of the main outlines of the Government's redistribution plan. The best interests of the Canadian people will be safeguarded, and fairness to all parties secured, in the selection of the Committee. The Borden Government has no need to resort to the gerrymander, because it enjoys the confidence of the people for its fairness and clean administration.

QUEEN MARY A "HAUS FRAU"!

SOMETIMES PEOPLE say the monarchy is of little use in the English Constitution, that the real government is Parliament, and that England would be the gainer to rid herself of her ornamental monarchy. The reason for this opinion is, perhaps, in the contrast presented by those two parts of the constitution, Parliament, and the Monarchy. The former receives the weighty attention of everybody. Newspapers are deeply concerned with the debates in the Commons, the policy of the ministry, the legislation to be enacted. The strong, ambitious men of the country look to politics and Parliament as a field for struggle and activity, as the Knights of Old looked to the tournament and the battlefield. All men are divided politically and have opinions concerning politics. But what good does the Monarchy do?

The King performs the formal social function of opening parliament, he presides at Court, he figures in certain processions, he appears at other functions like the opening of a public building or the launching of a battleship. He inspects the army, and reviews the fleet regularly, but he no longer goes to war, nor does he take part directly in legislation. Why all this show, some will say. Truly the Monarchy appears in most cases to be concerned with non-essential things, but people have to look closely, more closely than they usually do look, to see the real importance and necessity of the monarchy to England and the Empire.

If one compares the monarchy of the Restoration and the monarchy of to-day the contrast will bring out the importance of the Kingship just as a comparison with Parliament throws it in a shadow. Charles II. was the merry monarch who resolved no more to go on his travels, who left no direct heir but several illegitimate children. His court was no place for good moral people and what the King did was imitated by his followers, and these again by persons lower in the social scale. Virtue was conspicuous by its absence, and many shocking evils arose from the vicious example of the court. At the present time the court is of a most exemplary character. Queen Alexandra was always careful of the influence of the court and recently, it is reported that London society sneers at Queen Mary by calling her a "Haus Frau." She has placed a powerful ban on the objectionable new dances, indecencies in dress, and has intimated that frequenters of "night clubs," or aristocratic gambling resorts, are unwelcome at Court. These are only two or three points showing to what a great degree people look to the Court for a social standard. There are no fireworks in connection with the political or constitutional position of the Monarchy, but socially, morally, religiously, it exercises a powerful influence throughout the whole Empire. While the Monarchy has important political functions, which are overshadowed by Parliament, yet in the social world it stands supreme.

In Canada the power of the Monarchy is felt by its influence in the choice of a Governor-General, by the standard of social life set up at Rideau Hall, and by the general influence of the social standards of the King and Queen on the life of the people. A good King and Queen is an undoubted blessing to any people living under such constitutions as prevail throughout the British Empire. Certain sects of London society may sneer at the Queen, but all sensible people in the Empire are proud of the monarchy and the social position taken by the Queen.

READ THE ASSESSMENT ROLL.

THE FOLLOWING item appeared in Saturday's Brantford Expositor:

> "The Expositor has again written to the City Council offering to again publish the assessment rolls for the sum of $200. The price quoted does not cover the actual cost of labor in connection with the publication of the rolls, but so much interest was taken in the rolls when they were published last year that The Expositor feels that the information should again be given to the public in order that the ratepayers may see what has been done in the way of equalizing the assessment."

The interesting point here is that the City of Brantford paid at least $200 for the first publication of the rolls. In Peterborough The Review undertook this work in the public interest entirely at its own expense. Only by a comparison of values can the individual property owner arrive at any sound conclusion as to the justness of his assessment. The Review has been publishing each evening a part of the rolls and these should be saved and carefully studied by every property holder in the city, not to make the assessor uncomfortable but to see that each owner is justly taxed. There is usually enough property in urban municipalities to bear the tax burden without difficulty when each pays a just share of taxes and if any property holder in Peterborough is overtaxed. a perusal of The Review's complete returns from the rolls will show a way out of this evil.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

IF THE BILL introduced in Parliament to bring the steamboat companies of the inland waters under the Railway Commission should become law, it is fair to suppose that the travelling public would be greatly benefited thereby. Many of the old hulks now traversing most of the inland waters would no doubt be put out of commission, and greater safety and more comfort be vouchsafed the people patronizing those in use as a result. The Commission has had the effect of greatly improving travelling by land, and the effect should be no less on water traffic.

Western Support for G. B. Canal.

Saskatoon Star.

When the Georgian Bay Canal becomes a reality, as it will, the west will enjoy better freight rates, and trade between Great Britain and Western Canada will improve. When steamers can come as far west as Fort William, half way across the continent, without changing cargo, the economic gain is too great to be estimated at present in dollars and cents. The Welland route is at present the connecting link of the greatest inland waterway system in the world, but it is international and less direct than would be a Georgian Bay Canal scheme.

THE BLESSED DAME

By Walt Mason

How sweet are the curves of the old-fashioned woman who knows how to cook and delights in the game; who makes her mince pies with a skill superhuman, whose tarts are delicious, and doughnuts the same. Alas, she is rare, and the man who would find her, no more in the towns or the cities will look; she's out in the country, the gentle reminder of old-fashioned women who knew how to cook; the old-fashioned women, the housekeeping women, the motherly women who knew how to cook. The husband, returning at eve from his labors, must eat from a can if a supper he'd know; his wife is away with her suffragist neighbors, to plan a parade through the slush and the snow. The women, intent on Congressional measures, are paying no heed to the cookery book; oh, where are the dames who found infinite pleasures in showing the menfolk how well they could cook? The old-fashioned women, the sensible women, the sane, normal women who knew how to cook!

EVANTUREL MAY BE BLACKLISTED

Prescott Liberals Call Meeting of the Executive.

VANKLEEK HILL, Ont., March 3.—The executive of the County of Prescott Liberal Association has been summoned by President J. N. Lapointe to meet in Vankleek Hill on Saturday, March 7, to consider the question of Gustave Evanturel, M.P.P., and his expulsion from the party. From opinions freely expressed, it looks as though the association will almost unanimously demand Evanturel's retirement from public life. Some of his friends have started the race-religious cry in his favor, declaring he is being persecuted by Messrs. Pyne, Ferguson and Hanna, and the Orangemen of Ontario. These were discussed in parishes after church on Sunday. Mr. Evanturel's personal friends in Alfred are outspoken in these declarations. Mr. Evanturel, it is understood, will be asked to attend the meeting on Saturday.

Goethals May Build Road.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—G. W. Goethals conferred yesterday with Secretary Lane over the building of the Government railroad in Alaska.

The availability of both the personnel of the Panama Canal construction corps and the machinery for the Alaska Railroad was considered at length. Much of the machinery, in the judgment of both Secretary Lane and Col. Goethals, might be used to advantage, but neither was so certain about the personnel. They also considered to an extent, routes suggested for the railroad. No conclusion, even of a tentative character, was reached, but the questions will be taken up in a definite way later.

Tarzan of the Apes

By EDGAR RICE BURROUGHS.

Copyright by the Frank A. Munsey Co.

In ten days he was quite sound again except for a terrible, half healed scar which, starting above his left eye, ran across the top of his head, ending at the right ear. It was the mark left by Terkoz when he had torn the scalp away.

During his convalescence Tarzan tried to fashion a mantle from the skin of Sabor, the tiger, which had lain all this time in the cabin. But he found the hide dried as stiff as a board, and, as he knew naught of tanning, he was forced to abandon his cherished plan.

Then he determined to filch what few garments he could from one of the black men of Mbonga's village, for he had decided to mark his elevation from the lower orders in every possible manner, and nothing seemed to him a more distinguishing badge of manhood than ornaments and clothing.

To this end, therefore, he collected the various arm and leg ornaments he had taken from the black warriors who had succumbed to his swift and silent noose and donned them all.

About his neck hung the golden chain from which depended the diamond incrusted locket of his mother, the Lady Alice. At his back was a quiver of arrows slung from a leathern shoulder belt, another piece of loot from some vanquished black.

About his waist was a belt of tiny strips of rawhide fashioned by himself as a support for the homemade scabbard in which hung his father's hunting knife. The long bow which had been Kulonga's hung over his left shoulder.

The young Lord Greystoke was indeed a strange and warlike figure, his mass of black hair falling to his shoulders behind and cut with his hunting knife to a rude bang upon his forehead, that it might not fall before his eyes.

Hair was commencing to grow upon his face. All the apes had hair upon theirs, but the black men were entirely hairless, with very few exceptions.

True, he had seen pictures in his books of men with great masses of hair upon lip and cheek and chin; but, nevertheless, Tarzan was afraid. Almost daily he whetted his keen knife and scraped and whittled at his young beard to eradicate this degrading emblem of apehood.

And so he learned to shave, rudely and painfully, it is true, but nevertheless effectively.

CHAPTER VIII.

His Own Kind.

When he felt quite strong again after his bloody battle with Terkoz, the mighty ape, Tarzan set off one morning toward Mbonga's village. He was moving carelessly along a winding jungle trail instead of making his progress through the trees when suddenly he came face to face with a black warrior.

The look of surprise on the savage face was almost comical, and before Tarzan could unsling his bow the fellow had turned and fled down the path crying out in alarm, as though to others before him.

Tarzan took to the trees in pursuit and in a few moments came in view of the fleeing quarry.

There were three of them, and they were racing madly in single file through the dense undergrowth.

Tarzan easily distanced them, nor did they see his silent passage above their heads nor note the crouching figure squatted upon a low branch ahead of them beneath which the trail led them.

Tarzan let the first two pass beneath him, but as the third came swiftly on the quiet noose dropped about the black throat. A quick jerk drew it taut.

There was an agonized scream from the victim, and his fellows turned to see his struggling body rise as by magic slowly into the dense foliage of the trees above.

With shrieks they wheeled once more and plunged on in their effort to escape.

Tarzan dispatched his prisoner quickly and silently, removed the weapons and ornaments and—greatest joy of all—a handsome doeskin breechcloth, which he quickly transferred to his own person.

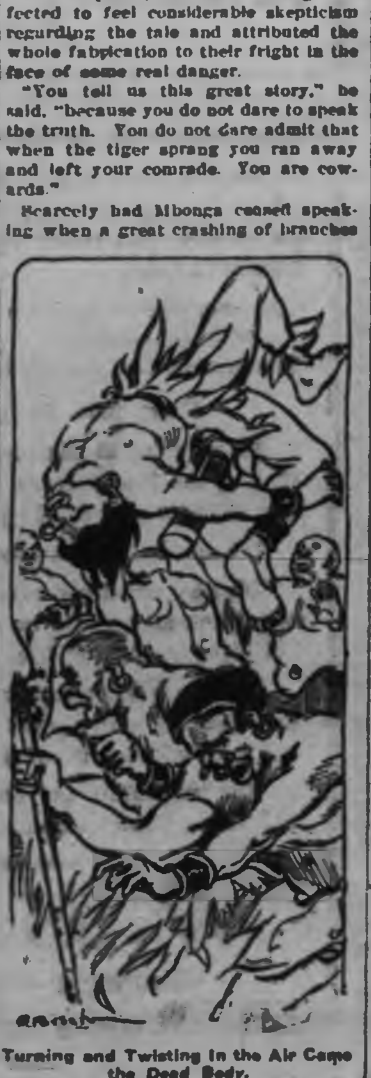
Taking the body across his shoulder, he moved more slowly through the trees toward the little palisaded village, for he again needed arrows.

As he approached quite close to the inclosure he saw an excited group surrounding the two fugitives, who, trembling with fright and exhaustion, were scarce able to recount the uncanny details of their adventure.

The villagers were worked up into a state of panic, but wise Mbonga affected to feel considerable skepticism regarding the tale and attributed the whole fabrication to their fright in the face of some real danger.

"You tell us this great story," he said, "because you do not dare to speak the truth. You do not dare admit that when the tiger sprang you ran away and left your comrade. You are cowards."

Scarcely had Mbonga ceased speaking when a great crashing of branches in the trees above them caused the blacks to look up in renewed terror. The sight that met their eyes made even Mbonga shudder.



Turning and Twisting in the Air Came the Dead Body.

Turning and twisting in the air came the dead body to sprawl with a sickening limpness upon the ground at their feet.

With one accord the blacks took to their heels, nor did they stop until the last of them was lost in the shadows of the jungle.

Again Tarzan came down into the village and renewed his supply of arrows and ate of the offering of food which the blacks had made to appease his wrath.

Before he left he carried the body to the gate of the village and propped it up against the palisade in such a way that the dead face seemed to be peering round the edge of the gatepost down the path which led to the jungle.

Then he returned, hunting, always hunting, to the cabin by the beach.

It took a dozen attempts on the part of the thoroughly frightened blacks to re-enter the village, past the grinning face of their dead fellow, and when they found the food and arrows gone they knew, what they only too well feared, that the evil spirit of the jungle was abroad.

Only those who saw this terrible god of the jungle died, for was it not true that none left alive in the village had ever seen him? Therefore those who had died at his hands must have seen him and paid the penalty with their lives.

As long as they supplied him with arrows and food he would not harm them unless they looked upon him, so it was ordered by Mbonga that in addition to the food offering there should also be laid out an offering of arrows for this Munango Keewati, and this was done from then on.

When Tarzan came in sight of the beach where stood his cabin a strange and unusual spectacle met his vision.

On the placid waters of the landlocked harbor floated a great ship, and on the beach a small boat was drawn up.

But, most wonderful of all, a number of white men like himself were moving about between the beach and his cabin.

Tarzan saw that in many ways they were like the men of his picture books. He crept closer through the trees until he was almost above them.

There were ten men, swarthy, sun tanned and villainous looking fellows. Now they had congregated by the boat and were talking in loud, angry tones, with much gesticulating and shaking of fists.

Presently one of them, a dwarfed, mean faced, black bearded fellow with a countenance which reminded Tarzan of Pamba, the rat, laid his hand upon the shoulder of a giant who stood next him and with whom all the others had been arguing and quarreling.

The little man pointed inland, so that the giant was forced to turn away from the others to look in the direction indicated. As he turned the mean faced man drew a revolver from his belt and shot the giant in the back.

The big fellow threw his hands above his head, his knees bent beneath him, and without a sound he tumbled forward upon the beach dead.

Tarzan puckered his brows into a frown of deep thought. It was well, thought he, that he had not given way to his first impulse to rush forward and greet these white men as brothers.

They were evidently no different from the black men, no more civilized than the apes, no less cruel than Sabor, the tiger.

For a moment the others stood looking at the killer and the giant lying dead upon the beach.

Then one of them laughed and slapped the little man upon the back. There were much more talk and gesticulating, but less quarreling.

Presently they launched the boat and all jumped into it and rowed away toward the great ship, upon whose deck Tarzan could see other figures moving about.

When they had clambered aboard, Tarzan slipped to earth behind a great tree and crept to his cabin, keeping it always between himself and the ship.

Creeping in at the door he found that everything had been ransacked. His books and pencils strewed the floor. His weapons and shields and other little store of treasures were littered about.

As he saw what had been done a wave of anger surged through him. The new scar upon his forehead stood suddenly out, a bar of inflamed crimson against his tawny hide.

Quickly he ran to the cupboard and searched in the far recess of the lower shelf. Ah! He breathed a sigh of relief as he drew out the little tin box and, opening it, found his greatest treasures undisturbed.

The photograph of the smiling, strong faced young man and the little black puzzle book were safe.

What was that?

His quick ear had caught a faint but unfamiliar sound.

Running to the window he looked toward the harbor. Another boat was being lowered from the ship. Soon he saw many people clambering over the sides of the larger vessel and dropping into the boats. They were coming back in full force.

For a moment longer Tarzan watched while a number of boxes and bundles were lowered into the waiting boats. Then as they shoved off from the ship's side the ape man snatched up a piece of paper and with a pencil printed on it several lines of strong, well made, almost letter perfect characters.

This notice he stuck upon the door with a small sharp splinter of wood. Then, gathering up his precious tin box, his arrows and as many bows and spears as he could carry, he hastened out of doors and disappeared into the forest.

When the two boats were beached upon the silvery sand it was a strange assortment of humanity that clambered ashore.

Some twenty souls in all there were if the fifteen rough and villainous appearing seamen could have been said to possess that immortal spark since they were, forsooth, a most filthy and bloodthirsty looking aggregation.

The others of the party were of different stamp.

One was an elderly man with white hair and large rimmed spectacles. His slightly stooped shoulders were draped in an ill fitting though immaculate frock coat. A shiny silk hat added to the incongruity of his garb in an African jungle.

The second member of the party was a tall young man in white ducks, while directly behind came another elderly man with a very high forehead and a fussy, excitable manner.

After these came a huge negress clothed like Solomon as to colors, her great eyes rolling in evident terror first toward the jungle and then toward the cursing band of sailors who were removing the bales and boxes from the boats.

The last member of the party to disembark was a girl of about nineteen, and it was the young man who stood at the boat's bow to lift her high and dry upon land. She gave him a brave and pretty smile of thanks.

In silence the party advanced toward the cabin. It was evident that, whatever their intentions, all had been decided upon before they left the ship.

They came to the door, the sailors carrying the boxes and bales, followed by the five who were of so different a class. Then the men put down their burdens, and then one caught sight of the notice which Tarzan had posted.

"Ho, mates!" he cried. "What's here? This sign was not posted an hour ago or I'll eat the cook."

The others gathered about, craning their necks over the shoulders of those before them, but as few of them could read at all, and then only after the most laborious fashion, one finally turned to the little old man of the top hat and frock coat.

"Hi, perfesser," he called, "step for'rd and read the bloomin' notice."

To be Continued.

SUFFERED EVERYTHING

For Years, Restored To Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Canadian women are continually writing us such letters as the two following, which are heartfelt expressions of gratitude for restored health:

Glanford Station, Ont.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and never found any medicine to compare with it. I had ulcers and falling of womb and doctors did me no good. I suffered dreadfully for years until I began taking your medicine. I also recommend it for nervousness and indigestion." — Mrs. HENRY CLARK, Glanford Station. Ont.

Chesterville, Ont. — "I heard your medicines highly praised, and a year ago I began taking them for falling of womb and ovarian trouble.

"My left side pained me all the time and just before my periods which were irregular and painful it would be worse. To sit down caused me pain and suffering and I would be so nervous sometimes that I could not bear to see any one or hear any one speak. Little specks would float before my eyes and I was always constipated.

"I cannot say too much for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills, for there are no medicines like them. I have taken them and I recommend them to all women. You may publish this testimonial." — Mrs. STEPHEN J. MARTIN, Chesterville, Ontario, Canada.

GET BUSY NOW IS THE TIME TO WORK

Review Contest Is Rapidly Reaching The Climax — Hustle is the Word

The offer that was anonunced in yesterday's paper shows that candidates must work hard from now on. Each realises that he must do his best in the next nine days if he expects to win the automobile. This is the time that shows who has the friends. Some say it is hard to get subscriptions. Did it ever occur to you that if it is hard for you it will be just as hard for the other candidates ?

In a contest of this kind there is no place for the class of people that expect to win a lot of fame and fortune without work. From now until the close of this vote offer candidates will have to work every spare moment. Some are going to. Are you ? You will have to get the business if you expect to win any of the valuable prizes the Review is going to give to some one in the next few weeks.

OFFER CLOSES AT 8 P.M. SHARP

The Monday vote offer began Monday at 8 a.m. and will close on the minute, 8 p.m. March 11. The amount of business you have on that date will mark your progress. Any contestant in the contest can win the grand prize in the next nine days if he gets down to business. The idea in announcing this vote offer was to give the candidates that have not made the best of their time the chance to store up the votes that they have lost since the beginning of the contest. It also gives the candidates that have done good work the same chance. But they must get the business if they expect to win and this business must be in the office by 8 p.m., March 11. Many a victory has been lost by not sticking in the race. Some are too confident and think that they have enough votes to win the grand prize. To this class we might say this: "That it is the opinion of the contest department that unless they get good and busy the next nine days, when the votes are counted they will find that instead of winning the grand prize touring car they are so sure of at the present time, they will find the judges will award them a gold watch or some other small prize. Don't blame the contest department if this is the case. We have tried ever since the beginning to have you do better work, still we urge you to have a little more enthusiasm and work with a little more determination. No race is won or lost until the gong rings out the announcement of the close.

If you are in the lead in the contest you can not allow some one else to go ahead when you could keep in the lead by good hard work.

If you are behind this is your time to catch up and win the prize you so much wanted at the beginning. Think this over, candidates, and act accordingly.

HOW FRIENDS CAN HELP.

One contestant named in the country in the campaign did not know until Saturday that she had been nominated, yet friends had given subscription votes of something like 190,000 to the contestant. The lady was in and learned about the subscription coupons and concluded that if friends had made such a good start, it was time to start after other friends.

It is an even start for everybody that will help themselves and have their friends organized to help them. There are two or three who are backward about themselves, but they have friends who insist they propose to canvass for them.

Every contestant can do what others have already done. Interest your friends. A dozen friends will accomplish a lot for you.

The plain, businesslike proposition offered by The Review, easy to understand and free from chance of being sold out at the last end, commends itself to readers of this paper and the public generally. Everyone is assured a fair deal and the contest department stands ready to advise and help any worker who desires such assistance.

Gave Life For Children.

SPOKANE, March 2.—Mrs. Stella Maries, a widow, lost her life early yesterday when she attempted unsuccessfully to save the lives of her two daughters, Helen, 4, and Gale, 7 years old. The children also perished.

The mother discovered her home in Hillyard, a suburb, on fire, and after arousing her two sons, went to her daughters' bedroom. The flames spread so rapidly that she did not have time to save her girls or escape herself, and the three bodies were found in the ruins of the home.

Two boys, 12 and 14 years old, escaped by jumping from the second storey window.

FOUR WINTERS OF RHEUMATISM

Cured of Sciatica And Muscular Rheumatism By "Fruit-a-tives"

RIDGETOWN, ONT., May 21st. 1913.

"Fruit-a-tives" cured me of Rheumatism. It was the only medicine that made any impression on me. I was a terrible sufferer from Rheumatism. I was laid up for four winters with Sciatica and Muscular Rheumatism, and was completely crippled.

Some neighbor of mine told me that "Fruit-a-tives" helped him, and I started in to take them. I used "Fruit-a-tives" faithfully for two years, taking them every day as I saw they were doing me good, and the results were marvellous.

For over two years, I have been completely free from any Rheumatic Pains whatever, and I give "Fruit-a-tives" the credit." W. H. RACHER.

CARRIES MISSIVE TO KING.

Mrs. Dacre Fox Sees It Safely To the Royal Secretary.

LONDON, March 2.—Mrs. Dacre Fox informed a meeting of suffragettes here yesterday she had delivered Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst's letter at Buckingham Palace under escort of the gate policeman, who refused to allow her to enter alone.

Mrs. Pankhurst's letter, asking the King to receive a deputation, which desired to complain of "the barbarous methods of torture by Your Majesty's Ministers."

Mrs. Dacre Fox handed the letter to the King's private secretary. If no reply is received, another letter will be sent.

"If His Majesty is unwise enough to refuse to see the deputation," said Mrs. Dacre Fox, "we will go to Buckingham Palace anyway."

Twenty years ago on the First of March next, a well-known resident of this city took out at age 28 a 10 pay 20 year endowment policy for $1,000, No. 43860, in the Sun Life of Canada.

The premium he paid on the participating plan was ... $69.30
The premium he paid on the non-par plan was .. 62.25
Extra paid for profits for 10 years .. $7.05

He received in cash at the end of 20 years, $1,279.25, that is, the $70.50 extra that he paid for profits yielded him $279.25, almost 400 per cent.

Would you not like something like that?

Or, he could draw out $736.45 in cash, which is $43.45 more than all he paid in, and receive a fully paid-up participating policy for life.

You can never obtain such results as these on the non-participating plan unless you die and die early, so that the price will not become too high.

ORIENTAL PROBLEM DISCUSSED BY MEMBERS OF HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. Frank Oliver, in Moving For Papers, Registers Vigorous Objection to Admittance of Asiatics Into Canada—Hon. Rudolphe Lemieux Declares For Chinese and Japs.

OTTAWA, March 3.—Oriental immigration, heretofore discussed exclusively by British Columbia members, was the subject of a debate in the House yesterday in which only one member from the Pacific province participated.

Hon. Frank Oliver, speaking to a motion for the production of papers respecting the recent order in council in regard to the exclusion of artisans and laborers from British Columbia and the deportation of certain Hindus, said that this country would soon have to decide whether Asiatic civilization or European civilization was to be dominant in every part of Canada.

Personally, he believed that all Asiatics were undesirable immigrants, and that the Government should take steps to stringently restrict Oriental immigration. The immigration officials, he said, should be vested with plenary powers to deport them.

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux thought Canada could not decently increase the present head tax of $500 on Chinese, and at the same time build up an increased trade with China.

As to the Japanese, Mr. Lemieux denied that they were undesirable, but, on the contrary, averred that Japan from every point of view rivalled in progress and efficiency the nations of Europe. Moreover, Japan was the great ally of Britain, and her people could not be branded as undesirables.

As to Hindu immigration, it presented a problem which Mr. Lemieux believed to be acute. From an economic standpoint the Hindus were undesirables, but they were British subjects.

Mr. Stevens (Vancouver) presented in trenchant form British Columbia's objections to oriental immigration. No one, he said, any longer favored Oriental immigration except the transportation companies and a few men deceived by the line of "cheap" labor.

Turning to the Hindus, Mr. Stevens declared that their moral standard was low and they lived in the greatest filth and degradation. They were afflicted with hookworm and if allowed to come here in large numbers would degrade the national type.

Mr. Knowles (Moose Jaw) disagreed radically with Mr. Lemieux and declared himself against Oriental immigration. The Hindus were British subjects, but that had nothing at all to do with the matter.

British subjects were sometimes hanged, imprisoned and lashed, and if they were undesirable immigrants they should be excluded from the country. Their being British subjects had nothing on earth to do with the matter one way or the other.

Hon. W. J. Roche, Minister of Interior, said that the Sikh priest recently sent back to India had not been deported because he was a Hindu, but because he was an undesirable person who had gotten into the country by criminal means. He said that an order-in-council had been issued, forbidding the entrance of laborers and artisans into British Columbia because of labor conditions in that province. There was much unemployment, and it was thought best for a time to prohibit the entry of laborers and artisans. The order, however, was only for a limited period, and would expire on the 31st inst. The Government had not yet determined whether to extend it for another six months, although it had been requested by the laboring people in British Columbia to do so.

Hon. C. J. Doherty, Minister of Justice, discussed the legal question raised by Mr. Lemieux as to the power of the courts to interfere with the deportation by writs of habeas corpus. He said that in the case of the Sikh priest, and also in the case of Harry Thaw, no writ had been served upon the immigration officers. I the case of the Hindus at Vancouver. Chief Justice Hunter had allowed the writ, and not because of any defect in the Immigration Act, but because the order-in-council relied upon was not authorized by the Immigration Act. He therefore held that it had never been decided by any court whether or no the Dominion Parliament had power to abolish the writ of habeas corpus. It was an interesting question, and a very important one, but he did not propose to attempt to decide it at this time.

Hon. J. D. Hazen, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, interrogated by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, made a brief statement respecting the status of the international fisheries treaty. Canada had notified the U. S. that she would withdraw if the treaty was not ratified by the United States by March 1, 1914. That date has now passed, but in view of assurances from Washington that the necessary legislation would be passed by Congress within a short time, the Dominion Government had consented to wait a reasonable time in the hope that the treaty would be fully ratified.

To Sentence White Slavers.

CHICAGO, March 3.—Charles and Zoe Wilson, alias Willard, whose conviction under the Mann Act in the Federal Court here recently was affirmed by the U. S. Supreme Court yesterday, were remanded to the county jail to await sentence. Their appeal resulted in the affirming of the validity of the Mann Act. They were unable to furnish bonds of $15,000 each.

NOW IT'S KARAKULE.

Prince Edward Islanders Have Gone In For Persian Lamb Fur.

Canada's fur-raising province—that is certainly Prince Edward Island—is now going in for Karakule stock, and this seems likely to prove a most lucrative phase of the industry.

On a farm near Charlottetown, there is a herd of eleven pure-bred Karakule sheep which were brought over from the desert of Kokhara to this country some little time ago.

These animals are used in their native country to produce Persian lamb, Astrachan, Krimmer, and Broadtail, or baby lamb fur. These different kinds of fur come from the offspring of the Karakule sheep, the very best Persian lamb fur being secured from the young animal as soon after birth as possible.

More recently a shipment of 350 Lincoln sheep were sent to Prince Edward Island. These will be used to cross with the thoroughbred karakule stock, and it is expected that pelts will be supplied to the London market shortly.

Government tests in the United States, where the first herd of these foreign sheep were brought in 1908 by Dr. C. C. Young, the eminent Russian experimentalist, with the cooperation of ex-President Theodore Roosevelt, show that Karakule sheep when crossed with English long-wool breeds, such as Lincolns, Cotswolds, or Highland Black Faces, will produce skins valued at from $6 to $13 each in wholesale lots of 160 to 200 skins per lot.

According to Mr. J. Walter Jones, B.S.A., of Charlottetown, whose report to the Conservation Commission on fur-farming in Canada has made him a recognized authority on breeding and raising of fur-bearing animals in captivity, the prospects of the Persian lamb fur industry in his province are exceedingly bright. Dr. Young, who has been conducting his experiments since 1908 in Texas, with the only other herd of pure-bred Karakules which was brought to America from Bokhara, is interested in the new Prince Edward Island company.

America has been paying out every year for a considerable period, Mr. Jones points out, some $14,000,000 for the fur pelts of the Persian lamb, which he claims by the way, is not a product of the Persian sheep. "Persian lamb" is merely a commercial term established by furriers, according to him, and that fur is really produced from the Karakule sheep which are found in greatest abundance on the Bokhara desert north of Persia.

It is very evident that fur farmers in Canada are not deterred by the lower prices prevalent in the fur market just now, and look for a good business next season.

Beneficent Dissipation.

A New Brunswick jury once found a prisoner guilty of assault and robbery, and the late Judge Gregory sentenced him to five years on the first count and three on the second.

The clerk of the court arose to repeat the sentence, but having taken a glass too much he was unable to give the total sentence correctly.

"You," he announced, addressing the prisoner, "are sentenced to seven years in the penitentiary."

"No, that's not right."

"You," making a fresh start, "are sentenced to nine years."

"No; not right."

"You might as well make it five years," said the judge, and the clerk got through the remainder of the formula without difficulty.

"I saved the prisoner three years by being drunk," he said later, "and time counts at Dorchester."—Saturday Night.

DECISIVE ACTION MUCH IN NEED

Wilson will take Drastic Steps if all Else Fails.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—President Wilson revealed to those who discussed Mexican affairs with him yesterday that he fully realised the gravity of the situation resulting from the killing of Wm. S. Benton, a British subject; the reported murder of Gustav Bauch and Clemente Vergara, American citizens, and Gen. Carranza's denial of the right of the United States to look after the interests of foreigners generally in Mexico.

The President spoke deploringly of armed intervention, but at the same time pointedly referred to the size and power of a country like the United States as being sufficient warrant for a calm and patient course while compliance with the American demands was being sought.

Callers got the impression from the President that he was determined to try every peaceful means at his disposal to solve the Mexican problem, but that he realized certain eventualities might mean a drastic course. He spoke with a firmness that showed his determination not to be stampeded into action by radical speeches in Congress, but with a hint that when the necessity arose the American Government could be expected to move decisively and effectively.

Sir Edward Grey's expected statement in the House of Commons is awaited with much interest, as it is hoped by many he will show just how far Great Britain expects reparation for the Benton killing at this time. To-day Sir Lionel Carden, the British Minister to Mexico, will discuss Mexican affairs with President Wilson, bringing him the latest information about the Huerta Government and the situation in Mexico City.

Bauch Murdered Thinks Villa.

EL PASO, Texas, March 3.—Gen. Villa's expressed belief that Gustav Bauch, who was arrested at Juarez as a spy two weeks ago, was the victim of an assassin, occasioned no surprise here, where the German-American sister, Mrs. J. M. Patterson, and others interested in the case, have been resigned to the conclusion that Bauch was slain at Juarez a week ago last Friday. They scout the personal enemy idea, however.

Repeated assertions have been made by certain Juarez rebels, talking confidentially to friends on this side of the border, that Bauch was executed, and the stories all agreed on the date of the execution, which was the day Gen. Villa departed for Chihuahua.

ULSTER PLEDGE SIGNED.

Prominent Britons Promise To Take Steps to Prevent Home Rule.

LONDON, March 3—Lord Roberts, Viscount Milner, Baron Balfour of Burleigh, Rudyard Kipling, Prof. Albert Venn Diecey and Sir William Ramsay, and a score of less prominent persons, yesterday issued an appeal to their fellow-countrymen to follow their example in signing a declaration which is milder in form than the Ulster covenant, by which they hold themselves in case the Irish home rule bill becomes a law without first being submitted to the judgment of the nation, "justified in taking or supporting any action that may be effective to prevent it being put in operation."

The signatories of the appeal are careful to point out that by signing the declaration "no man will pledge himself to take any particular action of which his conscience or judgment does not approve."

Expects an Election.

LONDON, March 3.—Sir George Doughty, well-known fighting industry promoter, who has many Canadian interests, tells his Grimsby constituents to expect a general election within two months. He is confident that no Government dare pass home rule before appealing to the country.

"It's a sure sign of a quitter when a man begins to want credit for what he has done."

SOME CAUSES OF POVERTY

The subject of Rev. R. Pogue's sermon Sunday night in St. Paul's church was. "Some Causes of Poverty and their Cure." Among the minor causes of which he spoke he referred first to the drink evil. It is impossible to overestimate the misery, the wretchedness and the woe that flow from the traffic in intoxicating liquor. It is impossible for a country such as the United States to squander over $1,200,000,000 yearly, and a country such as Canada, directly and indirectly, $180,000,000, in a traffic that affords no enjoyment to life and which is only wastful and destructive without, causing untold misery and suffering. If the end of the Socialist propaganda, if the propaganda of every Social Reformer, is the bringing about of the time when every one shall be well fed, well housed, and well paid, when perfect justice and love shall dominate all our social relations, then they must wage a constant warfare against the liquor traffic as one of the most prolific causes of loss, waste and misery that exists. All such workers must inform themselves of the true nature of alcohol, they must accept the conclusions arrived at after the most careful scientific tests, that alcohol is never a food, that it is always and only a poison, and always and only hurtful to the man who uses it. If money is wasted in drink it cannot be expected that the workingman and his family will have a generous supply of food upon their table or comfortable clothing upon their back. The cure of this cause of poverty is the complete suppression of the traffic. Every Social Reformer must work for nothing less than total prohibition.

Trusts, Combines, Land Monopoly.

Among other minor causes of poverty that he mentioned were, improvidence and mismanagement in the home, gambling, sloth, laziness, militarism, high protective tariffs. The two great causes are trusts and combines, and land monopoly. Of the first of these he said it is impossible to estimate the extent of the slavery in which people are held to-day by the power of trusts and mergers. He quoted a writer in the Canadian Chartered Accountant, who makes the statement that he can prove the existence of combinations in connection with the food which is daily on the table of the poor man struggling to support his wife and family of Canadian boys and girls, and that the result of one such combination was to raise the price of the commodity which they manufactured, 50 per cent. over what the individual companies had been receiving before the combine. Now that is only one article of food. But when you take into consideration that combines control the price of practically everything you buy, whether it be boots, carpets, carriages, rubber goods, groceries and provisions, and that they extract exhorbitant profits on all of these things, you will readily see how great must be the suffering that comes to the ordinary working man as a consequence. The most serious effect is the concentration of business in cities and large centres. There are thousands of villages and towns all through Canada which a few years ago were centres of thriving industries, and as a result of these combinations are now lifeless and dead. The machinery in the plant lies rusting, and the men who once worked there have been compelled to move into the cities and thus the population of our small towns has been depleted while that of the big cities has been swelled. The result of that upon labour has been that with a surplus labour market, wages have been cut down while many have been unable to get employment at all. And hence the poverty resulting from the great number of idle men during the past winter.

Greatest of All Evils.

But the greatest of all evils as a cause of poverty is the evil of land monopoly. What is the evil of land monopoly? It is that a few men own and control the great natural resources of the earth which God has given for the use of all. There is no principle more evident, more true, more in harmony with the teaching of the word of God than that God made the world for, and gave it to, the children of men, and that all men should have equality of opportunity in the use of the earth and its resources. God never gave to any individual or government the power to put a fence around a large portion of the earth and thus deny free access to those who want to use it. It was never the intention of the Creator that two-thirds of the land of Britain should be owned by 2500 people or that 42 men should control one-third of the wealth of Canada.

God never gave to a few men the right of putting a fence around large tracts of land which He has given for the use of all, and call it theirs and by adopting a dog-in-the-manger policy keep other people from living upon it, except at such prices as they shall dictate. Such a policy is utterly opposed to the doctrine that all men are the children of God, to the doctrine of the brotherhood of man, and to the command of the Master who taught His disciples to love their neighbor as themselves. The national conscience is being aroused to the existence of these evils. The church is beginning to insist on the truth being told about social wrongs. The great Social Congress, which this week is meeting in the city of Ottawa is one of the significant signs of the times. The dawning of a better day for the poor and oppressed of all lands is at hand. Already the rays of the morning are gilding the hill tops.

TOOLROOM DEFEAT TEST AND TAKE CHAMPIONSHIP

Good Hockey Seen in Final for Mercantile League Honors

Tool Room Hockey Club, champions of the Mercantile Hockey League. Once again will the famous Tool Room septette carry this title. Ever since the Mercantile League was formed, some four years ago, this same team has beed figuring in it all the time. Three times have they won the championship. The score was 7-4.

The game had hardly commenced when Barrie and Jackson went right through the whole Test team and scored. It was a quick bit of work and some of the fans hardly realised that the game had started. The Test awakened, however, and for a while it was a battle royal, with both teams back checking like fiends. Up and down the puck went, and although the Tool Room forward line peppered Dwyer they couldn't get the disc by him. Finally, after fifteen minutes' of fast hockey, Kelly secured the puck at the back of his own goal and after circling every Test man he pulled Dwyer out and scored. It was easily the feature of the game. It just took five minutes for the Tool Room to make it three, Cranfield doing the trick on a long shot.

Five minutes after the resting period Primeau had secured two goals, the first one from a scrimmage, and the second one after a nice rush. Then the Test began to press. Boone scored on a shot from the side, Carter tore down on a nice rush which resulted in a goal, and then Boone secured another on a long lift. Excitement was supreme. The Tool Room were forced to the defensive, and when Carter notched another and made it 5-4 Test chances began to fade. For a while the battle was terrific, and then Jackson and Barrie went down on a long rush and the latter beat Dwyer from close in. The Test were working hard, however, and looked dangerous until Cranfield scored on a long shot. It took the courage out of them. The goal itself was a gift. Dwyer stopped it all right, but it fell down to the ice and rolled in between his feet. Full time rang a few seconds afterwards.

All the Tool Room team, especially Jackson and Barrie, played great hockey, while the Test had just one man, and he was Dwyer. Had it not been for him the score would have been much higher.

The teams:

Tool Room—goal, Cassidy; defence, Kelly and McGrath; rover, Barrie; centre, Jackson; wings, Cranfield and Primeau.

Test—goal, Dwyer; defence, McKenan and Breckenried; rover, McDougall; centre, Carter; wings, Munro and Boone.

Mr. Len Dobson handled the game to the satisfaction of all.

SENIOR CHURCH LEAGUE.

The Executive of the Senior Church Hockey League has arranged for the following games to be played:

Jack—What's awful about it?

Bob—Why, Dick was such an easy guy to borrow money from!—New York Globe.

All Women Are Alike.

"There is one thing I want very much."

"Indeed! What is it?"

"To have an heiress marry me."

"That ought to be easy for you to pull off."

"Ought it?"

"Yes. You see, you are somewhat shopworn."

"What has that to do with it?"

"Just make a noise like a bargain and watch them flock around you."

Getting Ready.

"You are charged with stealing a baseball bat while the clubs were excited over a hit."

"Yes, judge; I stole it, but it was in self defense."

"How do you expect me to believe that?"

"Because it should be plain to any one. I hear a comet is headed this way, and I haven't a single weapon about the place."

Earned a Reward.

"Well, what are you fellows going to give me?"

"Give you?"

"Yes."

"Why should we give you anything?"

"Why, good gracious, man, didn't I keep Brown from telling stories the whole of the evening?"

The Truthful Lad.

"Where is the milkmaid, my little lad?" asked the country boarder of the farmer's chore boy.

"Milk made?"

"Yes."

"Most of it is made right here at the pump," returned the honest youth.

Just a Substitute.

"That was my dog you kicked, sir."

"Suppose it was."

"You might as well have kicked me."

"Well, you weren't handy."

His Belief.

"Do you believe in luck?"

"In bad luck sometimes."

"When?"

"When I have it."

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

The finest point in being clever is never to let the general run of people find out that you are clever.

When you try to discharge the hired girl and can't there is something doing in the pantry.

When a man asks you if there is anything he can do for you he gets the surprise of his life if you touch him for $10.

Being popular sounds good and sometimes feels fine until you have to draw the check for it.

Sometimes the warmth of your neighbors' affections for you depends upon the capacity of your coal bin.

The man who starts out to lead the simple life may be desirous of solitude, and he may be getting ready to go on the lecture platform and tell about it.

SUNDAY'S STORM CAUSED HEAVY PROPERTY LOSS

Crashing Walls, Unrooted Houses, Stalled Trains and Towns In Darkness Figure in Record of the Tempest Which Swept Over the Province.

TORONTO, March 3.—Despite the fact that the gale which swept Ontario and eastern Canada yesterday and Sunday was the worst in the history of the province, the damage done is not as extensive as that of several previous storms, including the two big hurricanes of last year. However, the damage in Ontario will run into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The greatest individual losses reported in and around Toronto are at Hanlan's Point and at the Ontario National Brick Co.'s yards at Cooksville. The loss at the former is estimated at over $10,000, and at the latter at $15,000. Scores of householders and property-holders in the city sustained losses of from $500 to $1,000, and may people had narrow escapes from collapsing houses, chimneys and flying missiles.

There was no abatement of the confusion of Sunday on the railroads yesterday, and, indeed, matters were made rather more complicated because of a freight derailment at Brighton, 92 miles east of Toronto, on the G.T.R. This tied up a number of trains, and was a source of considerable worry to officials.

As for the storm, it has gone on its way east and all day yesterday the vanguard of the disturbance harried Nova Scotia and did considerable damage to the shipping.

Factory Wall Blown Down.

WOODSTOCK, March 3.—Sunday night's gale did considerable damage in and around Woodstock. About 5 o'clock yesterday morning, with the wind at its highest, about twenty feet of brick wall on the north side of the Canadian Furniture factory gave way, a lot of debris falling into the packing-room, destroying considerable stock. The loss is estimated at $1,000.

Side of House Fell In.

INGERSOLL, March 3. — Falling bricks and mortar which crashed into their bedrooms about 5 o'clock yesterday morning, when a large section of the north side of a brick house collapsed before the fury of the wind, rudely awakened the family of Mr. Wm. Selden, North Oxford.

Churches In Darkness.

WHITBY, March 3.—Church services were conducted largely in darkness here Sunday evening, owing to the storm putting the Seymour Power lines out of business. The lights were on intermittently, but several congregations sat in darkness listening to illuminating addresses.

Roofs Torn Off, Windows Blown In.

ST. THOMAS, March 3.—The storm in this vicinity did no great amount of damage, although many trees were blown down and fences damaged. The roof of the London & Lake Erie Transportation Co. station at Union, south of here, was blown off, and one of the colored windows in the Holy Angels' Church was blown in.

Had To Postpone Burial.

KINGSTON, March 3.—While proceeding to a funeral at Kingston Mills yesterday morning, Rev. Father Halligan and Undertaken Thomas Ronan were thrown out in a snowdrift when the hack in which they were being driven upset. The funeral party had to turn back, and the burial was postponed until to-day, owing to the snowbound roads.

Litigants Storm-Stayed.

WELLAND, March 3. — Division Court, which opened yesterday morning, was forced to adjourn until the afternoon, as many of the litigants were unable to reach here owing to the blocking of the railways and country roads by the blizzard. Railway traffic was resumed with fair regularity yesterday afternoon.

Fled to Barn; It Unroofed.

STRATFORD, March 3. — During Sunday night's violent gale a corner of the residence of J. T. Mace was blown down. The family took to the barn for shelter and safety, but the next blast lifted the roof off that structure also.

Youth Suspected of Murder.

DECATUR, Ill., March 3—"If anything happens to me, see John Bancom."

This note, found on the body of F. W. Mennerich, who was killed in his house by a bomb received by mail, resulted in the arrest yesterday of Bancom, who is only 18 years old.

The coroner's jury had recommended that the youth, who is said to have assaulted Mennerich last week after a quarrel, be held for the grand jury pending a further investigation of the tragedy.

United States postal inspectors are investigating a charge that a friend of Mennerich's wife, from whom he was separated, may be implicated.

Girl Frozen To Death.

HAZLETON, Pa., March 3. — Ella Sweeney, 22 years old, was found frozen to death yesterday in a sleigh where her companion, James Bartoldi, had left her Sunday night in the blizzard while he went for help.

The young woman had become cold and terror-stricken over the raging storm, and there were four or five miles more of hard road to travel. Her companion stopped the horse within 300 yards of shelter and tramped two miles over the mountain for assistance. Almost collapsing at the end of his journey, he was not permitted to make the return trip. A searching party yesterday found the body of the girl.

Deceived.

Dorcas—You say the hero was disappointed in love?

Dorothy—Yes. He thought that after marriage his father-in-law would support him.—Judge.

Her Last Word to That Rude Person.

"The photograph flatters you," commented the earnest young man.

"Then it is more polite than you are," replied the indignant maiden.—Buffalo Express.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Dr. William Stanley Madill of Toronto, spent Sunday with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Madill, 554 Aylmer St.

Mr. Harry and Mr. Fred Cressman have left the city to spend a week in New York, for the purpose of making many special purchases for several departments of the Cressman Store.

An enjoyable event took place Friday evening at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Gadd, 467 King Street, when about thirty-five couples enjoyed themselves on a private rink, provided by Mr. Gadd and Mr. Benson, and were afterwards entertained in the house to music and games.

Court Peterborough and Court Langton, C.O.O.F., were at home to their friends in the Foresters' Hall, Friday evening. Mr. J. J. Hartley was chairman and he gave a short address on the aims and benefits of the Order, which he said was one of the greatest fraternal organizations. The program was followed by dancing, the music being supplied by Messrs. Percy Blade and Wm. Graham. Mr. Arthur Vass was floor manager.

Word was received to-day by Police Magistrate Dumble, K.C., from Denver, Col., to the effect that his granddaughter, Miss Frances Dumble, daughter of Mr. Frank H. Dumble, well known in this city, died yesterday.

Mrs. Robert Hicks will not receive to-morrow, nor again this season.

Miss Vilda Henry, of Toronto, is the guest of Mrs. G. C. Taylor, Frederick avenue.

DAUGHTERS OF THE EMPIRE.

The annual meeting of the 57th Chapter of the Daughters of the Empire was held in their room at the Armouries last Thursday afternoon, which was largely attended. Mrs. F. Neal read an instructive paper on the "White Plague." Colonel Miller was to have given an address, but at the last moment was unavoidably prevented being present.

Mrs. Basil Hall's resignation was received with regret and Mrs. F. Neal appointed her successor. The officers for the coming year are:—

Standard Bearer—Mrs. (Rev.) J. C. Davidson.

Regent—Mrs. (Col.) E. Clegg.

First Vice-President—Mrs. J. Mills

Second Vice-Regent—Mrs. L. M. Hayes.

Secretary—Mrs. Frank Neal.

Assistant Secretary — Mrs. J. Sharpe.

"Echoes" Secretary — Miss Higgins.

The secretary's report was read by Mrs. Basil Hall, as follows:—

Madam Regent and Ladies,—As secretary of the Chapter for the year ending on the 26th of February, 1914, I beg to report on the work done during my term of office as follows:—Nine regular monthly meetings have been held with an average attendance of about twenty-five members. The year closes with a membership of seventy-two, as compared with sixey-eight last year, an increase of four members.

In March, 1913, the Chapter became affiliated with the National Council of Women, and at a later meeting representatives were chosen to act with the regent for thechapter in the National Council.

On the 16th April, 1913, a very successful afternoon bridge and an equally successful evening military euchre were held for the purpose of raising money to help in the work of the order.

On Empire Day some of our members, directed at a previous meeting, visited the various cemeteries and decorated the graves of soldiers with flags, and on the same day the city schools were visited.

A bronze tablet in memory of Dan Spence, who died on active service in South Africa, during the Boer war was erected by the chapter at the Armouries.

In October we donated $5.00 towards the memorial fund for the late President, Mrs. Nordeimer.

The chapter gave an afternoon tea and Hallowe'en Party to which the general public was invited in the fall to raise money for the work of the order.

An address by Mrs. Murray, the founder of the order, on "The Order, Its Past and Future," was received and read at one of the meetings.

An informal reception was given in December to Lady Gibson on the occasion of her visit to the city in connection with St. George's church bazaar in the Armouries.

On the occasion of Mrs. Wells' lecture to the National Council of Women we donated $2.00 as our share of the expenses.

During the year we have received through the kindness of Colonel Young, from the Militia Department, a very old cannon and have had it mounted and placed at the Murray street entrance to the Armouries.

At our last meeting we had the good fortune of having with us Miss Boulton, of Toronto, who gave a very lucid and instructive address on "Woman's Work."

All ofw hich is respectfully submitted.

The treasurer's report was read by Mrs. G. Hall.

Votes of thanks were tendered the officers for their successful work for the year. The meeting was then closed with prayer by the regent. A pleasant social time was then enjoyed, dainty refreshments were served.

"McFADDEN'S FLATS"

The Show That Makes the World Laugh

"McFadden's Flats," which will be next attraction at the Grand Opera House on Saturday next, March 7th, deals wih a humorous exposition of life on the East side district of New York. It is a farce comedy that has weathered many successful seasons, yet seems to be as potent an attraction as when it was originally produced over fifteen years ago. This season all that remains of the old piece is its title. The play has been thoroughly revised, fitted up with new scenery, stage and electrical effects, an entire new cast and a brand new book and score. The comedians are all capable and the show girls, thirty in number, besides knowing how to sing and dance uncommonly well, possess the unusual requisite of knowing how to pose and look pretty. There are specialties too, heretofore never introduced on any stage, and features that would be the saving grace of a production a notch or so lower in the mirth provoking line. Many new songs have been written for the piece and all have the correct swing and rythm to make them popular.

$25 FEE FOR AUCTIONEERS

A Case Where Decrease means More Money for the City.

After John F. Thornton, on behalf of himself and other auctioneers, asked Council last night to decrease the license fee for auctioneers in the city from $50 to $25, the same as the County fee, and said the city would receive more money by this move as they would take outb oth a County and City license. It was decided to amend tbe yb-law, changing tbe fee to $25.

A VINDICTIVE LADY.

She Not Only Seeks Divorce But Wants Hubby Fired.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 3.—In addition to having brought divorce proceedings against Frederick S. Eggers, sheriff of San Francisco County, his wife announced yesterday in a signed statement that she would circulate a petition for his recall from office. They have lived together thirty-five years.

"This is not spite work," said Mrs. Eggers. "I simply do not believe that Sheriff Eggers is a fit man to be in a public office."

In her statement Mrs. Eggers outlines testimony which she has given before the grand jury.

STORM SIGNALLING.

Canada Owes Her Present System to the Militia Department.

It is to the militia that Canada's storm signal system owes its origin. In 1860 the first use of the telegraph for storm signal work on the continent was begun at Washington, but was abandoned through the stress of the civil war until 1870 when it was resumed under the supervision of the United States Militia Department. It was through the militia that the Dominion had its first observatory, which was a building of logs covered over with plaster, and was erected in Toronto in 1840 in the vicinity of what is now Queen's Park, says R. F. Stupart in a recent lecture on the subject.

In 1852 the militia turned over the Toronto Observatory to the Colonial Government and in 1855 a new building had been erected. It was in 1870, when the observatory work was under the late Professor Kingston, that the storm signal service was introduced in Canada, for which purpose the Government made a grant of $5,000. This was followed by the establishment of a few storm signal stations on the great lakes, and an exchange of reports was made with the weather bureau at Washington, which also bad at that time a few storm signal stations throughout the United States. When Washington knew of a storm heading for the great lakes, word was sent from that city to Toronto and from Toronto to the storm signal stations.

The Dominion now possesses 110 storm signal stations. Of these, three are on the British Columbia coast, 30 are on the great lakes, and the balance in the maritime provinces.

Newfoundland receives its warnings of storms through the Canadian storm signal service which is in a most excellent position to know of storms heading for Newfoundland from the west.

The difficulties experienced in telling the exact course which a storm will take is shown by the fact that of the 16,000 weather charts now in the possession of the Toronto Observatory, not two can be found which do not bear a marked difference. In view of this it is remarkable how rarely the bureaus are wrong in their calculations.

The Terrible Turk.

Hon. W. J. Hanna, who as Provincial Secretary of Ontario, has instituted an experiment in prison reform which is attracting attention all over the world, was recently describing some of the characters who have to be handled by the officials at the Guelph Prison Farm, where the offenders labor day after day without even a guard to supervise them, and sleep at night in unlocked dormitories.

"The very hardest class we encounter," he said, "are those fellows whose nature has made more or less irresponsible. I mean the men who have no definite trade, but who are apt to be found anywhere, doing anything. For instance, there's Lafe Wood, who lives near my house in Sarnia. You can never know where you'll meet him or what he will be doing. Let me tell you how I met him at the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo twelve years ago.

"I was walking up the Midway, and paused at the Turkish Village to hear the barker describe the wonders inside, and at the same time to study the Turk who was on the platform with the barker. The Turk addressed a few words to the crowd—in his native Turkish, of course, which I couldn't understand. Being interested in his national cotsume I moved up closer to get a better look at him. When the barker resumed his monologue, the Turk, chancing to turn and catch my eye, leaned over toward me.

"'Hello, Mr. Hanna,' he said; 'how are all the folks in Sarnia?'"

SURGICAL TAILORING.

Daring Method of Making New Organs From Old Ones.

Much more wonderful than the surgery of cutting things out of the body is the modern surgery of making new parts of a person's body out of some convenient organ or membrane that may be spared for the purpose. One of the most astonishing is a recent method of supplying a person with a new esophagus—the tube in the throat through which food is sent from the mouth to the stomach. It illustrates perfectly the ingenious schemes of this kind of surgery.

The operation is to relieve a person who cannot swallow well, owing to some growth in the throat, and so is wasting away from lack of nutrition. A strip of the person's stomach is used to make a new esophagus. A narrow flap three or four inches wide is cut in the stomach from end to end, the flap being left attached to the stomach at one end. The flap is then held back and the two edges of the stomach are sewed together, leaving the patient a whole stomach again, though smaller than normal.

The flap is then made into a tube by sewing its edges together, and care is taken to leave an opening from this tube into the stomach at the end where the flap is still attached to the stomach. Satisfactory blood circulation is provided for this flap by the blood vessels entering it from the end attached to the stomach. The tube now provided forms a new esophagus.

The next step in the operation is to bring this esophagus to a hole in the skin of the patient's chest, thus providing a method by which the patient can feed himself by pouring liquid food through the tube.

A later operation, not yet so fully perfected, can come when the patient has recovered from this first operation. This consists in cutting out the part of the old esophagus that is blocked by a growth and then taking the new tube away from the chest and connecting it, through the normal path of the esophagus, to the good part of the gullet up near the patient's mouth. This second operation will then give a new throat, through which food passes from the mouth to the stomach normally.—Saturday Evening Post.

McGill's Generous Friend.

The total of Lord Strathcona's gifts to McGill University, Montreal, is brought up to $2,275,000 by the recent announcement of the bequest in his will. His last gift of $880,000 is the balance of a sum of one million dollars which he promised for the extension of the higher education of women movement, and which he donated $120,000 on account in 1890 after the Royal Victoria College for Women affiliated to McGill had been built by him at a cost of $350,000. During the last fifteen years Lord Strathcona had paid over regularly the interest amounting to $45,000 a year, upon the promised endowment fund of $880,000, which will be now handed to the university authorities earmarked for the Victoria College. The check for last year's interest was mailed to Principal Peterson only a few days before Lord Strathcona died.

While the Royal Victoria College is the only department of the university to benefit by the will, McGill was very generously treated by Lord Strathcona in his lifetime. The medical faculty received $850,000, the pension fund $50,000, whilst Strathcona Hall was made possible by his initial gift of $25,000.

Pope's Life of Sir John A.

Of all Sir Joseph Pope's services to Canada, perhaps the greatest is the preparation of the "Life of Sir John A. Macdonald." It will always remain a classic among Canadian biographies, because of the intimate light it sheds upon the political life of the Dominion. A companion piece to it is a collection of Confederate documents, including a diary of the Quebec conference, which is indispensable to the man who wants to know how we came to be. Sir Joseph Pope's labors as a public servant, valuable though they are, may be forgotten. His services as the literary executor of Sir John A. Macdonald are a permanent part of the life of Canada.

Fur Animals Diminishing.

In less than ten years practically all the fur-bearing animals in the County of Kent, Ontario, will be extinct, if the prediction made by W. P. Conway, a hunter and trapper from Rondeau, Ont., is correct. Conway brought in over 150 skins, consisting of 43 coon, 80 muskrat and 40 skunk. In three days he caught 22 coons on the Government park at Rondeau, to hunt and trap on which preserve he has a permit.

Lemieux Persisted.

Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux is one of the finest English-speaking orators on the French side of the Canadian Commons, but it was not always thus.

Old Parliamentarians have a painful recollection of his first speech in the House of Commons. He blundered, stammered, and finally sat down in utter confusion without having impressed his thoughts on his audience. After the awkward silence had been broken and the wheels of procedure were revolving again, an old gentleman rose up from his seat on the Conservative side of the House and crossed over to the Liberal side, where Mr. Lemieux was sitting.

He was Mr. W. R. Brock, who was then sitting for one of the Toronto constituencies.

"I will never try to speak in English again," said Mr. Lemieux, in deep mortification.

"Nonsense," said Mr. Brock. "It was your first attempt, and you did well when that fact is considered. Keep at it."

Cheered by this timely advice, Mr. Lemieux did "keep at it," and reaped his reward.

TOWNSHIP IS HEAVY LOSER

All Papers are Burned in Fire at Office and Clerk's Home.

QUEENSVILLE, March 3. — The Township of East Gwillimbury has suffered an irreparable loss in the complete destruction of all its papers in a fire which consumed the office and also the home of Mr. A. McKenzie, Township Clerk, at an early hour yesterday morning. The family all escaped in safety, and managed to save most of their household goods.

The township's loss is, of course, beyond estimation. The Mount Albert Telephone Co., Limited, loses to the extent of about $250, with no insurance. Mr. McKenzie's loss on his house is about $1,500, with insurance unknown.

Imprisoned in Fire.

PETROLEA, March 3.—With the wind blowing forty miles an hour and the thermometer recording ten degrees above zero, the home of William Mackerel on Tank street was burned to the ground about ten o'clock yesterday morning.

The blaze originated in the chimney in the attic, and had gained considerable headway before it was noticed and before Mrs. Mackerel and her three children could escape from the dining-room the roof fell in, blocking up the doors.

By this time a number of employes from the refinery arrived on the scene and rescued the prisoners.

Home Is Burned.

LONDON, Ont., March 3. — Children playing with matches yesterday afternoon fired the home of William Ratcliffe in East Williams. The older children rushed half a mile for help, and Miss Annie McDonald arrived in time to snatch a baby sleeping in his cradle and two small children to safety. The house was completely destroyed.

Wood Alcohol Exploded.

ST. THOMAS, March 3.—Fire here yesterday morning did $4,000 damage to the drug stock of G. H. Small and $1,000 damage to the building. The blaze was caused by the explosion of a demijohn of wood alcohol near a stove.

NOT ENOUGH TO KEEP FOREIGNERS OUT OF CANADA AND ALLOW THEIR GOODS TO COME

Rate of Wages in Canada Must be Maintained, so That the Workingmen May Preserve a High Civilization

In a discussion on Oriental Immigration by the members of the House at Ottawa, Mr. J. H. Burnham, M. P., is reported by Hansard as follows:—

"Mr. J. H. Burnham, West Peterborough:—Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on some points connected with this discussion that I flatter myself are somewhat important and more or less new. First of all, let me refer to the usual severe onslaught made by the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) upon imperialism. He sets up, as usual, a man of straw and proceeds, with considerable force, to knock that man down. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that imperialism as understood by the Conservative party and the men who have helped to build up the British Empire, is not such imperialism as he chooses to signify. The imperialism to which he refers is the imperialism of ancient Rome, where Rome was the centre of her empire and solved all her questions herself. This new British Empire is something that historians agree is like nothing that has ever existed before; it requires careful handling, and requires, above all things, a national and truly patriotic spirit. It is upon the sufferance and upon the affections of the people of the British Empire that it is founded and must continue. I would not for one moment vote in favor of a central parliament. I do not know anybody else in Canada who would. That is not the point. The point is: Are the different ports of the empire prepared at all times to help each other in the storm and stress of empire? Are they or are they not? that is the question, because if they are not, but must meet and deliberate before they will decide upon the question, then they are not of the empire. That is the point that concerns Conservatives so strongly, that is where we differ. We say that we are at all times ready to do what we are asked, and what we ask the others to do for us, or pray what use on earth is it to talk of making laws for the government of our immigration if we had not Great Britain and the other dominions behind us to back us up in these laws? Japan and Hindustan and China would wipe us out in an hour. We presume that the British Empire is behind us, and surely, if we are at all above the ordinary greedy spirit of a child, we will agree that we will reciprocate and say, whatever they may do, we will always stand behind them. That is the spirit of empire, and the only spirit we dwell upon. We reject the idea of imepriallsm as talked about frequently for the purpose, I fancy it may be, of irritating Quebec. Quebec has nothing to fear from the imperialism which we preach. We are desirous of preserving the empire as it is. You cannot preserve the empire as it is if you say you are not of the empire all the time, but only a portion of the time and when you may see fit—and I know something of the French-Canadians.

Mr. Lemieux: Is India in the empire?

Mr. Burnham: It may be or may not be; I cannot tell, for the simple reason that India is not part of the empire as we are. I would answer the question in that way. I do not presume to answer it any other way. It is not necessary to go into the history of India to show that it is not on the same basis in the empire as we are. It is not necessary to interject foreign matters into the debate. Let us stick closely to the question. We are talking about Canada, and we have all we can handle in Canada at the present time. Let us say that we are in Canada are desirous of being counted part and parcel of the empire, and not, as set down in a certain Naval Service Act, only when we see fit to adjudicate upon the question. That kind of empire is not our kind of empire at all; and, for my part, I would not belong to a country that would presume on the support of the rest of the empire and would not be man enough to say it would participate in its support at all times. That is neither imperialism nor Canadianism, and I am sure it does not belong to the true spirit of Canadian manhood. Speaking of Oriental immigration—it seems to me inadvisable to refer to this as Hindu, Chinese or Japanese immigration, let us refer to it as foreign cheap labor and then no difficulty will arise. I have no concern about the morals of it, we can settle it on a different basis. The objection to foreign cheap labor coming into the West has been clearly set out as owing to the fact that they depress the rate of wages, and therefore upset the whole stable equilibrium of the industrial world in the West, and therefore in Canada; and I hope that my friend the Labor member for Montreal (Mr. Verville) will back me up when I say that he recognizes, as the hon. member for Rouville will recognize, that you cannot keep out foreign cheap labor and admit foreign cheap labor goods.

That is a manifest absurdity. When China develops, when the men who are paid from 18 to 20 cents a day and who are capable of all sorts of skilful culture, turn their energies to producing steel and other manufactured goods, we shall be swept off the decks if we admit them into Canada. Our rate of wages must come down then. That will be the case with all manufactured goods and natural products of every kind. To keep out the people and yet allow their goods to come in, is simply solving half the problem. We must be prepared to maintain by judicious exclusion our own civilization as much as possible, and we must be prepared to maintain the rate of wages in this country so that the workingmen, the aritsans and the labourers, may preserve that high civilization for which they are working and struggling so manfully. It is impossible to be consistent if you will not afford some protection for the rate of wages in this country and yet allow the products of cheap labour to come in, because that happens to be your idea of free trade. It is the old question all over again. It is all very well to interchange with a country like Great Britain, with a civilization like our own if not higher; but free interchange with a civilization which is lower and where the rate of wages is lower, tends to depress and ruin our civilization. It would be far better for us to put a Chinese wall around this country than to submit to such a degradation. The centre of gravity would be changed from the northern hemisphere to oriental countries, and in 200 years, or less, we would see those countries producing a magnificent civilization while we had sunk to the lowest levels, because we had stuck to a theory which in itself has neither common sense nor consistency.

TWO ARE SENT UP FOR TRIAL

Two Fines of $13.75 also Imposed in Police Court.

The case of Joseph O'Toole, Vincent O'Toole, Leo Holland and Raymond Walsh, was continued at Police Court this morning.

The O'Toole brothers were committed for trial. Walsh and Holland pleaded guilty to a charge of disorderly conduct and each was fined $13.75. The court room was crowded.

G. N. Gordon, counsel for O'Toole, contended that there was very slight evidence of O'Toole having procured the girl for immoral purposes. It had been disclosed that the character of the girl was not of the best.

His Worship said the Act did not require the girl to be of pure character. Joseph O'Toole, he said, was the active party and the entire bunch were such confirmed blackguards that it did not necessitate a spoken word. His Worship further remarked that the conduct of O'Toole showed preconcerted arrangement.

MONK RESIGNS

Former Minister Had Been Member of House Since 1896

OTTAWA, March 4.—The resignation of Hon. F. D. Monk as member for Jacques Cartier was announced by Speaker Sproule in the House yesterday afternoon. Ill-health is assigned as the cause.

Hon. Mr. Monk had not been present in the House this session, and in fact has been in Ottawa hardly at all since his resignation from the Government because of his objections to the naval policy adopted by his colleagues.

HON. F. D. MONK.

Mr. Monk was born in Montreal in 1856, was educated at McGill University, and became one of the leaders of the Bar. In 1892 he became professor of constitutional and international law at Laval University. He was elected to the House of Commons for Jacques Cartier in 1896, and continuously since. In 1891 Mr. Monk became leader of the Quebec Conservative members in Parliament, but resigned this leadership in 1903, and subsequently became identified with the Nationalists. When the Borden Government was formed in 1911 he accepted the portfolio of public works, but resigned in October, 1912.

Poultry Association.

The regular monthly meeting of the Poultry Association will be held to-morrow night, March 5th, at eight o'clock, in the Simcoe street hall. As there is some special business to be transacted all members should be there.

DIPHTHERIA WAS CHECKED IN NEW SCHOOL

Work of Health Supervisor is Not in Vain.

To the Board of Education last night, Inspector Mowat reported that had it not been for the diligence of Miss Kennedy, the health supervisor, in the Public schools, a serious epidemic of diphtheria might have broken out in the new West Ward school last week.

As is was there were three or four cases. Stringent means had been taken by Miss Kennedy to check the disease and it had not been necessary to close the school.

RUTHENIANS SENTENCED.

Wholesale Penalties Imposed on Peasants Charged With Sedition.

BUDAPEST, Hungary, March 4.—Sentence was passed yesterday at Marmores-Sziget on thirty-two of the fifty-five Ruthenians who have been on trial since Dec. 29 charged with inciting to rebellion against the Austro-Hungarian Government.

The principal prisoner, Father Alexius, a Russian monk from Mount Athos, was condemned to four and one-half years imprisonment. His real name is said to be Alexander Kabalyuk, and he was understood to be the leader of the seditious movement. He was alleged to have carried on the propaganda under the guise of efforts to convert the Ruthenian peasantry to the orthodox faith, but with the real intention of enticing them from their allegiance to Austria-Hungary and drawing them toward Russia. The movement was said to have been promoted and financed in Russia. The other thirty-one convicts were condemned to terms ranging between six months and two and one-half years in prison, and all in addition were fined small sums.

Died Trying To Save Wife.

CAMPBELLFORD, March 4. — At Healy Falls, two Austrians, Pete Bonivant and his wife, were burned to death in a fire which destroyed their boarding house yesterday morning. Twenty fellow-countrymen escaped in their night clothes. Bonivant discovered the fire, aroused the inmates and re-entered the building for his wife, but their escape was cut off.

REPORTS OF OVERSEERS ON FISH AND GAME

The seventh annual report of the Game, and Fisheries Department gives the following report for the year:

Overseer John Watt reports that bass and maskinonge have not been so plentiful in this territory, as least they have not been biting so well as usual. This, he claims, is due to the quantity of natural feed, as all the fish caught are in fine condition. He has never seen so many large fat maskinonge as have been taken in the past. He thinks it must be an off season, as he has heard of the complaint before in other parts.

The muskrat catch was fairly good, but the mink are becoming scarce and he suggests that their season should not open until December 31st. Partridges are very plentiful round the district and there is the usual good supply of ducks.

Overseer William Clarkson of Lakehurst, says that the past year has been a successful one for him and he comments most favorably on the work of Capt. Carson and the work of the Naiad.

Other reports of the following overseers compare most favorably with other counties: Messrs. Dulmage, Oak Lake; Edward Flemming, Hastings; Wellington Lean, Apsley; John McFarlane, Keene; Henry Melville, Havelock; F. J. Moore, Lakefield; W. H. Thompson, Balleboro.

Overseer Thompson suggests that the overseers meet once a year to discuss the best methods of carrying on their work and with a view to improving the game laws and their enforcement.

Overseer Dulmage reported on the great amount of damage by the bush fires in his district last year.

BRITAIN IS AGITATED

Deadlock in Mexico Discussed by Grey in Commons

LONDON, March 4.—The British Government's view that no immediate action could be taken by it in connection with the deadlock over the investigation into the death at Juarez of William S. Benton, the British ranchman, was made quite plain yesterday in the House of Commons by Sir Edward Grey, the British Foreign Secretary. Sir Edward was, however, equally explicit in pointing out that if Great Britain failed to secure satisfaction through the United States, the British Government reserved to itself the right to secure reparation whenever it was able to do so.

The promised pronouncement from Sir Edward had been anxiously awaited. It was delivered before a keenly interested gathering of the members of the House of Commons, while the entire nation looked forward to a declaration of the Government's policy in regard to Mexico.

Intense resentment has been displayed throughout the British Isles over what is regarded as an attempt on the part of Verustiano Carranza, the Constitutionalist leader in Mexico, to sow discord between the British Empire and the United States, and also over the repeated delays in the investigation of the circumstances of the death of Benton.

Pleased With Grey's Attitude.

WASHINGTON, March 4. — Great Britain's pronouncement through Sir Edward Grey, that the United States was in no way responsible for the recent execution at Juarez of William S. Benton, a British subject, and that the American Government would not be asked to resort to force as a result of the incident, was the chief factor in the Mexican situation yesterday.

President Wilson, in a conference yesterday with Sir Cecil Spring-Rice and Sir Lionel Carden, the British Minister to Mexico, is understood to have expressed his approval and appreciation of the friendly sentiments uttered by the British Foreign Secretary in the House of Commons. Tension, which had been felt here over the killing of Benton, rose largely because it was believed Great Britain might press the United States into taking drastic steps to secure reparation. The British view that the United States is not obligated to demand reparation for Great Britain relieved this tension to some extent, although it is clear that the Benton incident has developed an intention on the part of the American Government to take a more aggressive attitude toward the contending factions in Mexico.

Chicago Train In Smashup.

CHICAGO, March 4. — The Port Huron special of the Grand Trunk Railroad, Chicago bound, crashed into a freight train in the city yards yesterday killing Marley Burns of Chicago, a freight brakeman, and seriously injuring two other men. The passengers on the all steel train were shaken up, and several of them slightly injured.

Elections In France.

PARIS, March 4. — The French Cabinet Council yesterday decided on Sunday, April 26, as the date for the general Parliamentary elections in France.

WAS APPRECIATED

At the meeting of the Directors of the Peterborough Protestant Home, held on Tuesday afternoon, March 3, a resolution was passed to place on record the appreciation of the Board and Lady Superintendent of the unfailing kindness of the late Rev. T. J. Mansell. His faithful and devoted ministrations to the old and feeble in the Home will be long remembered by those who have so often listened to him.

Cheerfully, willingly, and without solicitation, he made himself responsible for a large proportion of the Sunday morning services, frequently telephoning the Home to know if the service was provided for.

A. D. Hone of Toronto to Succeed J. W. Firth Who Goes to London

At the regular session of the Board of Education last evening, Mr. Arthur D. Hone, of Toronto, was appointed to the P. C. I. staff to succeed Mr. J. W. Firth, who has resigned and goes to London. The salary is $1600 per annum.

Better Ventilation.

The students of Forms III. and IV. Collegiate Institute, petitioned the Board for better ventilation and improvement in their respective rooms. The matter will be dealt with by the Property Committee.

Grants for Collegiate.

The request of Principal H. R. H. Kenner, of the Collegiate Institute staff, for the usual grant of $50 for the library and $100 for science departments, was granted. Mr. Kenner informed the Board that by the means of a small grant each year, the departments could be kept in better shape.

Bill of $33.

A communication from W. H. Munro, the Peterborough Light and Power Company, regarding the payment of $33 for a burned out transformer in the East City school, brought about a short discussion, but the matter was finally turned over to the Property Committee to investigate, with power to act.

Mr. Munro was called in and he explained the situation as to how the motor had burned out owing to crossed wires. He was of the opinion it was due to the manner in which connections were made by the electricians.

Mr. Miller, who inspected the wires, then appeared on the scene and informed Mr. Munro that he had personally connected the wires. He also stated that he had informed Mr. Hillman, an official of the Peterborough Light and Power Company, in regard to the wires.

This was a new aspect to the affair, for Mr. Munro, and he asked for more time to consider the matter.

Mr. W. Northcott, caretaker, was granted leave of absence for one month in June.

Mr. Hill and members of the Board spoke of the satisfactory work of Mr. Northcott and they thought it well he should be allowed the month. He will make the trip to England with the Temple Band.

Committee on Appointments.

To the Chairman and Members of the Board of Education

Gentlemen,—Your Committee on Appointments beg to report and recommend as follows:

That Mr. Arthur D. Hone, of Toronto, be appointed on the Collegiate Institute staff to succeed Mr. J. W. Firth, who has resigned. Salary to be according to schedule and duties to start 20th April next.

That Miss Mabel Hurlburt, of Hamilton, be appointed on the Public school staff to succeed Miss Fannie King, who has resigned. Salary to be according to schedule and duties to start 20th of April next.

Your Committee also recommend that Mr. Hone be granted leave of absence, during the month of May, for a sufficient length of time to enable him to write on final examinations.

Respectfully submitted,
W. H. HILL,
Chairman.

TO ADDRESS CONGRESS.

Wilson Will Urge Repeal of Panama Tolls Schedule.

WASHINGTON, March 4. — President Wilson will personally address a joint session of Congress to-morrow, advocating the repeal of the clause in the Panama Canal Act, which exempts American coastwise shipping from the payments of tolls.

While House officials last night arranged with the majority with the leaders in both Houses for a joint session at 12.30 p.m. to-morrow. The President has prepared a brief address in which he sets forth his opinion that Congress should reverse itself and keep the obligations of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which he believes were vitiated by the Panama Canal Act. The President holds that the national honor of the American people is at stake and that European nations should not be allowed to get the impression that treaties made by the American Government are not adhered to both in letter and in spirit.

Lineman Badly Hurt.

BRANTFORD, Ont., March 4.—John Wanamaker, a hydro employe, fell from a pole while wiring a house on George street yesterday morning, breaking his thigh bone. On removal to the hospital it was found that he had suffered internal injuries. His life is despaired of.

Seven Miners Drowned.

PETERBOROUGH, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 4, 1914.

A COUNTRY OF GREAT ROADS.

ROME WAS a great road builder. She ran her lines of permanent roads through Italy and Gaul, through savage Britain, through distant Spain and Dacia. Men still travel those same roads that directed the traffic of a world to one central mart where accumulated wealth, giving little in return, soon corrupted the key-stone of Roman power. Rome's great roads were built by her legions and by slaves, they were financed and maintained by the central authority, which drained the provinces by a most exacting and burdensome system of taxation. Rome passed away but her roads have endured to this very day.

Canada is a country of great roads. Ever since Governor Simcoe came to Upper Canada in 1791 Canada has been building roads, but at first they were not intended to be permanent. Rough clearings through the bush, corduroy over marshy places, plank roads as sawmills arose, the early arteries of commerce in Canada were not designed to be finished examples of road construction, nor the quickest channels for the interchange of trade.

Time passed; as towns arose the old lines of road were improved, toll companies came into existence, and the building of permanent macadam roadways definitely began. Fortunate in possessing great inland waterways for her commerce, such as it was, before her early roads were built, a new element came into being with the advent of railways. Steam roads have been one of the most important factors in Canadian development for about forty years, yet more has been accomplished in the matter of develeopment than could have been achieved in two centuries of road construction of the Roman type. One transcontinental line has been in successful operation for a number of years, and two others are nearing completion. A journey across the continent can be made in about a week and a vast quantity of freight is handled safely and expeditiously every day. Millions of acres of arable land have been brought under cultivation, mines have been developed, towns built, forests turned to the uses of man, through the building of railroads. Thousands of miles of permanent driveway have been constructed as feeders to towns and railways. New France struggled laboriously from 1608 until 1759 to build a colony. Britain then took up the task, but the following hundred years were, compared with to-day, slow, hard years. The coming of railways has made possible the most gigantic development of a new country that has ever taken place.

Unlike Rome, Canada, part of an empire, has constructed under her own supervision, her great lines of permanent roads. She has taxed herself, she has mortgaged herself to British and foreign lenders for vast amounts of money, she has discounted her future by many years to rush ahead lines of steel, lines of steamships, lines of graded and macadam road. She has built them to carry goods not in one direction nor to one city, but in all directions, to all cities and markets possible. Canada cannot do without her great roads; she must continue to build new ones, maintain and improve old ones, but a factor like roads, particularly steam lines, bulking so large in her national life, when owned and operated by great private corporations, leads one to think that it is just possible the Canadian people are paying dear, very dear, for the development arising from her lines of steel.

CHEESE AND BUTTER.

THE CHEESE of New Zealand is to-day in Liverpool 2 shillings per hundredweight less than Canadian. It is also coming into Canada in large quantities. The usual reports have been circulated for the purpose of keeping the Canadian farmer quiet to the effect that the foreign article is "not as good." That statement is not true. New Zealand butter and cheese is being eaten freely in Canada without the people knowing it. The consumer hopes the Canadian farmer will not hear about it. It is a serious thing. With the prospects of a developed China where labor is 15 cents a day and of Australasian food-products where the climate is mild, the whole policy of countries enjoying the higher civilization will have to be overhauled. Now that the tariff on manufactures is lowered in the U.S., American capitalists are feverishly taking up ore-beds and coal-beds in Oriental countries.

Britain may well tremble at the prospect. Canada and the U. S. can raise their own food and may, for a time, be able to stand it. Britain would feel it in a week.

THE CASE OF THE C. N. R.

BEYOND question Canada is faced with a financial burden unparalleled in her history. It is impossible, it appears, to state the whole truth in Parliament, since if the Government did so, Canada's credit in the borrowing market would go down and possibly out. Our last state would be worse than it is now, which is needless.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

COMING down Charlotte Street the other day on a bright sunshiny morning, we saw a bill poster vigorously splashing paste over a bill board, just as if he were getting paid for it. Having had a good breakfast and seeing this man take evident interest in his occupation, we concluded that life was really worth living sometimes.

ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH are to be commended for the high quality of the concert presented there the other evening. Both Miss Carey and Mr. Hewlett come from Hamilton, a manufacturing and ambitious city which, strange to say, has certainly accomplished a good deal for musical art in Canada. Keep up the good example.

YES, Hamilton does produce some really good things besides manufactured products and murders.

"IRISH Debate on Monday," says heading in Toronto News. No mention is made of Shillalahs—doubtless quite unnecessary. Whoever heard of an Irish debate without them?

J. R. BONE, B.A., was unanimously chosen president of Toronto University "Lit." Very good. The "Lit." will not want a subject for debate since it has a Bone in their midst now.

THE TORONTO STAR says, "The population of City of Toronto is 505,807, according to the Directory of 1914." Without wishing to be disrespectful, let us ask "Does the Directory lie?"

Government Going Slowly.
Montreal Gazette.

It has been announced in the Senate that the Government has not yet decided to purchase the Aldwych site for a great building in London. Evidently the ministers are doing some thinking before giving way before the hurrah that has been raised in the matter. The price of the site is to be $6,500,000 (£1,300,000). The price of the building added to this would make a total quite $16,000,000. In even livelier times than these it would be worth thinking twice before undertaking such an outlay, or even Canada's half of it.

We Believe So.
Hamilton Herald.

The German professor who says that the three evils of his country are the press, the parliament and the people, might be persuaded to admit that of the three the last at least is a necessary evil.

The very latest Paris style is reported to be "no stockings and sandals without shoes." Evidently the process of fashionable undressing is to be continued.

Just Like a Lawyer.
Pretoria Herald.

"What is that little boy crying about?" asked the benevolent old lady of the ragged boy. "Dat other kid swiped his candy," was the response. "But how is it that you have the candy now?" "Sure I got de candy now. I'm de little kid's lawyer."

Is The Gain Worth The Price?
Montreal Mail.

Dr. Mawson's story of peril and hardship in the Antarctic shows that the great mine of romance in polar exploration has only been tapped by Scott, Amundsen, and Peary, notable as were the experiences of these men. One is appalled by the heavy toll of brave lives these fascinating tales of polar exploration cost. Is the scientific gain worth while at the price?

THE MILKMAN
By Walt Mason

— The milkman goes his weary way before the rising of the sun; he earns a hundred bones a day, and often takes in less than one. While lucky people snore and drowse, and bask in dreams of rare delight, he takes a stool and milks his cows, about the middle of the night. If you have milked an old red cow, humped o'er a big six-gallon pail, and had her swat you on the brow with seven feet of burry tail, you'll know the milkman ought to get a plunk for every pint he sells; he earns his pay in blood and sweat, and sorrow in his bosom dwells. As through the city streets he goes, he has to sound his brazen gong, and people wake up from their doze, and curse him as he goes along. He has to stagger through the snow when others stay at home and snore; and through the rain he has to go, to take the cow-juice to your door. Through storm and flood and sun and rain, the milkman goes upon the jump, and all his customers complain, and make allusions to his pump. Because one milkman milks the creek, instead of milking spotted cows, against the whole brave tribe we kick, and stir up everlasting rows. Yet patiently they go their way, distributing their healthful juice, and what they do not get in pay, they have to take out in abuse.

Dried Fruit Inspection.

The latest bulletin from the Inland Revenue Department shows that in the inspection of 176 packages of raisins, currents, prunes, figs, dates, apricots, peaches, pears 133 samples have been found to be satisfactory and 20 doubtful. Among the samples taken seventeen packages have been found to be adulterated and nine of the seventeen were figs.

Attention is directed to the cartons in which much of the dried fruit is sold. Twenty-four were found to be one or more ounces light in weight, and the suggestion is made that regulations be adopted to make short weight in these packages an offense under the Weights and Measures Act, and that cartons be made only in pounds or sub-multiples of one pound.

Shipbuilding Dropped Back.

There was less shipbuilding in Canada last year than the year before, and with the exception of the years 1910 and 1911, it was less than usual. The tonnage of vessels built last year and registered was 24,325. This includes practically no vessels built for pleasure purposes, the tonnage of which is growing fast, but these are seldom registered and there is no record kept.

The tonnage of the Canadian vessels registered last year was 30,225. This is about the same as the year before. The seagoing and inland water tonnage, out and in, was 57,-849,783, which is an increase of about five millions and the coasting tonnage was 73,644,713, an increase of nearly seven and a half millions.

A Lucky Englishman.

An Englishman is one of the lucky prize winners in the Spanish Christmas lottery. The first prize, commonly called "El Gordo," consisting of 6,000,000 pesetas, was won by an inhabitant of Madrid, who bought the ticket on Oct. 27. The name of its fortunate possessor has not yet transpired. The second prize, 3,000,-000 pesetas (about £120,000), has fallen to No. 2,127. This ticket was purchased by the Madrid bankers, Messrs. Sainz and Sons, as far back as Aug. 29. The purchase was effected for an English client, and the ticket was sent to London. The third and fourth prizes of 2,000,000 pesetas and 1,000,000 pesetas have fallen to Barcelona and Madrid respectively.

More Crime In West.

Crimes of violence are on the increase in the Northwest, says the annual report of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, which was issued recently. Of 44 charges of murder, 12 were the direct result of excessive drinking and drunken brawls, five for purposes of gain, three by insane persons, three infanticide, and the remainder were caused by jealousy, lust and revenge.

There were entered by the police during the last fiscal year 15,449 cases. This is 1,550 more than the year before, and there were 12,985 convictions. There were 2,135 cases of vagrancy, which illustrates the floating nature of the population. Many were tramps, beating their way along the railroads, others were railroad navvies, while others still have come in with the yearly migration of harvesters.

On Sept. 30 last the strength of the police force was 55 officers, 708 non-commissioned officers and constables, and 572 horses. This is an increase of one officer and 108 non-commissioned officers and constables. There are 26 new detachments, three of which are on the route to the Cheena Gold Fields in Alaska.

Birthdays of Note

WEDNESDAY, MARCH FOURTH

This is the natal day of Senator William Dennis, proprietor and editor of the Halifax Herald. Senator Dennis was born in England fifty-eight years ago and came to Canada when a lad of seventeen. He started his newspaper career soon after, beginning as a reporter on the paper which he now owns. After being well trained he went to Winnipeg where he was employed for a time on the editorial staff of the Winnipeg Sun. He then returned to Halifax and became news editor of the Herald. From this position he rose to be editor-in-chief and then proprietor. As head of the Herald Publishing Company he has been active on various occasions in raising large sums of money for public and philanthropical purposes.

Tarzan of the Apes

by Edgar Rice Burroughs

Copyright, 1912, by the Frank A. Munsey company.

Adjusting his spectacles, the professor read aloud:

THIS IS THE HOUSE OF TARZAN, THE KILLER OF BEASTS AND MANY BLACK MEN.
DO NOT HARM THE THINGS WHICH ARE TARZAN'S.
TARZAN WATCHES.
TARZAN OF THE APES.

"Who the devil is Tarzan?" cried the sailor who had before spoken.

"He evidently speaks English," said the young man.

"But what does 'Tarzan of the apes' mean?" cried the girl.

"I do not know, Miss Porter," replied the young man, "unless we have discovered a runaway simian from the London zoo, who has brought back a European education to his jungle home. What do you make of it, Professor Porter?" he added, turning to the old man.

"I reckon the daffy old bounder don't know no more'n we do about it," growled the rat faced sailor.

"Keep a civil tongue in your head," cried the young man, his face paling in anger at the insulting tone of the sailor. "You've murdered our officers and robbed us. We are absolutely in your power; but, so help me, you'll treat Professor Porter and Miss Porter with respect or I'll break that neck of yours with my bare hands—guns or no guns."

William Cecil Clayton stepped so close to the rat faced sailor that the latter, though he bore two revolvers and a villainous looking knife in his belt, slunk back abashed.

"You coward!" cried the young man. "You've never dared shoot a man until his back was turned. You don't dare shoot me even then."

He turned his back full upon the sailor and walked nonchalantly away.

The sailor's hand crept slyly to the butt of one of his revolvers; his wicked eyes glared vengefully at the retreating form of the young Englishman. What he would have done will never be known, for there was another factor abroad. Two keen eyes had watched every move of the party from the foliage of a nearby tree. Tarzan had seen the surprise caused by his notice, and while he could understand nothing of the spoken language of these strange people their gestures and facial expressions told him much.

The act of the little rat faced sailor in killing one of his comrades had aroused a strong dislike in Tarzan, and now that he saw him quarreling with the fine looking young man his animosity was still further stirred. He fitted a poisoned arrow to his bow and drew a bead upon the rat faced sailor, but the foliage was so thick that he soon saw the arrow would be deflected by the leaves or some small branch, and instead he launched a heavy spear from his lofty perch.

Clayton had taken but a dozen steps; the rat faced sailor had half drawn his revolver; the other sailors stood watching the scene intently.

Professor Porter had already disappeared into the jungle, whither he was being followed by the fussy Samuel T. Philander, his secretary and assistant.

Esmeralda, the negress, was busy sorting her mistress' baggage from the pile of bales and boxes beside the cabin, and Miss Porter had turned away to follow Clayton when something caused her to turn again toward the sailor.

And then three things happened almost simultaneously—the sailor jerked out his weapon and leveled it at Clayton's back, Miss Porter screamed a warning, and a long, metal shod spear shot like a bolt from above and passed entirely through the right shoulder of the rat faced man.

The revolver exploded harmlessly in the air, and the seaman crumpled up with a scream of pain and terror.

CHAPTER IX.

At the Mercy of the Jungle.

CLAYTON turned and rushed back toward the scene. The sailors stood in a frightened group, with drawn weapons, peering into the jungle. The wounded man writhed and shrieked upon the ground.

Clayton, unseen by any, picked up the fallen revolver and slipped it inside his shirt; then he joined the sailors.

"Who could it have been?" whispered Jane Porter, and the young man turned to see her standing, wide eyed, beside him.

"I dare say Tarzan of the apes is watching us," he answered. "I wonder now who that spear was intended for? If for Snipes, then our ape friend is a friend indeed.

"By Jove! Where are your father and Mr. Philander? There's some one or something in that jungle, and it's armed, whatever it is. Ho! Professor! Mr. Philander!" young Clayton shouted. There was no response.

"What's to be done, Miss Porter? I can't leave you here alone with these cutthroats. You certainly can't venture into the jungle with me, yet some one must go in search of your father. He is more than apt at wandering off aimlessly, regardless of danger or direction, and Mr. Philander is only a trifle less impractical. I have it! You can use a revolver, can't you?"

"Yes—why?"

"I have one. With it you and Esmeralda will be comparatively safe in this cabin while I am searching for your father and Mr. Philander. Come, call the woman, and I will hurry on. They can't have gone far."

Jane Porter did as he suggested, and when he saw the door close safely behind them Clayton turned toward the jungle.

Some of the sailors were drawing the spear from their wounded comrade, and as Clayton approached he asked if he could borrow a revolver from one of them while he searched the jungle for the professor.

The rat faced one, finding he was not dead, had regained his composure and with a volley of oaths refused.

This man, Snipes, had assumed the role of chief since he had killed their former leader, and so little time had elapsed that none of his companions had as yet questioned his authority.

Clayton's only response was a shrug of the shoulders, but as he left them he picked up the spear which had transfixed Snipes, and thus primitively armed the son of the then Lord Greystoke strode into the dense jungle.

Every few moments he called aloud the names of the wanderers. The watchers in the cabin by the beach heard the sound of his voice growing ever fainter and fainter, until at last it was swallowed up by the myriad noises of the primeval wood.

When Professor Archimedes Q. Porter and his assistant, Samuel T. Philander, after much insistence on the part of the latter, had finally turned their steps toward camp they were as completely lost in the wild and tangled labyrinth of the jungle as two human beings could be, though they did not know it.

It was by the merest caprice of fortune that they headed toward the west coast of Africa instead of toward Zanzibar, on the opposite side of the dark continent.

When in a short time they reached the beach, only to find no camp in sight, Philander was positive that they were north of their proper destination, while, as a matter of fact, they were about 200 yards south of it. Mr. Samuel T. Philander grasped Professor Archimedes Q. Porter firmly by the arm and hurried the weakly protesting old gentleman off in the direction of Cape Town, 1,500 miles to the south.

When Jane Porter and Esmeralda found themselves safely behind the cabin door the negress' first thought was to barricade the portal from the inside. With this idea in view she turned to search for some means of putting it into execution, but her first view of the interior of the cabin brought a shriek of terror to her lips, and, like a frightened child, the huge black ran to bury her face in her mistress' shoulders.

Jane Porter, turning at the cry, saw the cause of it lying prone upon the floor before them—the whitened skeleton of a man. A further glance revealed a second skeleton upon the bed.

"What horrible place are we in?" murmured the awe stricken girl. But there was no panic in her fright.

At last, disengaging herself from the frantic clutch of the still shrieking Esmeralda, Jane Porter crossed the room to look into the little cradle, knowing what she should see there before ever the tiny skeleton disclosed itself in all its pitiful and pathetic frailty.

What an awful tragedy these mute bones proclaimed! The girl shuddered at thought of the possibilities that might lie before herself and her friends in this ill fated cabin.

Quickly, with an impatient stamp of her foot, she endeavored to shake off the gloomy forebodings, and turning to Esmeralda bade her cease her wailing.

"Stop, Esmeralda; stop it this minute!" she cried. "You are only making its worse. I never saw such a big baby."

Soon the girl found that the door was equipped with a heavy wooden bar upon the inside. After several efforts the combined strength of the two enabled them to slip it into place—the first time in twenty years.

* * * * * * *

After Clayton had plunged into the jungle, the sailors—mutineers of the Arrow—fell into a discussion of their next step, but on one point all were agreed—that they should hasten to put off to the anchored Arrow, where they could at least be safe from the spears of their unseen foe.

So much had Tarzan seen that day that his head was in a whirl of wonder. But the most wonderful sight of all to him was the face of the beautiful white girl.

Here at last was one of his own kind; of that he was positive. And the young man and the two old men, they, too, were much as he had pictured his own people to be.

He did not understand anything of the motives behind all that he had seen, but somehow intuitively he liked the young man and the two old men, and for the girl he had a strange longing which he scarcely understood. As for the big black woman, she was evidently connected in some way with the girl, and so he liked her also.

Her First View of the Interior Brought a Shriek of Terror.

For the sailors, however, and especially Snipes, he had developed a great hatred. He knew by their threatening gestures and by the expressions upon their evil faces that they were enemies of the others, and so he decided to watch them very closely.

Tarzan wondered why the men had gone into the jungle. Never did it occur to him that one could become lost in that maze of undergrowth which to him was as simple as the main street of your own home town.

When he saw the sailors row away toward the ship and knew that the girl and her companion were safe in his cabin he decided to follow the young man into the jungle and learn what his errand might be. He swung off rapidly in the direction taken by Clayton and in a short time heard faintly in the distance the now only occasional calls of the Englishman to his friends.

Presently Tarzan came up with the white man, who, almost fagged, was leaning against a tree wiping the perspiration from his forehead. The ape man, hiding safe behind a screen of foliage, sat watching this new specimen of his own race intently.

At intervals Clayton called aloud, and finally it came to Tarzan that he was searching for the old men.

Tarzan was on the point of going off to look for them himself when he caught the yellow glint of a sleek hide moving cautiously through the jungle toward Clayton.

It was Sheeta, the leopard. He heard the soft bending of grasses and wondered why the young white man was not warned. Could it be he had failed to note the loud warning? Never before had Tarzan known Sheeta to be so clumsy.

No, the white man did not hear. Sheeta was crouching for the spring, and then, shrill and horrible, there rose upon the stillness of the jungle the awful cry of the challenging ape, and Sheeta turned, crashing into the underbrush.

Clayton came to his feet with a start. His blood ran cold. Never had so fearful a sound smote upon his ears. He was no coward, but if ever man felt the icy fingers of fear upon his heart Cecil Clayton, eldest son of Lord Greystoke of England, did that day in the fastness of the African jungle.

The noise of some great body crashing through the underbrush so close beside him and the sound of that bloodcurdling shriek from above tested Clayton's courage to the limit, but he could not know that it was to that very voice he owed his life nor that the creature who hurled it forth was his own cousin—the real Lord Greystoke.

The afternoon was drawing to a close, and Clayton, disheartened and discouraged, was in a terrible quandary as to the proper course to pursue, whether to keep on in search of Professor Porter, at the almost certain risk of his own death in the jungle by night, or to return to the cabin, where he might at least serve to protect Jane Porter from the perils which confronted her on all sides.

He disliked to return to camp without her father; still more he shrank from the thought of leaving her alone and unprotected in the hands of the mutineers of the Arrow or the hundred unknown dangers of the jungle.

HE TRIES TO REMEMBER

Old Toronto Doctor Rehearses the Days of His Affluence.

Forty years ago old Doctor John—the rest of his name does not matter—celebrated his fortieth birthday, a leading citizen of Toronto, a doctor with an extended practice, the owner of drug shops, and a veteran of the 10th Royal Irish Regiment, with service in India.

Recently the old doctor celebrated his eightieth birthday in Toronto jail, having been sent down for sixty days, homeless, penniless, and drunk.

But he is no ordinary drunk. He drinks to remember and not to forget. When he finds the memories of his prosperous days slipping away, the little old man goes away by himself and drinks to refresh the memories that are his one interest in life. The whisky does more than refresh them, it brings them so close that he lives them over again. He unearthed a plug hat and a faded, old-fashioned, bottle-green, cut-away coat, takes a battered satchel in his hand, and starts out on his professional rounds, just as he was accustomed to do forty years ago.

Down to the lower ends of Jarvis, Sherbourne, and Simcoe streets goes the doctor, to where his fashionable clients once lived. He does not see that these districts have aged and grown shabby, like himself. Up he stumps to the faded doors, and instead of a neat housemaid ushering him in, and taking his hat, a lodging-house mistress blocks his way. To her, the dignified old ghost of memories is only a fuddled old drunk. She calls a policeman. The old doctor is taken to court, where Mr. Ellis kindly remands him to sober up—to come out of the past. But in a sort while the aged man goes again to the bosom of his memories, on whisky-light feet.

Old Dr. John is a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin, and served as army surgeon and as soldier in several Indian campaigns with the 10th Royal Irish regiment. In 1871 he came to Toronto and set up practice. He owned four chemist shops, one at the corner of Queen and Sherbourne, one at the corner of Dundas and Foxley streets, and others at places forgotten by him in the advance of days. He had an extended medical practice, but it grew away from him, and when, eighteen years ago, his wife died, the doctor began to subsist on memories.

Seen in the cells, Dr. John said he knew of no relatives.

"I once had property, but it got away from me," he said. "I still have this—top hat and coat—to make my calls in." He was still several years away.

Comptroller of Household.

Lord Spencer Compton, who has arrived in Canada to take over the duties of Comptroller of the Household of His Royal Highness the Governor-General, is the second son of the late Marquess of Northampton and brother of the present marquess. He belongs to one of the famous old families of England. Sir William Compton was present at the Battle of Spurs in 1513 and at the Field of the Cloth of Gold in 1520. He had estates in twenty counties in England and the favor of King Henry VIII. H's great grandson become first Earl of Northampton and Lord President of the Marches of Wales. The second earl was one of the bravest of the cavaliers and fell at Hopton Heath in 1643. The second marquess became President of the Royal Society. The fourth marquess married the Hon. Mary Florence Baring, eldest daughter of the second Lord Ashburton. He was in the Diplomatic Service and was private secretary to Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Earl Cowper.—Family Herald and Weekly

Not Enough Spoons.

Under the lecture pulpits of Rev. Dr. Robertson and Rev. Prof Law of Knox College, Toronto, some Sundays ago were concealed seventy-five sets of table silverware which caused so much furore and no little annoyance to the prospective breakfasters at the college dining hall on Saturday morning. Annoyance it was, for the seventy-five students in the residence had to eat out of five porridge spoons, which, it must be admitted, si a difficult matter, when the voracity of the student appetite is introduced into the equation.

While the janitor slept and while the other students were attending the meeting of the university literary society on Friday night half a dozen students committed the "theft" which caused so much annoyance at breakfast time on Saturday morning. The assistance of the police was called into requisition to locate the missing silverware, which, however, was not found until long after the breakfast hour was over.

More Than Two To One.

Deducting the foreign element, such as the Germans, Russians, Italians, and Chinese, which exceed 50,000, the relative number of French and English in Montreal is: French 304,163, English 121,924. Maisonneuve Ward alone has 134,795 French residents.

Misunderstood.

The school teachers of one of the eastern provinces are entitled to a small special grant for gardening on filling out a form which is sent to each teacher by the Board of Education.

One new teacher, however, wrote to the board inquiring how to get the grant, and received the stereotyped reply:

"Simply fill out your form according to requirements."

"I have taken Madame X's 'beauty course'," wrote the teacher in reply, "but cannot fill out my form to any extent. What shall I try next?"

Octopus at Vancouver.

While diving in the first narrows at Vancouver recently, Fred Maddison encountered a huge octopus, and but for the promptitude with which his signal for assistance was answered would have become the victim of the devil fish. The monster was lodged in one of the crevices with which the narrows abound and had drawn shackle weighing forty pounds into its lair. It was while trying to get the shackle out that the fish got hold of Maddison, and even when ascending it made every effort to fasten its suckers on him.

A Slight Difference.

Col. White, when D.O.C. of the military district including the Province of New Brunswick, was noted as a strict disciplinarian, and was regarded with considerable awe by the militia officers and men who came to Camp Sussex for the annual drill.

On one occasion a captain was allowing his company to rest under a convenient tree, when he espied the colonel approaching.

"Heavens, men," he exclaimed; "get up; here comes the D. O. G."

Enquiry Was Pertinent.

Some years ago a certain candidate, a relative of one of the present New Brunswick Senators, was running for the House of Assembly for the province.

One canvass against him was that he was an infidel, and in the course of his nomination speech an opponent, who possessed a rather shady business reputation, shouted: "You don't believe there is a God."

"Do you, Mr. B.?" asked the candidate.

"Of course I do."

"Then why have you served the devil all your life?"

ONLY A FEW MORE DAYS UNTIL THE REVIEW CLUB OFFER CLOSES

Candidates Now is the Time to Make Every Minute Count as the Votes Will be a Great Deal Smaller After March 11

He remembers yesterday's sunshine while you frown at the storms to-day. While others blame nature for putting thorns on roses, he is glad she thought to put roses on the thorns. Amid the wreckage of disaster he picks the timbers that will do for the rebuilding. He's a soldier of the foreguard, marching on to open and make safe the new ways. Failure he never knows because ambition's golden sun is always shining in his face. He is touched with the blazing God-Spark of achievement — filled with the mightiest message given to men.

So in this contest—the optimist never is rebuffed on account of the weather or rumors of such and such a candidate is doing, but marches straight ahead to VICTORY. He puts in every possible spare moment searching for subscriptions to build up a big reserve vote for the finish, knowing full well that the winning vote will be away up in the millions. He does not waste his time fretting about the other fellow. He is too busy working for himself to give a thought to what his opponent is doing.

The optimist this week has done his level best and doubtless will stand at the head of the column in number of reserve votes on account of his ability and determination to hustle and be a leader. He has doubtless secured many subscriptions and in consequence Wednesday night, March 11th, will be awarded many thousand extra votes for his labors. And again the ones who are optimistic enough to forge to the front in their districts by Wednesday night will be awarded with some extra votes for their labor.

The optimists will win in this contest, as sure as you are a foot high. They are the kind of people who know no discouragement. Some optimist will soon be the owner of that fine grand automobile and will be having a good time in the grand prize while those who lost the determination and vim to go get it are dreaming about what they could have done if they had worked. Do not be a dreamer, instead be the optimist.

"Society Brand"

Clothes Are For Young Men

FEATURES—

English Woollens

American Styles

Made in Canada - Saving Duty Charges

Last season we inspected all the leading clothing Houses of Canada, also Society Brand of Chicago, in search of new clothing that would interest our customers. We were particularly impressed with Society Brand Clothing for young men. We introduced Society Brand Clothing to the young men of Peterboro, and its merits were speedily recognized. This season we again present Society Brand Clothing, but under more favorable circumstances. A contingent of American Society Brand designers and tailors arrived in Canada; huge bales of English woollens were here in readiness, and Society Brand Clothing, with all its style, splendid tailoring and beautiful finish, improved by the use of English materials, and the price, less the cost of duty, is here for the fitting out of the particular, well-groomed young man. The preference this season is grey and brown, leaning towards the rougher weaves, and these are shown in splendid variety. Come in and see them. Whether you buy now or later, matters not to us. But we are anxious to have you know the character and quality of these Society Brand Clothes.

The work of filling Swift and Co's. large ice house at this point has just been completed. The time spent in refilling each winter season always takes from two to three weeks, but with the new ice house filling system lately installed by the owners, it does not take so long and the cost is not so great. Under the old method, the blocks of ice were hoisted by cable and two teams of horses but under the new way the blocks are caught by carriers which convey the ice to its respective floor or level.

The cutting is done at Norwood and the ice hauled by train to this point where it is stored each winter.

The Robinson Company, of Napanee, represented by Tim Dineen, will hold a display of ladies' and misses' suits, new spring coats, underskirts, whitewear, separate skirts and waists at Dineen's sample room on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

EXPLOSION AT THE FALLS

Five Firemen and Others are Severely Injured.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., March 4.—In a terrific explosion of natural gas which followed a fire of unknown origin in the Thorburn block at "The Centre" at four o'clock yesterday morning. Assistant Fire Chief Dedemus and four firemen, A. Baldry, J. Shaughneasy, J. Fox and A. Betlor, with R. Douglas, manager of the Thorburn drug store; J. Nichols, Royal Bank clerk; Gardner Brookfield, W. E. Lise and William Gyson were seriously injured.

The condition of Dedemus and Gyson is very critical, and little hope was entertained last evening for their recovery. The injured were removed to the hospital. The back of Dedemus' scalp was laid open from the top to the base by the heavy plate glass window which was shattered from the explosion, part of which fell on him while he was bending over putting the hose in the basement window.

The fire, which was a slight one, originated in the basement, and as the lead connection to the gas had been melted off from the heat, considerable gas was escaping, which could not be turned off, as the gas company men had not arrived on the scene.

Unknown to the firemen, William Gyson, who is employed in the Thorburn drug store, descended to the cellar with a lighted lantern, the result of which was a terrific explosion which hurled the firemen in all directions.

PROSPEROUS YEAR AND BIG SURPLUS

Provincial Treasurer Foreshadows Legislation to Prevent Rich Men From Evading Succession Duties---T.& N.O. is the Only Government Institution Whose Receipts Show a Falling Off.

TORONTO, March 4.—Hon. I. B. Lucas, Provincial Treasurer, presented Ontario's Budget for the year in the Legislature yesterday, and reported a comfortable surplus of $350,000 as the net result of what had at first threatened to be a critical year in the fiscal affairs of the province.

An important feature of his speech was the foreshadowing of legislation during the present session, by which the wealthy persons of the province who attempt evasion of the succession duties will find their efforts unavailing. The Government has determined to prevent the "wholesale distribution of property" with intent to deprive the province of its legal revenue.

Hon. Mr. Lucas, at the outset of his speech, stated that contrary to precedent there would be no apology this year. He was very glad to show a surplus exceeding $300,000. The revenues of the province were substantially greater than those estimated last year by him in the budget speech, and it was a matter of congratulation to the House and to the province that notwithstanding the business and trade depression of the year and the shrinkage of timber resources, that the showing was so good. Although the money market was tight, they had closed the year with two millions in the bank.

The only serious decrease of the year was that of the T. & N. O. Railway, the estimated receipts of which had been $510,000, but which had realized only $250,000.

An analysis of the accounts shows the receipts to include the $2,134,080 derived from the Dominion Government as the provincial subsidy on account of the T. & N. O. Railway. There is another $2,396,378 subsidy on population from the Dominion Government. From the lands, forests and mines of Ontario the revenue was $2,739,809, which is the largest source. The next medium in order is the succession duties, taxes upon the estates of the dead, which netted the Government $1,062,694. Under the Supplementary Revenues Act the income was $937,599. Other revenues were: Licenses, $901,486; law stamps, $134,483; education, $60,800; Provincial Secretary's Department, $367,366; fish and game, $138,364; agriculture, $177,131.

There is $207,805 from interest in connection with Hydro-Electric expenditure, earnings of $250,000 from the T. & N. O. Railway, and $954,629 interest from the Dominion Government on T. & N. O. account. The other large receipts are $2,831,841 from the sale of the treasury bills, and $1,637,173 per provincial loan, the balance of the $3,000,000 authorized in 1912.

de bonds and stock subscribed last year amounted to $1,770,300. The premiums to be deducted were $5,274, and discount of $103,911, with brokerage added of $34,489, making the $1,770,300 figure out $1,637,173.

Among the expenditures education looms large with $1,969,291. For maintenance of public institutions the expenditure was $1,366,038, civil government, $720,225; administration of justice, $715,934; agriculture, $693,391; hospital and charities, $416,812; colonization and immigration, $134,801; legislation, $302,293; colonization, roads, $406,034; charges on crown lands, $582,693; Provincial Hydro-Electric Commission, $139,592; refunds, $164,212; miscellaneous services, $317,190, or a total of $8,089,330.

The public buildings accounts total up to $2,778,689.

For roads in New Ontario the expenditure was $1,063,655, advances to T. & N. O. Railway under statute, $950,000; good roads statutory fund, $288,267; new Government House, $224,396; new provincial prison, $338,975; new hospital for insane, Whitby, $209,563; and other expenditures with various institutions that total up to $5,223,916.

In discussing the income from death duties, Mr. Lucas foreshadowed an amendment to the act to prevent wealthy men evading payment of a full tax from their estates.

C. M. Bowman, who made his first appearance as financial critic for the Opposition, congratulated Hon. Mr. Lucas on his first statement as a real Provincial Treasurer.

In the matter of receipts alone there was not much difference between his own analysis of the accounts and that of the Provincial Treasurer, with the exception of certain items which should not have been included and which would reduce the receipts to $10,794,866. In regard to expenditure, he pointed out that there had never been such a thing as capital expenditure except under the last years of the old administration. Items classed then as current were now dealt with as capital expenditure. He declared that the Government claim of $954,000 interest from the T. N. & O. subsidy was not justified and that the Government was only entitled to credit for $500,000 interest due for 1912-1913 the interest of 1909, 1910 and 1911 having no place in it. He contended that the expenditure of Ontario in proportion to the revenue had been growing at too rapid a pace and that the Government had been negligent in raising the necessary revenues to meet it. He found a direct deficit of $1,818,291.63 between legitimate and proper current receipts and legitimate current expenditures.

KEEPING RECORDS OF THE COWS

Within the next few weeks several hundred cheese factories will be opening, hundreds of farmers will be preparing to milk thousands of freshly calved cows. Logically this beginning of a new season is the time to commence keeping records of production of the cows separately. Just a knowledge of the total yield of milk from the whole herd may give the owner an idea of the average yield per cow, but that does not give quite enough information. There may be a thousand pounds of milk difference in the total yield of two cows for the season, which would be unnoticeable in the small difference in the appearance of their two milk pails daily. Often the difference is far more than a thousand pounds, yet all cows are lumped together, good, poor and medium, all alike, when taking merely an average.

Since keeping records of individual production, many a dairyman has increased the average of his herd by fifteen hundred, and two thousand pounds of milk or more, because he has been able to detect the poor, inprofitable cows that masquerade as real dairy cows. On application to the Dairy Division, Ottawa, milk record forms and instructions are supplied free. Write today, and begin the new season right, with the object of keeping none but profitable cows.

TUBERCULOSIS IN FRANCE DOUBLED

PARIS, March 4. — Tuberculosis has a little more than doubled in France since 1887, according to figures supplied to The Temps by Henri Schmidt, the Republican-Radical deputy, who is one of the leading figures in the temperance movement in France.

Deputy Schmidt also traces statistically the effects of drunkenness on births and upon the lives of children whose parents have been intemperate.

NATIONAL BOARD DECLINES TO ADVANCE CANADIAN BASEBALL LEAGUE TO CLASS B

PLAYER AWARDED TO LOCAL CLUB

Canadian Press Despatch

Auburn, N.Y., March 4.—The National Board of Arbitration of National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues to-day denied the application of the Canadian League to be advanced to class B.

Frank Kelly was awarded to Peterboro.

Kelly is a player whom Manager Blount discovered, but the London Club claimed him under an agreement previously made. Blount followed up the case with the above result. As a result of the decision of the National Board, the Canadian League will remain Class C; with the salary limit remaining the same as last year. This decision will be satisfactory to the local club.

TODAY

In our mitt,
Yet little use
We make of it.
Tomorrow
Seems a better date
In which
To labor
Early, late,
And grind
Out work enough
To do—
Well, maybe
For a week or two,
Quite placidly
We contemplate
The passing
Of today
And wait
For one
That is A ringer for Another that
Has gone before,
But by some magic
We opine
Tomorrow
We will get
In line
And make our brains
And fingers fly
In that large,
Busy
By and by.
If we could grasp
The golden now
And grip
With steady hands
The plow,
What marvels
Might we not perform,
What heights undreamed of
Rise and storm!
All of which has probably occurred to you
About a thousands times.

OPPOSITION VOTE OF CENSURE AGAINST CROTHERS TURNED DOWN

Long and Bitter Attack on Minister of Labor, With Reference to Vancouver Island Strike—Laurier Inspired Resolution Declares Premier Borden.

OTTAWA, March 4.—After a prolonged and somewhat bitter debate the House of Commons at an early hour yesterday morning voted down a resolution offered by Mr. Alphonse Verville, the Liberal-Labor member for Maisonneuve, Montreal, censuring Hon. T. W. Crothers, Minister of Labor, for his conduct in relation to the long-protracted coal strike on Vancouver Island.

The debate was concluded by the Prime Minister at 1.30 a.m. Mr. Borden spoke briefly, but with considerable vigor, and was warmly applauded. He defended the course of the Minister and Labor and called upon the House to vote down the Verville resolution, which, he declared, had been inspired by Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

The vote on the censure motion stood: Yeas, 43; nays, 80—a Government majority of 37.

Mr. Verville (Labor, Maisonneuve) moved a vote of censure against the Minister of Labor for his "persistent negligence and absolute indifference in the matter of the coal strike on Vancouver Island." Mr. Verville said that his motion was in line with a resolution presented to the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada.

"The Minister," he said, "had shown all along a strong bias against international unionism, and had been actively hostile to the United Mine Workers of America. He had failed to exert himself to bring about a settlement at the inception of the strike. The Minister, Mr. Verville continued, had brought pressure to bear upon the Grand Trunk Railway to restore discharged strikers to employment by brandishing the big stick over that company. Why had he not brandished the big stick over the Canadian Northern Railway Co., who controlled Vancouver Island mines, when it applied for and received a cash subsidy of $16,000,000 last session?

Mr. Morphy (N. Perth) in reply, intimated that the Trades and Labor Congress had been used on more than one occasion to promote the Parliamentary fortunes of Hon. Mackenzie King. At the suggestion of Mr. King's secretary, the congress had asked the Government to make the Department of Labor a separate department, and thus made it possible for Mr. King to enter the Cabinet.

Mr. Morphy went on to say that the leaders of the United Mine Workers of America, who stirred up the strike in British Columbia, were the hired envoys of American coal mine owners, who feared Canadian competition. He was glad that Mr. Verville gave credit to Mr. Crothers for settling the Grand Trunk strike. Mr. King had attempted to settle that strike, with the result that everything the men had to do was put in writing, but what the company had to do was left to the discretion of the company.

Mr. Carroll (Lib., South Cape Breton) said it was absurd to say that the United Mine Workers and the coal mine owners of the United States were acting in unison. As a matter of fact, they were in deadly antagonism.

Mr. Shepherd (Con., Nanaimo), in whose district the strike occurred, gave a brief review of the trouble, which, he said, was due to the unwillingness of the mine owners to recognize the United Mine Workers of America, who, they claimed were trying to control the coal market of the Pacific coast.

Mr. Carvell (Carleton, N.B.) charged the Minister with failing to act more promptly because of collusion with the Canadian Northern Railway Co. and the McBride Government.

Mr. Green (Kootenay), replied that the charge that the mines were the property of the Canadian Northern was absurd. Sir William Mackenzie might have some stock in the Dunsmuir collieries, but the collieries were owned in England.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that a motion to censure a Minister of the crown for negligence and indifference respecting the rights of the people, whom it was his duty to look after, was a serious matter, but after examining the indictment against Mr. Crothers and the evidence in support of it, he could not but say that the charge was well founded. The labor trouble at Cumberland commenced in September, 1912. The Minister had promptly telegraphed to the company and to the men, calling their attention to the provisions of the Industrial and Conciliation Act, but had practically done nothing more for nearly a year. The men were complaining that two of their number were discharged for reporting the presence of a dangerous gas in the mines to the mine inspector. Their complaint might or might not have been true, but the Minister should have investigated. Had he been restrained from doing so by the Canadian Northern? That the mine owners, whoever they were, did not want the Labor Department to act was evident from a telegram to Sir William Mackenzie from his private secretary, in which it was said that the strike would collapse if Ottawa declined to interfere.

Hon. T. W. Crothers, Minister of Labor, upon rising to reply, congratulated Sir Wilfrid Laurier upon his new found affection for the working man. In 1896 there was a strike at Buckingham within thirty miles of the capital involving considerable bloodshed, but the Laurier Government refused to lift a finger in behalf of the strikers. It was then announced that Mr. Lemieux, who was Minister of Labor, that the Government would interfere in no strike unless requested to do so by both sides. In the Nova Scotia coal strike the Laurier Government had declined to request the mine owners to recognize the United Mine Workers, and in this course they were supported by Mr. Carvell, Minister Carroll and others who criticized him for not compelling the British Columbia mine owners to recognize the United Mine Workers.

Mr. Crothers then extensively reviewed the history of the Vancouver Island strike and said he had been active and diligent in his efforts to settle the same. He had no objection to international unionism, but so far as the United Mine Workers were concerned, there was every reason to believe that they intended to prevent Canadian coal competing too sharply with that mined in the United States.

Mr. Crothers was followed by Mr. Macdonald of Pictou, who charged that the United Mine Workers interfered in Nova Scotia politics in the Conservative interest, and had been instrumental in bringing about the election of Mr. Madden as member for South Cape Breton in 1903.

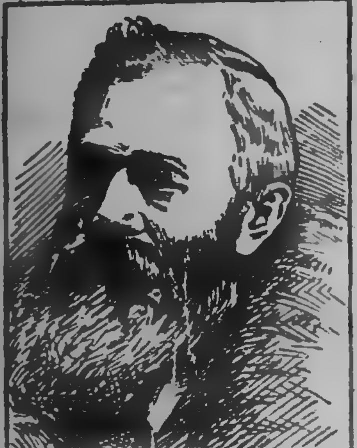
A PIONEER MISSIONARY

DR. M'DOUGALL HAS KNOWN INDIANS SINCE INFANCY.

His Father Was a Missionary Before Him and as a Child He Played With Redskin Children — Has Spent Over Fifty Years in the West, Part of the Time Acting For the Canadian Government.

For over half a century Rev. Dr. John McDougall has carried on missionary work in the Canadian west, with unflagging devotion to the cause of Christianity and civilization. He is one of the most eminent of the pioneer missionaries in that part of the Dominion.

He was born in the wilderness near the shores of the Georgian Bay, being the first white child born in that district. His father was a missionary among the Indians so that the boy's early associates were redskin children. He learned to speak Ojibawa before he mastered English, and also gained an insight into the habits and customs of Indian life that few white men possess. When very young he became his father's assistant, serving as guide, teamster, steersman, interpreter and general helper.



DR. M'DOUGALL.

He attended college a few months at Cobourg, Ont., and afterwards went west and became a teacher and missionary at Norway House, on the Nelson river. During the years that followed he traveled all over the northwest territories, often serving as peace commissioner among turbulent tribes.

As agent of the Canadian Government, he paved the way for the Northwest Mounted Police. In 1906 he became Doukhobor commissioner and and retained this post until 1911. Through his untiring zeal and work, scores of churches and schools have been erected and civilization brought into the wilds of the west.

An Apt Quotation.

Lord Lyons, the famous Ambassador, was not what one would call a witty man, but there is one good story told of him showing that he could make an apt reply on occasion.

One of his friends, Mr. Augustus Craven, was intensely mysterious in manner, and once on meeting him in London Lord Lyons asked if his wife were with him.

It happened that Mrs. Craven was staying with Lady Cowper at Wrest, and Mr. Craven replied, in his solemn, mysterious way:—

"She is at Wrest."

"Requiescat in pace!" replied Lord Lyons, with equal solemnity.

GEO. M. COHAN'S LATEST SUCCESS

"Broadway Jones" to be Seen Here Next Monday

Geo. M. Cohan's latest play, "Broadway Jones," proved the absolute hit of the New York season at the Geo. M. Cohan Theatre, before it was sent on tour. This latest offering from the pen of the gifted Cohan is one of the most interesting and entertaining plays he has written down to date. It is a comedy devoid of slang, as that vernacular is popularly defined; yet it contains enough smart and breezy chatter to keep the four acts in which it is written whizzing along at a speed pace that keeps it abreast of the stride that Cohan sets for all his brain-children, and in this case perhaps a stride or two ahead.

The play starts at a high speed after a very brief scene that simply serves to show "Broadway Jones," the hero of the work, an some sport. When the play opens, "Broadway" is arriving home very late in a condition one is not likely to arrive at very early. The youth is supposed to be very rich, but the morning after the night before discloses the fact that he has run through his money, and has engaged himself to a rich old woman in order to get ready cash to pay his debts. His friends try to break off the match but fail and the announcement of the engagement is allowed to stand. Then Jones gets word that his uncle ha. died and left him a big property in the shape of a chewing gum factory and the real action of the play begins. The scenes that follow show how the young fellow is brought around from a desire to sell his new property for whatever it will bring to an earnest determination to keep it for the good of the little Connecticut town of which it is the sole industrial enterprise. And "Broadway Jones,' money-burner and man-about-town, becomes Jackson Jones, factory owner and a leading man in his community. The development of the play is accomplished at high tension, and the story is told in the rapid fire manner that characterizes all of Geo. M. Cohan's plays.

SOCIAL SERVICE CONGRESS HOLDS CONVENTION IN OTTAWA

The Establishment of Labor Bureaus is Asked for in Resolution

OTTAWA, March 4.—One of the most remarkable gatherings that has ever assembled in Canada—the Social Service Congress of Canada—the object of which is to arouse interest and enlist all Canadians in behalf of social righteousness with the purpose of improving social, economic and ethical conditions in Canada, opened its sessions here yesterday, and will continue the next two days. Fully a thousand delegates are in attendance from all parts of Canada, and so great was the crowd seeking admission to the assembly hall that hundreds had to be turned away.

At the morning sessions addresses of welcome were delivered by Premier Borden, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and by Controller Parent of Ottawa Council.

The theme of the afternoon session was "The Church and Industrial Life," and many notable speakers, including Dr. Charles Stelzle, consulting sociologist of New York; Controller James Simpson of Toronto; Rev. J. W. Aikens, pastor Metropolitan Church, Toronto; Rev. Prof. G. C. Pidgeon, D.D., Vancouver, and Rev. W. A. Riddell, B.A., Toronto, were heard.

At the conclusion of the afternoon session a resolution was adopted that a deputation wait on the Government advocating the establishment of labor bureaus. Speakers also urged that the congress take steps to ask the Federal Government to remove the evil of unemployment.

Archbishop Hamilton presided at the evening, at which the speakers were Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, former Postmaster-General; Rev. C. W. Gordon (Ralph Connor); Winnipeg, and Dr. Charles Steele of New York.

PROPHESIES ELECTION.

Pall Mall Gazette Says Unionists Will Fight Every Step.

LONDON, March 4. — The Pall Mall Gazette declared yesterday that a general election is in sight, the deadlock being absolute, with no prospect of its being solved under the conditions existing in the present Parliament. Nationalist control of the Commons and the Government forbids an effective attempt to secure a compromise in Ulster. The Pall Mall Gazette asserts that the Government is preparing its suggestions, while well knowing that they will be rejected.

The Unionists in both Houses will resist, and will use every constitutional method which is likely to compel the Government to face the country before actual civil war is inevitable. The news from Ulster leaves little doubt that the covenanters are preparing to mobilize as soon as the Home Rule bill passes the Commons.

Eskimo Woman's Heroism.

The heroism of an Eskimo woman who, while ill, assisted her husband to drag a sled bearing a sick man for six weeks is one of the tales related by Rev. E. W. Greenshield, recently returned from mission work among the inhabitants of far northern Canada.

The sick man was Prof. Hantsch, the German explorer, who finally succumbed to his hardships. Prof. Hantsch intended to chart the great inland lake in Baffin's Land. During the expedition food ran short. One of the Eskimos returned alone on foot to a store, 10 days' journey. His only nourishment outbound was one tin of condensed milk, though he carried back a heavy load of provisions.

With only one Eskimo and his wife and a dog sledge, Prof. Hantsch pressed north another 300 miles. When his health failed the two Eskimos dragged him homeward on the sledge for six weeks, although the woman was seriously ill herself.

They reached the main camp, where Prof. Hantsch died, the Eskimos reading the Church of England service in their own tongue over his primitive grave and singing a hymn.

A Permanent Issue.

When the late Hon. John Haggart was soliciting the renewed support of the electors of South Lanark during the campaign of 1911, it was suggested to him by the Conservative party organizers that speakers should be sent into his riding to support the anti-reciprocity cause. Now Haggart had represented South Lanark for forty years, and his personal strength made Liberal opposition of little avail. When the suggestion of outside speakers was broached to him, he drawled in reply:

"Well, I don't know that it would do much good. You had better use your speakers elsewhere. I want to tell you that reciprocity is not an issue in the county of South Lanark. The only issue we have had there for forty years is 'The Battle of the Boyne!'"

PRINCESS THEATRE

The management of the Princess have arranged to take the splendid vaudeville acts from the Royal Theatre during the time they are running features in motion pictures. The public will no doubt be well satisfied owing to the high standard acts that were coming through. The vaudeville will change Monday and Thursday, and the pictures every day. Admission will be 5c. for the afternoon performance, and 10c. for the night performance. All new seats and lots of room to be comfortable.

Prayer Beads for Council.

Thomas McAuley, a veteran bookseller of Kingston, Ont., caused a sensation at the Council meeting recently by sending the mayor and each alderman a set of prayer beads, saying that they would be able to pray with one hand in their pocket and use the other to pound the desk at the same time. Several years ago Mr. McAuley sent the Council the ten commandments, but be observed in his letter that the mayor and aldermen had very severely broken them, and that they needed another reminder that they should pray as well as legislate.

Consequences of Moisture.

An alcoholic correspondent wrote a long letter to one of the Nova Scotia country papers, complaining bitterly of the condition of the village streets.

"After every rain," he wrote, "the water lies in the ditches for hours."

The paper printed the letter in full with the following "Ed. Note":

"So does our esteemed correspondent."

BOY SCOUT IS A HERO

Lad Risks Life in Saving Chum From Drowning.

MONTREAL, March 4.—Boy Scout Ben Embury, of Verdun, who went to the coronation of the King, is the hero of a plucky rescue from the St. Lawrence.

Embury, James Small, who lives on Claude street, and two English boy scouts, who are on their way from London to Winnipeg, started to walk over the ice-coated river to Nun's Island. The others were several yards behind when the ice gave way and he sank. Embury, calling to the other two boys to hold him by the legs, crawled towards the struggling boy and got a hold of him. The ice again broke and Embury lost his grip, but again managed to clutch Small and the English lads pulled rescued and rescuer to safety.

Resume Debate Monday.

LONDON, March 4. — The second reading of the Home Rule for Ireland bill is to be debated next Monday in the House of Commons, according to an announcement yesterday by Premier Asquith, who said he would then make his promised statement as to the proposed concessions to Ulster.

Cat Saved Lives.

By mewing and scratching at a bedroom door in the dead of night, a cat saved ten lives at Gloucester, Eng., recently. Mr. Henry Parsons, hairdresser, in Bristol road, with eight children and a friend, was sleeping in the house, and was awakened by the cat to find the lower part of the house in flames. The children were handed safely down to the ground.

THE LESSER SALMON.

There Are Several Grades From King Sock-eye Down.

While the sock-eye is the aristocrat of the salmon tribe, he is by no means the only source of profit to the Pacific Coast fishermen.

The next variety in grade of value is the Coho, a trim, silver-scaled fish, averaging ten pounds, and running as high as 20. It has a red flesh, but is coarser grained and has larger bones than the Sock-eye. The Coho is a fall fish, running to the spawning grounds a couple of weeks later than the Sock-eye. Their spawning grounds are usually fresh water streams below an inland lake.

The Hump-back is a five-pound fish of similar habit to the Sock-eye, excepting that it spawns in very small streams close to the sea. It is very prolific, and in the seasons of their run the streams are frequently choked with fish struggling against each other and battling against rocks, cascades and barriers. Their flesh is light-colored and soft, and they spoil quickly on being taken from the water. For this reason they have not been packed much as a food product, but in the past three years there has been an increasing demand for this cheaper class of fish.

The Dog salmon is a coarse pink fish of uniform size, ten to twelve pounds. It is the lowest grade in market value and is taken principally for salting. It runs to spawn about the same time as the Hump-back.

The Steel-head salmon which is frequently caught in Sock-eye season, is really a salmon trout. They are nearly always put in cold storage and sold as fresh fish, being held as the best flavored of all the varieties for table use.

Neither the king nor the queen would, it is said, have any regrets at leaving Norway. ESTABLISHED 1879. PETERBOROUGH, ONT., THURSDAY, MARCH 5, 1914. PRICE 2 CENTS

ROCNAC TO BE INVESTIGATED

John Sears, representing Rocnac Roads, Ltd., Toronto, asked the Board of Works last night to investigate the merits of Rocnac, a preparation used in road making. A steam roller and a mixer constitute the plant for construction work.

He estimated the cost for Peterborough would be from 50 to 55 cents per square yard and $1 per square yard, including the foundation.

A layer of Rocnac is laid on the foundation of the road and covered with crushed stone. A steam roller and time does the rest.

Mr. Sears said the City of Toronto had used it and had laid 75,000 yards in North Toronto.

The Board promised to investigate.

RECITAL IN AID OF SANITORIUM

By attending the recital to be given in the Collegiate Institute Assembly Hall to-morrow (Friday) evening by Mrs. Renwick, soloist, Miss Mignon Telgmann, violinist, and Mr. J. H. Renwick, accompanist, citizens will not only have a great musical treat, but will help along the Health Association in its effort to erect a sanitorium for the tubercular patients of the city. Mrs. Renwick has kindly offered the receipts for the first brick.

The patronesses are Mrs. R. W. Travers, Mrs. H. Ritchie, Mrs. V. Eastwood, Mrs. W. H. Denham, Mrs. A. J. Grant, and Mrs. Jas. Kendry. Dr. F. C. Neal, secretary of Nurses' Supervision Committee, will occupy the chair.

LIST OF BRAND NEW STREET NAMES

Ald. Anderson Would Rename Concession Street, Armour Road

A list of new names for streets was submitted by Ald. Anderson for the consideration of the Board of Works last night. He had such names as Brant, Waterloo, Selkirk, and he would re-christen Concession street as Armour Road, in honor of the late Judge Armour.

The list did not produce anything that sounded like Borden or Laurier, neither did the East Ward representative suggest that new streets bear the names of aldermen, past or present.

Mayor Buller quite happily suggested that the streets be named First, Second, Third, etc., a la New York, but received no encouragement.

There are some streets without names and some street names that several of the aldermen think should be changed. It was decided to let the matter remain over for future consideration.

The supplies are generally purchased in larger cities, but this year the officials are trying to do business with Peterborough merchants.

Several properties which might be suitable for a Rescue Home were inspected by Lieut.-Col. Turner.

BOTH PARTIES AGREE IN THE EVANTUREL CASE

PRESCOTT MEMBER MUST RESIGN

Long-Awaited Statement is Made and Contains an Apology and a Denial of Any Consciousness of Wrong Doing

TORONTO, March 5.—The Ontario Legislature made it plain yesterday that the only course open to Gustave Evanturel of Prescott is to resign. The long-awaited explanation came from him at the opening of the afternoon session, but beyond expressing his regret at the affair and apologising to the House and the members for a slur he bad never thought of casting upon them, the matter seemed ended as far as he was concerned.

The Government and Opposition, however, thought otherwise, and the suggestion was made and warmly endorsed that Evanturel's action could only be requited by his withdrawal from his seat. This was the opinion advanced by Hon. J. J. Foy for the Government and Mr. Rowell for the Opposition, and supported by the Opposition with clapping of the desks.

Mr. Evanturel's statement began with the excuse that the word "alliance" was used mistakenly, lack of knowledge of the English tongue having been responsible for his error. He had not understood the references of the member for Grenville and hence had denied them. For this he wished to apologise to the one who had laid the charges.

The position he applied for was not exactly understood by himself. He merely wanted to work for the liquor people. Further he had not stabbed his leader in the back in any sense, for Mr. Rowell had understood his position and so had his electors. He had maintained the same stand both before and after entering politics. If he had intended to injure the dignity of the House surely he would have gone about it in a more secret fashion. His sincerity and frankness in expressing regret for an unintentional action should weigh in his case, he thought.

Hon. J. J. Foy, on behalf of the Government, took the floor.

While he gave the member for Prescott credit for his apology to the House, Hon. Mr. Foy was of the opinion that a simple apology was not sufficient to meet the needs of the case.

"I myself," continued Mr. Foy, "think that he ought to resign his seat in the Legislature. He should consider whether he should do that or not, and if not then it will be the duty of the House and primarily of the Government to take some action in the matter."

The form such action should take Mr. Foy could not for the moment say. Now that Mr. Evantueral had acknowledge the letter, it rested with the House to take what action was proper.

Mr. Rowell spoke briefly in support of Mr. Foy's position. He bad already personally suggested to Mr. Evanturel that he should resign his seat in the House, and wished now to express publicly his concurrence in the opinion of the acting Premier.

The budegt debate advanced another stage yesterday afternoon, with one Opposition and two Government speakers participating.

A. H. Musgrave (Centre Huron) resumed the debate and said he considered the province open to great congratulation. They were combatting unemployment by spending millions annually on good roads in the north and in general conditions there was not a province in Canada to compare with the prosperity of Ontario at the present.

J. C. Elliott (Lib., W .Middlesex) centered his attack on the method of accounting which showed a surplus. The good report of the Government, be said, had been made possible by using a large part of the cash on hand, and in this way was not warranted. Apparently no provision had been made for current expenditure.

One thing he desired to establish, namely, that there should be added to the estimated expenditure two and a half million of statutory expenditure. This would leave a deficit of nearly five millions. He also took exception to the Treasurer having included a large sum out of the T. & N. O. subsidy as interest. A part may have been justified, but the amount used certainly was not.

T. W. McGarry said the Government had taken up the burden of ancient sins and was doing well under it. He was not going to apologize for Government expenditure. It showed that they were serving the people in the very best way possible. The trouble with the Opposition was that they fell down on their bookkeeping.

THE WOMEN SHOULD BE PROTECTED

Immigrants Should be Guarded Says Miss Marie Ratte

SOCIAL CONGRESS

OTTAWA, March 5.—The great social congress of Canada was thrilled yesterday afternoon by a woman as not even the speeches of the leaders of Canada's national life and the thoughts and eloquence of the eminent speakers who proceeded her at the previous sessions, succeeded in doing. It was during the consideration of commercialized vice and the white slave traffic.

The speaker, who for a quarter of an hour made the big audience of men sit astounded, women and girls frequently breaking into exclamations and tears, was Miss Marie Christine Ratte, Toronto, general supervisor of redemptive work for girls in the Presbyterian Church.

"Under the shadow of the towers of Parliament in your beautiful city of Ottawa," she said, "I went out after taking up my work, and in a house found eighteen girls, the youngest 16. Next door I found nine in a house. I tried to talk to them; to find out about them, but they told me they were not supposed to talk, and although I did find out, I was warned not to say anything, but I did say something."

In British Columbia it was the same, and in Winnipeg, too.

"In the Winnipeg rescue home there is a mother of thirteen, fifteen, and up. Have you ever thought what the world means to those women abandoned by man?"

"I would suggest that no young girl be brought to Canada without proper protection. The agencies bringing these girls here do not offer any protection. There is a law for those girls who are seduced, but there is no law to protect those domestic servants who are wronged."

NO CALL FOR PENSIONS SAYS FINANCE MINISTER

While Approving of Principle of Caring for Aged Poor, Hon. W. T. White Says There is No Call for it, and it Would Impose a Heavy Burden Upon Resources of the Country

OTTAWA, March 5. — The House of Commons put in the day discussing old age pensions upon a resolution offered by Mr. Kyte of Richmond, N.S., declaring that, in the opinion of the House, the Government should at once inaugurate an old age pensions system.

In speaking to his resolution, Mr. Kyte referred to what has been done in Great Britain, Australia, New Zealand and other countries in establishing old age pension systems, and urged that Canada should not lag behind.

He laid special stress upon the desirability of some action which would prevent the separation of husband and wife when poverty came upon them in old age. From the information he had obtained, he believed that an annual outlay of some $7,000,000 would suffice to meet the requirements of a pension system, and it must be remembered that to-day $3,000,000 or more is paid out in Canada for housing the poor.

Mr. Burnham (W. Peterboro) favored the principle of the resolution but said that he was not in a position to say whether the Dominion Government should at this time be able to assume the financial responsibilities involved.

E. M. Macdonald (Pictou) took exception to the idea held by some people that an old age pension plan was designed to benefit the improvident and the intemperate, but held to the opinion that no system which might be established should provide pensions for persons having incomes of more than $300 a year.

Mr. Alguire (Con., Stormont) doubted if there was any urgent public demand for the legislation. That demand, he said, would come in time and in the meantime Parliament was well occupied in discussing the question.

W. F. Carroll (Cape Breton, S.) held to the opinion that there is a ripened sentiment in the Dominion to-day in favor of old age pensions. Some scheme should be formulated, even though immediate effect were not given to it.

Hon. Mr. White thought the expense would be much greater than many members of the House seemed to imagine. His predecessors had estimated that to pay three dollars a week to every person in Canada over sixty years of age would involve an expenditure of $40,000,000 a year. Mr. White said, however, that not all of the 334,000 people over sixty-five years of age in Canada would receive a pension, and the system might not cost the Government more than half that amount. But whatever it cost, there would be a tremendous burden upon the revenues of the country. Such a burden, be submitted, should not be imposed unless the people of Canada desired that it be done. He doubted if eighty per cent. of the people in Canada ever gave the subject a thought.

On motion of Mr. White the debate was adjourned.

HOTELKEEPER "STUMPS" FOR THE LIBERALS

Duty Called Him to the Drowned Lands of Kirkfield

PAY SHEET SAYS SO

When the report and evidence of the investigation of the local Trent Canal offices are laid on the table of the House, many amusing and instructive features of administration and finance, in which many of the chosen participated, both in the city and county, will be open to public view.

It is evident that there was got much distinction of politics made when the good things were within reach. Graft, apparently, knows no politics, but it may learn some law.

Imagine an hotelkeeper earning his bread and butter and incidentals by removing stumps from drowned lands at Kirkfield. Such a happening was recorded if the word of the paysheet is to be taken. There are quite a number of hotelkeepers, whose names appear on the pay sheets.

Another failed to appreciate the fun to be had in "painting the town" so he took to painting lockgates, slides, and dams, while several others appeared on booms, slides and dams. They must have handled the job with dexterity and credit, because there were no reports of "narrow escapes from downing."

Trade must have been slack in the confectionery business, as a local confectioner appears as having assisted in removing those stumps at Kirkfield.

Also a loal plumber is given credit for owning a team and he is entered as a teamster, working on repairs to bridges. Liverymen were called into service on booms, slides and dams, and one had a job repairing breaks in the canal banks.

WILSON ASKS CONGRESS TO APPEAL CANAL EXEMPTION

Must be Done he Says to Sustain the National Honor

Canadian Press Despatch

Washington, March 5.—President Wilson personally appealed to Congress to-day to sustain the national honor of the United States by the repealing of the Panama tolls exemption. He asked Congress to do that "in support of a foreign policy of the United States saying the exemption for American ships was a mistaken economic policy and in contravention of the treaty."

"I shall not know how to deal with other matters of even greater delicacy and nearer consequence if you do not grant it to me in an ungrudging measure," said the President.

"The large thing to do is the only thing we can afford to do; a voluntary withdrawal from the position which is everywhere questioned and misunderstood. We ought to reverse our action without raising the question whether we were right or wrong and so once more deserve our reputation for generosity and the redemption of every obligation without quibble or hesitation."

DIAZ ENVOYS ON THE SCENE

Efforts to Enlist U. S. in New Revolution a Failure

SECURE PEACE

WASHINGTON, March 5. — Although Great Britain's reluctance to press the Benton case at this time has made the Mexican situation less acute, there are several aspects of it which it is now practically certain will occasion spirited debate in the Senate in a few days.

Senator Fall of New Mexico yesterday presented to the foreign relations committee, Pedro Del Vilar and Cecilio Ocon, representing the political interests of Felix Diaz. Members of the committee were frankly amazed when the Mexicans sought the moral support by the United States of a movement to bring about peace in Mexico by another revolution headed by Diaz. The committee had no idea, it is said, as to the exact purpose of their visit other than that they wished to present information about the situation in Mexico. Members of the committee flatly stated that the United States could not recognize any such movement.

Vilar and Ocon severely arraigned Huerta as corrupt and Carranza and Villa as bandits, and argued that Felix Diaz had a host of Mexican citizens behind him who would rush to his support to establish a real government in Mexico. They wanted to get a promise, if possible, from the United States Government that it would uphold Diaz and recognize him if a counter-revolution succeeded. Several members of the committee characterized the proposition as preposterous.

Benton Enquiry Abandoned?

WASHINGTON, March 5. — Gen. Carranza's announcement that he had appointed a special commission to investigate the recent execution by Gen. Villa of William S. Benton, a British subject, coupled with the declaration from Great Britain that she would not look to the United States for action as a result of the incident, was generally accepted yesterday as meaning the abandonment of the expedition of American and British representatives who were to have gone to Chihuahua to examine Benton's body.

MOVE FOR HONESTY IN ADVERTISING

CHICAGO, March 5.—Advertising commissions to be composed by advertisers, to pass upon the honesty of assertions in advertising copy before it is published, were urged at the fourteenth annual meeting of the Association of American Advertisers here, by Allen N. Drake of Buffalo, N. Y.

"The men who pay the money should combine against misleading advertising," said Mr. Drake. "Agents will find circulations sometimes misstated by publishers."

PETERBORO TEMPLE BAND TO ADVERTISE ELECTRIC CITY DURING TRIP TO ENGLAND

Profusely Illustrated Souvenirs Will be Widely Distributed

With unlimited energy and anticipation of a successful trip, the Temple Band are making extensive preparations for the trip to the Great International Congress of the Salvation Army to be held in London, England, during the month of June.

Adjutant McElheney is preparing a souvenir booklet which will serve to advertise Peterborough more so than any souvenir ever published before. It is the intention of the Temple Band to make this a copyright souvenir of the city, which is something Peterborough is sadly lacking. The souvenir will entail considerable work. It contains authentic information regarding the City of Peterborough direct from City Clerk Armstrong. Every building of importance has a place in this book while, views of the summer resorts, churches, public buildings, parks, streets, residences, are to be seen. There will be over 100 illustrations.

The city council and public officials also occupy a place in the souvenir. It is proposed to have 3,000 published immediately for city use. The band intend taking 10,000 over to the Old Country, where they will be distributed at the International Congress, and also during their tour of England, thus affording the city of Peterborough considerable advertising.

The visit includes practically all the cities of importance in the Old Land, and the members of the Temple Band, thirty in number, will have the opportunity of visiting their old homes once more.

The city will not only be represented by the band in London during the big week, but a large number of other residents have signified their willingness to take in the trip, in company with the band, thereby giving this city a prominent place in the Congress, which will include delegates from practically all parts of the globe. It is the biggest festival ever attempted by an organization of this kind.

Spacious halls for the visitors will be erected and arrangements have been made for the Albert Hall for two days, while the celebrated Crystal Palace will be turned over to the visitors for one day. Meetings of importance will be held in these celebrated buildings. The local band has been assured of every care and comfort from headquarters, and will take part in the big events at the festivals of the Congress. The band is hopeful of taking a representative from the City Council, which would further the interests of the city.

JAS. PRINGLE IS DEAD AT STRATFORD

Many Years ago he Conducted Grain and Lumber Business Here.

The death is announced at Stratford, of Mr. James Pringle, who many years ago was in the grain and lumbering business in Peterboro. He was 83 years of age.

Coming to Canada from Scotland, Mr. Pringle settled in Cold Springs, and entered the grain business with his brother-in-law.

Later Mr. Pringle came to Peterborough and added lumber buying to his business interests.

In 1858 Mr. Pringle removed from Peterborough to Seaforth, remaining in that town until 1880, when he went to Chicago. For eight years he was engaged in the grain business in that city, and in 1888 he went to Stratford. He established on a firm basis the big flour milling industry which is now the McLeod Milling Co. of that place.

MILITANTS AND LABOR

Bitterness Against Party Results in Fierce Battle

LONDON, March 5.—Militant suffragettes last night gave further proof that their bitterest animosity is reserved for the Labor party, the only political party which has espoused their cause. As soon as J. Ramsay Macdonald, chairman of the Labor party, began speaking at a Labor party rally in Memorial Hall, suffragettes in all parts of the chamber, aided by a number of male supporters, started to howl him down.

Women ushers had been engaged to deal with women interrupters of the meeting and males to tackle masculine disturbers, but as "bouncers" for their own sex the women proved failures, and the men had to take over their duties. For nearly an hour a fierce struggle raged in the hall. There were frequent free fights between men, while women grabbed one another by the hair and scratched faces and tore clothing. Windows were smashed and chairs broken during the disorder.

CHANGES TO BE MADE IN THE ENGINEER'S DEPARTMENT

Board of Works Discuss the Question but Definite Action is Deferred

The proposed re-organization of the Engineering department was discussed last night by the Board of Works, but definite action was deferred pending further investigation and consideration by the Mayor and chairman of the Board.

The matter was referred to as a delicate one. It was held that the best interests of the department and the city would be served by dispensing with the services of Mr. Hay, Mr. Quartermaine and the lady stenographer, and the appointment of a young man to do the clerical work.

A change would also be made in the plumbing department, which position Peter Thompson now holds.

Several members of the Board felt that Mr. Hay should receive particular consideration in view of his many years of service to the city.

Will Buy Boiler.

"Ridiculous" and "outrageous," was the aldermanic comment when an account was received from the superintendent for the Water Commission, which included an item for the use of the steam boiler. It was $5 per day. The whole account was for $30. The city has a counter account of $28.

It was decided that hereafter the Water department could keep their old boiler. The chairman was given authority to purchase one.

Sewage Disposal.

The City Engineer reported that Sanitary Engineer Dallyn, of the Provincial Board of Health, had approved his plans for the outfall sewer, save for several small details.

Mr. Dallyn asked for complete topographical plans. Mr. Parsons was authorised to secure necessary assistance to enable him to meet the request.

LOUD CRIES FOR STREET WATERING

Service on Romaine Street Wanted by Ald. Saunders

Indications point toward a movement by the ratepayers in the several wards, with the object of having the street watering system extended this season.

Several petitions are before the Board of Works and there are others on the way.

"Don't forget Romaine street," exclaimed Ald. Saunders at the Board meeting last night.

Ald. Green put in a word for Park street, north of Smith street.

The manager of the Street Railway Co. has not as yet reported as to what arrangement he can make, so that the city might have the streets on the railway line watered by one or more cars.

DR. MOIR SPOKE TO THE NURSES

The regular monthly meeting of the Peterborough Branch of Graduate Nurses, held yesterday afternoon in the Public Library, was featured by a very instructive and interesting address by Dr. Moir. The subject was "Infectious Diseases in Private Nursing." Dealing as it did with matters which confront the members of the association almost daily, the address was very appropriate. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered the speaker. Miss Bertha M. Mowry presided.

The next meeting will be addressed by Dr. Middleton on "Oral Hygiene."

THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. A. J. Grant will give an address on the Panama Canal at the St. Peter's T. A. S. Literary Society meeting Friday evening.

PETERBOROUGH, THURSDAY, MARCH 5, 1914.

THE LEGACY OF THE LIBERALS.

THE LIBERAL party in Canada is certainly in a discredited position. In the first place they sought to commit the Canadian people to a naval policy that was as fatal for the Empire as it was ineffective and blind. Canada, they said, cannot afford to embark on a great naval programme, so they bought a couple of old battleships that were more for ornament and talk than for effective work in battle. They could only see the way open for an expenditure of twenty millions on a next to useless programme. This amount was a large sum ,but, when a tin-pot navy was all Canada was getting for this amount, the policy of the Liberals was certainly unworthy of the great party they represented.

Then, at the very time they were committing the country to this abortive naval policy, they were ruthlessly squandering forty millions of the people's money on the Grand Trunk Pacific. Forty millions wasted absolutely on a railway, and only twenty millions allowed for the defence of the Empire!

Again, follow their record in office and we find falsified pay-lists on the Trent Valley Canal. Some two thousand dollars at least have been misappropriated (stolen is the proper word) to assist in the election of Liberal candidates in Peterborough. Look at the record, far from complete as it is, and say if any man worth the name of man, could offer himself as a candidate in support of such a record. Twenty millions intended to be wasted on a tin-pot navy, forty millions squandered on the Grand Trunk Pacific, canal officials enlisted in an illicit combination to divert public money from the treasury in order to corrupt the electorate. Evanturel has offered to sell himself to the liquor interests, and lastly, the obstruction of the useful and effective naval policy of the Borden Government by the Liberals is well known.

"Political impurity is rotting our Canadian life," said Rev. T. Albert Moore in Montreal the other day. Not without good reason did this temperance and moral reformer draw a dark picture of the influence of political evils on Canadian national life. There is, however, one ray of sunlight through this ominous political gloom. The consoling fact is that the Liberals are out of office, and no longer in possession of either the people's confidence or their money.

Time was when public life had more a smack of honour about it and less a taste of graft. "Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori"—Sweet and becoming is death for our native land. So runs a famous line of Horace when he wished to inculcate in the youth of Rome those qualities of courage and virtue as they were exemplified in the old Roman character. He wished her public men to have a public spirit, to make sacrifices for the public interest, to quit themselves like men. Though the Romans soon forgot the warnings of the finished poet of the Sabine hills, his words have a potent application to public life to-day.

Men must remember that public service requires sacrifices of the highest kind and when they fail to regard it as such, when they look upon it as a means for personal or party gain they have betrayed a most sacred trust. Such a betrayal has the Liberal party committed. Fortunate were the Canadian people when they thrust these jobbers from the seat of power. With what face they will approach the people and explain their wanton administration, which has caused no end of delay to the passage of much-needed reforms, remains to be seen. This much is certain that the Conservative Party is putting forth every effort to discharge their trust with honour, though hampered by the legacy left them by the Liberals. Their return to power will show that the Canadian people have not failed to accept the teaching of the past, that Canadian national life is worthy of a nation.

WHAT A STRAW VOTE SHOWS.

THE GRAIN GROWERS' Guide took a straw vote of its readers on several questions like free trade, the navy, direct legislation, and single tax and settled "the be all and the the end all" of these problems to its own satisfaction. If the Guide were a guide in a true sense, if it were less partizan or at least broad enough to consider the beliefs of its opponents fairly it would have more weight even in the West.

Concerning its plebiscite the Calgary Herald well says:

> "What the straw vote indicates, if it indicates anything, is that there are certain people who hold opinions strongly enough to induce them to place themselves on record publicly.
>
> "Viewing the Grain Growers' Guide straw votes in this light there is little comfort for faddists in the results. The Grain Growers' Guide claims a circulation somewhere close to thirty thousand, most of which is in the West. After weeks of appeal to its readers to mark their ballots and send them in it succeeded in getting a total vote of 6,798, of which 2,603 were women. This means that out of nearly thirty thousand readers, to whom it had been preaching its fancies for months, considerably less than one-quarter were impressed strongly enough to take a straw vote interest. Not a very encouraging result, surely."

HE SHOULD SEE PETERBOROUGH.

THE FOLLOWING paragraph appeared in the Toronto Mail and Empire:

> "An evening paper declares that Toronto is the best lighted city on the continent, and if this assertion is repeated often enough, it may be believed by those who have never seen any other city."

The writer could never have travelled. Had he done so, he would have seen Peterborough, and stood agape with wonder at the white blaze of glory that our new Hydro lights shed on George and Charlotte Streets. We trust we shall not have to remind him again.

WEALTH IN THE WASTE PLACES.

WHEN THE Conservative party under the leadership of Sir John Macdonald fathered that tremendous experiment, the C. P. R., they felt the development that would arise in the North-West would assure the success of the undertaking, and it did. The hundreds of miles of rock country that had to be traversed in order to link the great West with the East, was looked upon as one of the great difficulties to be overcome and not as a country of potential wealth. Time alone is justifying the forethought of man, in the knowledge that even the waste places along that great highway are being made to yield their hidden treasures to the uses of a great commercial age.

For years those great tracks of igneous rock in Northern Ontario were considered worthless, aside from the timber, until an obscure prospector told of the vast stores of silver and gold they contained. For ten years mining companies have been delving for the precious ores and here is the record of their labors:

> "Since the discovery of silver in Cobalt about ten years ago, about $100,000,000 worth has been taken out. The mining industry in Ontario made a record in 1913, when the total output increased over last year's figures—in themselves a record previously—by 9.6 per cent. According to a report of the bureau of mines issued yesterday, the net value of metallic production in the province was $37,508,955, the non-metallic production reaching $15,491,002, a total mineral output of $52,999,957. The production of gold reached 220,837 ounces, of which more than 94 per cent. came from the Porcupine mines."

Surely no part of Canada is without its value. Surely the waste places of the earth are being made to blossom like the rose through the application of scientific thought and investigation.

THE COUNTRY generally is sorry to learn of the resignation, owing to ill-health, of the Hon, F. D. Monk from the House of Commons. He was one man at least who kept faith with his constituents and gave up the position of a minister with its large salary, rather than go back on his principles. He set a worthy example to all Canada that principles are above party, pecuniary and personal considerations.

Hon. T. W. The use of white phosphorous has been prohibited in many civilized countries for many years. Mr. Crothers, as soon as he became Minister, instituted an inquiry and as a result came to the conclusion that its use was a menace to the health of the employees of factories handling it. By abolishing its use in Canada Mr. Crothers has taken an advanced move in the uplift of the worker and society generally.

FATIGUE

By Walt Mason

From day to day we sell our whey, our nutmegs, nails or cotton, and oft we sigh, as hours drag by, "This sort of life is rotten! The dreary game is e'er the same, no respite or diversion; oh, how we long to join the throng on some outdoor's excursion! On eager feet, along the street, more lucky folks are hiking, while we must stay and sell our hay—it's little to our liking!" Those going by perhaps will sigh, "This work we do is brutal; all day we hike long the pike, and all our work is futile. It would be sweet to leave the street and own a nice trade palace, and sell rolled oats to human goats, it would, so help me Alice!" All o'er this sphere the briny tear is shed by people weary, who'd like to quit their jobs and flit to other tasks more dreary. We envy folks who wear their yokes, and tote a bigger burden, we swear and sweat and fume and fret, and oft forget the guerdon. There is no lot entirely fraught with happiness and glory; if you are sore the man next door can tell as sad a story.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

"IRREGULARITIES."

Editor of The Review :

It is going too far to say as many Canadian papers are doing that the "irregularities" disclosed in the recent T. V. C. investigation were wholly for Liberal campaign purposes. Out of the large sum appropriated annually for T. V. C. repairs, etc., no doubt much could be used that was spent on the work "nominally" only, if any one had a mind so to do. But to put the diversion down to campaign purposes only, is going too far. Until we cast aside mere partizanship and make "The man" a first consideration we cannot expect much beyond what we have been having lately in Canada which is in danger of becoming a by-word instead of a nation. When superintendents of Sunday Schools have also a wide reputation for telling very shady stories as has happened before this in Peterborough, what can any reasonable man expect ? How much has been sacrificed to get the "needful" is becoming plainer every day. As we sow we must reap. We may fool the people but not God. Some of the trouble is, no doubt, due to incompetence. Ambitious little men without brains and without principle, except when a show of it serves a purpose are doing great harm. As the Persian poet says: There is only one way because there can be only one way.

Yours etc.,

Citizen.

WHAT TO REFORM.

Editor Review :

Why do women try to imitate men. Men never try to imitate women. There isn't a man in this city wearing the hobble or the tango today. When we have a policeman a policewoman would only be flirting with them peeking round the corners. I would say that the call to prayers is woman's fort. She can work up the required fervour and believe more or less evidence than anything we have except Stana Claus. Women are our loved ones and let it go at that. Let them play away reforming the entire world all except themselves. The get-up of women is doing more harm and providing a worse example than all the cigarettes and potato-cake in the whole world except Africa mebbe. Women will do more good by reforming their own conduct and appearance than by making attacks on men who should be obeyed and not bothered.

Sir,—There ain't more than half enough societies and mothers' meetings goin' on. Nor there ain't half enough laws agin being wicked. Let us bring in a law prohibiting everything wrong or deleterious. It might be like this, "Be it and the same is hereby prohibited, namely, all forms of injury or wrong doin' be the same more or less and wherever the words conscience and honor and manhood and womanliness and the Ten Commandments used to be and be cultivated, the same is superseded by this law prohibiting the same." This will save a lot of time and be just as sensible.

Home Rule Bill March 9.

LONDON, March 5.—The Home Rule bill will be read a second time on March 9. Mr. Asquith has promised to announce his suggestions for a compromise, two days will be allotted for discussion and then the debate will be adjourned while financial business is settled. It is nowhere expected that Mr. Asquith's suggestions will result in a settlement of the question.

The situation brings nearer the prospect of a general election, and it is the opinion that Parliament would be dissolved by June at the latest.

May Treble Commissioner's Salary.

OTTAWA, March 5.—The salary of the High Commissioner for Canada in London is quite likely to be raised. Heretofore it has been $10,000 a year, but Lord Strathcona, because of his great wealth, did not draw any salary at all. There is now talk of making the figure $25,000 or $60,000.

Preston as Biographer.

LONDON, March 5.—The C. A. P. learns that W. T. R. Preston, a well-known late official under the Department of Trade and Commerce, who now resides here, is preparing a life of Lord Strathcona, based on the author's own records. The work will shortly be ready for publication.

Birthdays of Note

THURSDAY, MARCH FIFTH

The Hon. L. A. Taschereau, Minister of Public Works for Quebec, is forty-seven years of age to-day. He is the most distinguished living representative of one of the greatest French-Canadian families that ever lived in this country. A nephew of the late Cardinal Taschereau he was also related closely to the late Chief Justice Taschereau. His father, grandfather and great grandfather were all judges and took a prominent part in the administration of the law in Lower Canada. He himself is a lawyer of high reputation, enjoying probably the most extensive practice in Quebec City, and will doubtless himself occupy a seat on the Bench in due time. Meanwhile he works hard at his dual task of administering an important state department and carrying on a big legal practise.

BREAKWATER PROMISED.

Leamington To Have One Within a Couple of Years.

OTTAWA, March 5—A breakwater is to be built at Leamington within the next couple of years. An appropriation for it will appear either in the supplementary estimates this year or in the main estimates next year. This was what Hon. Robert Rogers told a strong delegation from the north riding of Essex which waited on the Minister of Public Works yesterday. The cost of a suitable breakwater, would be about $75,000, but at present the Government gets $50,000 a year in duties on tobacco grown on the island, and with better facilities this would be greatly increased.

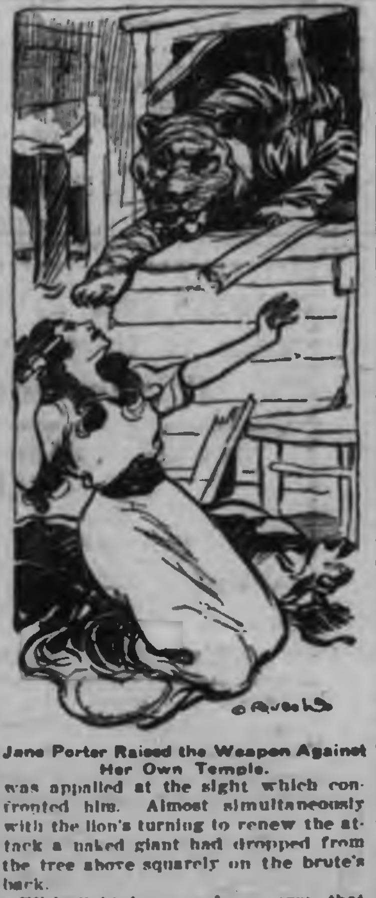
Tarzan of the Apes

By EDGAR RICE BURROUGHS.

Copyright by the Frank A. Munsey Co.



Jane Porter Raised the Weapon Against Her Own Temple.

Possibly, too, he thought, before th the professor and Philander had returned to camp. He started, stumbling back through the thick and matted underbrush in the direction that he thought the cabin lay.

To Tarzan's surprise, the young man was heading farther into the jungle in the general direction of Mbonga's village, and the shrewd young ape man was convinced that he was lost.

The fierce jungle would make easy prey of this unprotected stranger in a very short time if he were not guided quickly to the beach, thought Tarzan.

Yes: there was Numa, the lion, even now stalking the white man a dozen paces to the right.

Clayton heard the great body paralleling his course, and now there rose upon the evening air the great beast's thunderous roar. The man stopped with upraised spear and faced the brush from which issued the awful sound. The shadows were deepening; darkness was coming on.

For a moment all was still. Clayton stood rigid with raised spear. Presently a faint rustling of the bush behind him apprised him of the stealthy creeping of the thing. It was gathering for a spring when at last he saw it, not twenty feet away—the long, lithe, muscular body and tawny head of a huge black maned lion.

In agony the man watched, fearful to launch his spear, powerless to fly. He heard a noise in the tree above him. Some new danger, he thought, but he dared not take his eyes from the yellow green orbs before him. There was a sharp twang, like the sound of a broken banjo string, and at the same instant an arrow appeared in the yellow hide of the crouching lion.

With a roar of pain and anger the beast sprang, but Clayton stumbled to one side, and as he turned again to face the infuriated king of beasts he was appalled at the sight which confronted him. Almost simultaneously with the lion's turning to renew the attack a naked giant had dropped from the tree above squarely on the brute's back.

With lightning speed an arm that was corded with layers of iron muscle encircled the huge neck, and the great beast was raised from behind, roaring and pawing the air—raised as easily as Clayton would have lifted a pet dog.

That scene he witnessed in the twilight depths of an African jungle was burned forever into the Englishman's brain.

The man before him was the embodiment of physical perfection and giant strength, yet it was not on this he had depended in his battle with the great cat, for, mighty as were his muscles, they were as nothing by comparison with those possessed by Numa. To his agility, to his brain and to his long, keen knife he owed his supremacy.

His right arm encircled the lion's neck, while the left hand plunged the knife time and time again into the unprotected side behind the left shoulder, while the infuriated beast, drawn upward and backward until he stood on his hind legs, struggled impotently in this unnatural position.

Had the battle continued a few seconds longer the outcome might have been different, but all was accomplished so quickly that the lion had scarce time to recover from its surprise before it sank lifeless to the ground.

Then the strange figure which had vanquished it stood erect upon the carcass and, throwing back the wild, handsome head, gave the fearsome cry which a few moments earlier had so startled Clayton.

Before him he saw the figure of a young man naked except for a loin cloth and a few barbaric ornaments on arms and legs and on the breast a priceless diamond locket gleaming against a smooth brown skin.

The hunting knife had been returned to its homely sheath, and the man was gathering up his bow and quiver from where he had tossed them when he leaped to attack the lion.

Clayton spoke to the man in English, thanking him for his brave rescue and complimenting him on his wondrous strength and dexterity.

The only answer was a steady stare and a faint shrug of the mighty shoulders, which may have betokened either disparagement of the service rendered or ignorance of the language.

The bow and quiver slung on his back, the wild man once more drew his knife and deftly carved a dozen large strips of meat from the lion's carcass. Then, squatting upon his haunches, he proceeded to eat, motioning Clayton to join him.

The strong white teeth sank into the raw and dripping flesh in apparent relish, but Clayton could not bring himself to share the uncooked meat with his strange host. Instead he watched him, and presently there dawned upon him the conviction that this was Tarzan of the apes, whose notice he had seen posted upon the cabin door that morning.

If so he must speak English.

Again Clayton essayed speech with the ape man, but the replies were in a strange tongue, which resembled the chattering of monkeys mingled with the growling of some wild beast.

CHAPTER X.

The Forest God.

WHEN Tarzan had finished his repast he rose and, pointing in a very different direction from that which Clayton had been pursuing, started through the jungle toward the point he had indicated.

Clayton, bewildered and confused, hesitated to follow him, for he thought he was but being led more deeply into the mazes of the forest, but the ape man returned and, grasping him by the coat, dragged him along until he was convinced that Clayton understood what was required of him and then left him to follow voluntarily.

The Englishman finally concluded that he was a prisoner and saw no alternative but to accompany his captor, and thus they traveled slowly through the jungle while the sable mantle of the impenetrable night of the forest fell about them.

Suddenly Clayton heard the faint report of a firearm—a single shot and then silence.

In the cabin by the beach two thoroughly terrified women clung to each other as they crouched upon the low bench in the gathering darkness.

The negress, sobbing hysterically, bemoaned the evil day that had witnessed her departure from her dear Maryland, while the white girl, dry eyed and outwardly calm, was tortured by inward forebodings. She feared not more for herself than for the three men whom she knew to be wandering in the abysmal depths of the jungle, from which now issued the incessant shrieks and roars, barkings and growlings of its terrifying and fearsome inmates.

Now came the sound of a heavy body brushing against the side of the cabin. She could hear the great padded paws upon the ground without. Then for an instant all was silence.

"Hush!" the girl whispered. "Hush, Esmeralda!" for the woman's sobs and groans seemed to have attracted the thing that stalked there just beyond the thin wall.

A gentle scratching sound was heard on the door. The brute tried to force an entrance, but presently this ceased, and again she heard the great padded paws creep stealthily around the cabin. Again they stopped—beneath the window, on which the terrified eyes of the girl now glued themselves.

"Heavens!" she murmured, for, silhouetted against the moonlit sky beyond, she saw framed in the tiny square of the latticed window the head of a huge tiger. The gleaming eyes were fixed upon her in tense ferocity.

"Look, Esmeralda!" she whispered. "What shall we do? Look! Quick! The window!"

Esmeralda cowered still closer to her mistress and glanced affrighted toward the little square of moonlight just as the tiger emitted a low, savage snarl.

The sight that met the poor black's eyes was too much for the already overstrung nerves.

"Oh, Gabriel!" she shrieked and slid to the floor, an inert and senseless mass.

For what seemed an eternity the great brute stood with its fore paws upon the sill, glaring into the little room. Presently it tried the strength of the lattice with its great talons.

The girl had almost ceased to breathe when to her relief the head disappeared and she heard the brute's footsteps leaving the window. But now they came to the door again, and once more the scratching commenced, but this time with increasing force until the great beast was tearing at the massive panels in a perfect frenzy of fury.

Could Jane Porter have known the immense strength of that door, builded piece by piece, she would have felt less fear of the tiger reaching her by this avenue.

For fully twenty minutes the brute alternately sniffed and tore at the door, occasionally giving voice to a cry of baffled rage. At length, however, he gave up the attempt, and Jane Porter heard him returning toward the window, beneath which he paused for an instant and then launched his great weight against the time worn lattice.

The girl heard the wooden rods groan beneath the impact, but they held, and the huge body dropped back to the ground below.

Again and again the tiger repeated these tactics until finally the horrified prisoner within saw a portion of the lattice give way, and in an instant one great paw and the head of the animal were thrust within the room.

Slowly the powerful neck and shoulders were spreading the bars apart, and the lithe body came farther and farther into the room.

As in a trance the girl rose, her hand upon her breast, wide eyes staring horror stricken into the snarling face of the beast scarce ten feet from her. At her feet lay the prostrate form of the negress.

The girl, standing pale and rigid against the farther wall, sought with increasing terror for some loophole of escape. Suddenly her hand, tight pressed against her bosom, felt the hard outlines of the revolver that Clayton had left with her earlier in the day.

Quickly she snatched it from its hiding place and, leveling it full at the tiger's face, pulled the trigger.

There was a flash of flame, the roar of the discharge and an answering roar of pain and anger from the beast.

Jane Porter saw the great form disappear from the window, and then she, too, fainted.

But the tiger was not killed. The bullet had but inflicted a painful wound in one of the great shoulders. In another instant he was back at the lattice and with renewed fury was clawing at the aperture, but with lessened effect, since the wounded member was almost useless.

He saw his prey—two women—lying senseless upon the floor. There was no longer any resistance to be overcome. Sabor had only to worm his way through the lattice to claim it.

Slowly he forced his great bulk, inch by inch, through the opening. Now his head was through, now one great fore leg and shoulder.

Carefully he drew up the wounded member to insinuate it gently beyond the tight pressing bars.

A moment more and both shoulders through, the long, sinuous body and the narrow hips would glide quickly after.

It was on this sight that Jane Porter again opened her eyes.

* * * * * * *

When Clayton heard the report of the firearm he fell into an agony of fear and apprehension. What were the thoughts of his strange captor or guide Clayton could only vaguely conjecture, but that he had heard the shot and was in some manner affected by it was quite evident, for he quickened his pace so appreciably that Clayton, stumbling blindly in his wake, went down.

For a moment Tarzan looked at the young man closely, as though undecided as to just what was best to do; then, stooping before Clayton, he motioned him to grasp him about the neck, and with the white man upon his back Tarzan took to the trees.

The next few minutes were such as the young Englishman never forgot. High into bending and swaying branches he was borne with what seemed to him incredible swiftness, while Tarzan chafed at the slowness of his progress.

From the first sensation of chilling fear Clayton passed to one of admiration and envy of those giant muscles and that wondrous instinct or knowledge which guided this forest god through the inky blackness of the night.

Presently they came to the clearing before the beach. Tarzan's quick ears had heard the strange sounds of Sabor's efforts to force his way through the lattice, and it seemed to Clayton that they dropped a straight hundred feet to earth so quickly did Tarzan descend. Yet when they struck the ground it was with scarce a jar, and as Clayton released his hold on the ape man he saw him dart like a squirrel for the opposite side of the cabin.

The Englishman sprang quickly after him just in time to see the hind quarters of some huge animal about to disappear within the cabin.

As Jane Porter opened her eyes to a realization of the again imminent peril which threatened her her brave heart gave up its final vestige of hope, and she turned to grope for the fallen weapon that she might mete to herself a merciful death before the cruel fangs tore at her flesh.

The tiger was almost through the window before she found the weapon, and she raised it quickly to her temple to shut out forever the hideous jaws gaping for their prey.

An instant she hesitated to breathe a short and silent prayer to her Maker, and as she did so her eyes fell upon the poor Esmeralda lying inert, but alive, beside the cupboard.

MELANCHOLY WOMEN

Should Profit by Mrs. Hurley's Experience—Her Own Story Here Told.

Eldon, Mo.—"I was troubled with displacement, organic inflammation and female weakness. For two years I could not stand on my feet long at a time and I could not walk two blocks without enduring cutting and drawing pains down my right side which increased once a month. I have been at that time purple in the face and would walk the floor. I could not lie down or sit still sometimes for a day and a night at a time. I was nervous, had very little appetite, no ambition, melancholy, and often felt as though I had not a friend in the world.

"After I had tried most every female remedy first, without success, my mother-in-law advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and gained in strength every day. I have now no trouble in any way and highly praise your medicine. It advertises itself."—Mrs. S. T. HURLEY, Eldon, Missouri.

Remember, the remedy which did this was Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. For sale everywhere.

It has helped thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means have failed. Why don't you try it?

ONLY FIVE DAYS MORE OF GRAND EXTRA VOTE CHANCES

GREAT VOTE GIVES YOU AN OPPORTUNITY TO WIN THE GRAND PRIZE

HOW MANY SUBSCRIPTIONS CAN YOU GET

You Should Get Every One Possible, for This is the Last Great Chance to Get so Many Votes for the Same Work

Next Wednesday night at 8 o'clock is the last day of the Great Club Offer. Candidates and their friends have but five days left in which to work on this great offer. As this is positively the last large vote offer that will be made during the contest, it behooves all candidates to secure every possible subscription between now and Wednesday, March 11th.

Test Your Mettle.

Contestants and their friends should strain every effort to make their vote records grow as large as possible. Just a few more votes when resource is exhausted may be the turning point in making you or your favorite contestant a winner of a prize worth hundreds of dollars.

The great value of the prizes and the honor and public records for attaining success are important factors now being held worthy ofconsideration. Just five more days from tomorrow in which to work for the prizes, andprizes, and the destiny of the world has sometimes been changed within an hour. Empires have been made and unmade in a single fateful hour, and so the result of this contest is likely to be decided by what is accomplished in the next five days. The valuable prizes are hanging in the air waiting to be plucked by those who have the energy and determination to win them.

Only those who run a race to the very end can hope to win a prize. The race is not to the swift nor the battle to the strong, but it is won by the stayer. The tortoise, you know, beat the hare because it kept going. It rested neither night nor day until the goal was reached. Victory is not for the spurter, but for the stayer, so The Review prizes are for the ladies and gentlemen who run the race to the very end . We are all of us nearing the home stretch, the place that tries the mettle of anyone who enters any contest of any kind. The remaining time will test the mettle of the young ladies or gentlemen who are anxious to win a prize.

A Great Chance to Win.

THIS IS THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO WIN ONE OF THE FINE PRIZES, and the candidates who would not despair themselves for a crown will be lost when it comes to winning one of the grand prizes at the close of the contest. If you are going to get busy and win,here's your chance. Read over the terms of this great offer.

Send for Subscription Blanks.

If you have not already received subscription blanks, send for them at once. All questions will be promptly answered by addressing the contest department of The Review.

Nothing Helped Her Until She Tried "Fruit-a-tives"

CAMPBELLVILLE, ONT., May 5th, 1913.

"I cannot speak too highly of "Fruit-a-tives". For over thirty years, I have suffered from Chronic Neuralgia and Constipation, experiencing untold agony. The Neuralgia settled in my lungs and I took bottle after bottle of medicine without relief. I would not have my present health if it was not for "Fruit-a-tives" and I am glad of the opportunity of giving you this letter about such a splendid remedy as "Fruit-a-tives", for the guidance of other women who may be similarly affected"

MRS. NATHAN DUNN.

NOT GOOD AFTER MAR. 11.

Twenty years ago on the First of March next, a well-known resident of this city took out at age 28 a 10 pay 20 year endowment policy for $1,000, No. 43860, in the Sun Life of Canada.

The premium he paid on the participating plan was	$69.30
The premium he paid on the non-par plan was ..	62.25
Extra paid for profits for 10 years ..	$7.05

He received in cash at the end of 20 years, $1,279.25, that is, the $70.50 extra that he paid for profits yielded him $279.25, almost 400 per cent.

Would you not like something like that?

Or, he could draw out $736.45 in cash, which is $43.45 more than all he paid in, and receive a fully paid-up participating policy for life.

You can never obtain such results as these on the non-participating plan unless you die and die early, so that the price will not become too high.

For particulars in your case call or 'phone the Sun Life office, Crown Chambers Building.

NEWS NOTES FROM OMEMEE

OMEMEE, March 4.—The Adult Bible Class of the Presbyterian Sabbath School has planned for an entertainment for Easter Monday.

Mrs. Luxon, of Toronto, was the guest of Mrs. Harry Lamb during the time of the Winter Carnival at Lindsay.

Miss N. Thurston was a visitor to Lindsay on Friday.

The Public School entertainment on Friday evening, in Coronation Hall, was not a heavy drawing card but those who attended got good value for their money, in the lecture, illustrated songs and splendidly clean pictures under the direction of Mr. James Stubbs, of Peterboro. New Ontario and the Passion pictures were decidedly interesting. After deducting expenses, there will not be a large sum to be placed in the prize fund of the Public School.

The annual meeting of the Public Library Board was held on Wednesday evening in the Reading Room. With Rev. H. Earle voted to the chair, the minutes of last meeting were read and approved. Treasurer W. H. Curry presented the financial report which was adopted. The election of officers followed with the following result :

Chairman, Mr. A. C. Hodgetts.
Secretary, T. W. McLean.
Treasurer, Mr. W. H. Curry.

Members of the Board : Rev. H. Earle, A. C. Hodgetts, T. W. McLean, Dr. Earle, Robt. Grandy, John Williamson, H. Lamb, A. Scott, Rev. J. F. Chapman, Mrs. White, Mrs. McLean, Mrs. (Dr.) Earle, Miss E. Curry, Miss A. Stephenson, Mrs. Clark, Mrs. Hodgetts, Mrs. O. G. Williamson and Mrs. J. F. Chapman. A resolution of condolence was passed and the secretary instructed to send a copy of it to the wife and family of our late chairman, Mr. T. C. Stephenson, who was an enthusiastic supporter.

On Wednesday morning fire was discovered in the new armouries on George St. South about 6 o'clock. The fire alarm was sounded and the volunteer brigade mustered in short order, the hand engine was on the scene and manned but because of the fire being entirely within and because there was a large number of rounds of ammunition stored in the building the reports of the explosion which were soon heard, the firefighters were powerless to prevent the demolition of the fine Government building, the pride of the town. The brigade, however, stood ready to prevent the spread of the conflagation which, happily, was confined to the one structure. Three months ago it was opened by the Minister of Militia with much pomp, to-day it is a confused and unshapely mass of brickbats and burnt timbers. The Armoury had been used by the cadet instructor the previous evening and Captain Thorn had locked the building about 10 o'clock. The report that a dance had been on is a mistake, and has caused much indignation among the citizens. The Department of Militia inaugurated an investigation at which the evidence that was submitted was taken to Kingston where a verdict may possibly be arrived at. That the fire was caused by an over-heated furnace is the cause most popularly accepted. The Armoury and land cost about $13,000. More land had been purchased for a rifle range, the tender for the building of which had or was just about to be accepted. There was no insurance. Whether it will be rebuilt or not is debatable ; the standing brick walls which are a menace, have been ordered to be pulled down. The loss of the Armoury is a civic shock.

The Rev. Mr. Black preached in the Presbyterian Church, morning and evening of last Sabbath and at Mount Pleasant in the afternoon.

The sale of magazines and papers by the Public Library Board was held at 8 o'clock, on Saturday evening, in the Library. For the information of those who do not know what this sale means, a word of explanation may not be amiss. The Board buys about $50 worth of magazines and papers per year—daily, weekly and monthly. Each of these is put up by auction and the highest bidder, may have, for his own use, for the year the daily paper, if he buys it, at the close of the day it is dated for—the weekly paper or magazine at the end of the week it is dated for, the monthly magazine at the end of the month it is dated for and so on. This sale is held every year in February and many bargains are handed out to lovers of good literature. Everybody come and enjoy our Reading Room, it is free, become a borrower of books also for the sum of 50 cents a year.

Mr. H. B. Spotton, Inspector, made an official visit to our High School on Friday.

His Honor, Judge McMillan, of Lindsay, held Division Court here, on Monday.

Our daily papers from Toronto arrived on Monday about 4.30 p.m. instead of 11.07 a.m. The wind was certainly strong and blew 24 degrees of frost into every orifice.

Mr. George Cummings, of Mount Pleasant was in town on Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Tully, of Fowler's Corners, were guests of her grandmother, Mrs. A. Fier, of Sturgeon St.

Master Willie Glenney is home on a visit.

Major Fee, of Lindsay, was home over the week end.

HOT CONTEST EXPECTED.

Nationalists Will Fight Hard To Get F. D. Monk's Seat.

MONTREAL, March 5. — The bye-election in Jacques Cartier to elect a successor to Hon. Mr. Monk will probably be bitterly fought between the Government and the Nationalists. Mr. Monk was allied with the Nationalists, and his influence will still be felt on polling day.

Henri Bourassa is being urged to run in opposition to the Government candidate, but Armand Lavergne, the Nationalist lieutenant, who not long ago announced his intention of quitting the Legislature for Federal politics, may consider the present time opportune to make a change.

L. T. Marechal, K.C., who has frequently been spoken of as likely to enter the Dominion Cabinet, will, it is expected, be the Conservative candidate. Whether the Liberals will also enter the race or leave the Conservatives and Nationalists to fight it out remains to be seen.

Bread or chops may be successfully cooked in a corn popper over a furnace fire or even over a grate fire.

SIAMESE TWINS ARE SEPARATED

PARIS, March 5.—The delicate operation of separating the Siamese twins, Madeleine-Suzanne, who had been born united, was performed here yesterday.

No such operation had taken place in France since Dr. Douen, in 1902, separated the two Hindu children, Radica-Roodica, who died of tuberculosis after the operation.

The twins operated on yesterday were born Nov. 28, 1913. At birth they weighed ten pounds. Both children appeared perfectly healthy and when not sleeping were extremely lively.

Fielding to Edit Financial Paper?

MONTREAL, March 5.—Montreal is to have a new daily paper if rumor is to be believed. It is stated on good authority that the new venture will be of a financial nature, and that Hon. W. S. Fielding is to be the editor-in-chief. Jack Ross is said to be one of those interested. The capital is set at $300,000, and it is added that the paper will be published in the offices of The Industrial and Educational Press.

No Infantry at Barriefield.

KINGSTON, March 5.—It has practically been decided there will be no infantry camp at Barriefield this year. Three rural brigades will go to Petawawa in June instead of Kingston. Companies of city corps will constitute a composite brigade which will train there the last five days of camp.

X-RAY PIONEER DIES.

Harry Green Is Another Victim of Dangerous Tubes.

HARTFORD, Conn., March 5.—Harry Green, pioneer manufacturer of X-ray tubes, died at his home here yesterday of carcinoma of the liver, induced by X-ray poisoning. He was born in England 54 years ago. He developed the first focussing tubes to be successfully operated, and gave many public demonstrations, later beginning the manufacture of tubes on a commercial basis.

John L. Bauer, a glass blower, who aided him in the development of the tubes, died from the same disease in 1906. Mr. Green's health became affected the year previous.

TWO FLED FROM JAIL.

Highway Robber and Check-Forger Escape at Chatham.

CHATHAM, March 5. — David Grant, who last week was sentenced to seven years in Kingston for highway robbery, and Henry Dart, alias George Grant, sentenced to two years less two days in the Central for issuing bad checks, escaped from the county jail here early yesterday. Geo. Grant is wanted in Toronto for a bad check deal. The men are not related. Searchers shortly before noon had traced the men to a Pere Marquette freight train going south.

Dart and Grant secured a ladder and climbed over the 16-foot wall. Persons on the outside were evidently connected with the plot, as the men went directly to Terry's icehouse, where Dart changed his clothes to a suit of civilian clothes, which apparently were left there.

TEMPORARY EXCLUSION

For Irish Counties From Home Rule, if They Vote

ASQUITH'S TERMS

LONDON, March 5.—A. P. Nicholson of The Daily News, in his political notes this morning, says that the Cabinet decided yesterday what should be the Home Rule compromise to be put before the Commons on Monday.

Briefly, the Prime Minister's suggestion, says Nicholson, will be that any county in Ireland which makes demand, after the passage of the Home Rule Act, but before the Irish Parliament is summoned, shall have the right to take a vote of the electorate within the county. If the majority favors exclusion from the act that county shall be excluded for a term of years, probably three. The proposal, it will be seen, is not confined to Ulster, but is general in its application. The scheme for some administrative autonomy, known as "home rule within home rule," the variation of the postal arrangements, or of the customs, the suggested increase in Ulster representation in either House of the Irish Parliament; all these ideas, which have been widely discussed during the winter, have gone definitely by the board, according to the writer.

The Daily Chronicle, which enjoys in a large measure the confidence of the Liberal Government, declares to-day that despite assertions to the contrary the Government has no intention of dissolving during the present year, and that the Ministers anticipate finishing out their full five-year term.

The Government, according to the paper, will introduce to-day (Thursday) for their first readings during the present session the Irish Home Rule bill, the Welsh Disestablishment and the Plural Voting bills, and expects to carry all three of them before the expiration of the present term of office.

BOY RECEIVES SENTENCE OF TWENTY YEARS

Fifteen-year-old Lad Slew Seven Persons with Axe.

NANTES, France, March 5.—Marcel Redureau, the 15-year-old lad who last September killed seven persons with an axe at Basbriage-en-Landreau, was found guilty of the charge against him, and sentenced to twenty years in prison. The sentence is the maximum allowed by law. The trial of Redureau began Tuesday.

In summing up for the defence, the boy's lawyer declared that at the time of the commission of the murders, the lad was laboring under excessive nervous fatigue, due to hard work. When asked if he had anything to add to the words of his lawyer, Redureau rose with lowered head, and wept, but said nothing.

CANADIAN LEAGUE

Kelly, the player who was claimed by the Peterboro and London clubs, and was awarded to the Peterboro club by the National Board of Arbitration is a catcher. His home is in Erie. It is said he was recommended to the London club by Louie Bierbane, and that he signed with Manager Reisling before deciding to cast his lot with Curly Blount.

Manager Smith, of the Erie club, is endeavoring to land Gygli, Schang, Jenkins and Dawson, who were with the Erie team last season, but were transferred to St. Jo. in the Western League. Schang is a brother of Wally Schang, the star catcher of the Philadelphia Athletics.

Billy Wright, right gardener for Guelph last season, will be with Erie, to which club he was turned over by the Buffalo club.

The Ottawa club is making herculean efforts to purchase Pitcher Bob Strain, the big six-footer, who won 18 and lost 9 games for Richmond in the Virginia League last season. Only 64 runs were scored off Strain in 33 games, and his strike-out record shows that he has both speed and stuff.

Former Canadian leaguer is now down south with the big league clubs are: Fred Herbert (Ottawa), with Brooklyn; Jimmy McAvoy (Berlin), with the Athletics; Ray Keating (Hamilton), with New York Amerecans; Dunlop (London), with Cleveland.

METHODISTS WON FIRST SEMI-FINAL

At the finish of the semi-finals in the Junior Church League, played at Brock St. rink Tuesday night, Knox defeated Charlotte St. by 3-1. The half time score was 1-0 in favor of Knox.

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

It takes a lot of money to make some people rich and still more to make others poor.

Lines to the Cook.

Oh, say not so! Oh, say not so!
Wound not a weary heart!
Do not regard us as your foe
And say that we must part.
Oh, modify that angry look
While we express regret.
You are a most accomplished cook,
And cooks are hard to get.

Oh, speak not thus! Oh, speak not thus!
Pray set that suit case down!
If you'll consent to cook for us
No one shall chide nor frown.
Our casual comments we shall quit.
No fault we'll find with you,
For as a cook you are a hit,
And cooks are very few.

A GREAT CANADIAN POET.

Dr. William Wilfred Campbell Is Called the Poet of the Lakes.

Dr. William Wilfred Campbell, the Canadian poet and novelist, whose recent book of verse has been well received by critics and the reading public generally, comes of famous literary stock. He is of Scottish and English descent, being on his father's side of a cadet branch of the House of Argyll, descended from the first Lord Campbell, and also of the same stock as the poet, Thomas Campbell, and as Fielding, the British novelist, says Chesterfield in The Family Herald. His father, the Rev. Thomas Swanston Campbell, was a Church of England clergyman, and his mother, Mathilda Frances Campbell, was a daughter of the late Major Francis Wright, of the Royal Horse Guards. Dr. Campbell is 52 years of age, and was born at Berlin, Ont., and was destined for the church. In fact, he was for six years an ordained clergyman. When ordained he took up parish work in New England, but three years later returned to Canada, and was for a time rector of St. Stephen, N.B., retiring from the ministry on account of his health, in 1891. Dr. Campbell married Mary Louise, only child of the late Dr. David Dibble, Woodstock, Ont., and Louise Mackenzie Macdonald, senior representative of the ancient Barons Mackay, of Strathy and Deriot, North Britain, and 10th in descent through her maternal grandfather, and 11th through her maternal grandmother from Robert Stuart, Earl of Orkney, son of James the V. of Scotland; also through the same 9th and 10th from Lady Jane Gordon, eldest daughter of the 17th Earl of Sutherland.

Mention has been made of Dr. Campbell's relationship to the Duke of Argyll. As a matter of fact, not only are the poet and the duke near relations; they are intimate friends, and both keenly interested in each other's literary work. Upon Dr. Campbell's last visit to Europe, he made a long stay as a guest of his distinguished kinsman. For many years Dr. Campbell has been a member of the Civil Service, at Ottawa, and is attached to the Dominion Archives Bureau, under Dr. Doughty. He is known to all Canadians as a writer of English verse, and has been called "The Poet of the Lakes." His poem, "The Mother," has been placed by the Chicago Inter-Ocean among the gems of English literature. It has also been pronounced to be the nearest approach to a great poem which has appeared for many a long day, and was referred to in the Canadian House of Commons in terms of commendation by Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Dr. Campbell has also written much Imperial verse, and of late has written considerable fiction. He is a fellow of the Royal Society of Canada, and is a past vice-president of the English section, and past president. He is now secretary of the society. He was a member of the Literary Committee, appointed in connection with the Quebec Tercentenary celebration, and is a councillor of the Canadian Landmarks Association. He was a delegate from the Royal Society to attend the quarter centenary of Aberdeen University, in 1906, and was presented to the late King Edward. He received the honorary degree of LL.D. from Aberdeen upon this occasion. Among Dr. Campbell's best known writings are "Lake Lyrics," "The Dread Voyage," "Mordred and Hildebrand Tragedies," "Political Tragedies," "Beyond the Hills of Dream"; poems, "Collected Verse, Sagas of Vaster Britain," "Ian of the Orcades," "Canada" (incollaboration with T. R. Martin, R.C.A.), descriptive of the Dominion; "A Beautiful Rebel," historical novel; "The Canadian Lake Region."

Dr. Campbell lectured before the Imperial Club, London, Eng., on "The Practical Side of Imperialism," in 1904, and was present at the coronation of Their Majesties, in 1911.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

THE CHOICEST SPOT.

By being busy with his work
Man misses lots of things
That to his gentle better half
Much solid comfort brings.
He cannot waste a single hour
In rushing toward old age,
And so he doesn't take the time
To read the women's page.

And that is why he doesn't know
The latest style in hair,
And what is new in winter hats
Or what a child should wear,
And how a party or a tea
Should be pulled off, and not Take all the money in the world
To boil one dainty pot.

He doesn't know what Paris has
To offer to the trade
Or what is proper for the house
Or what for a parade.
He thinks a hat is just a hat,
A gown is just a gown.
He knows not should the waist be high
Or moved three inches down.

He doesn't know the newest way
A salad should be mixed,
And it is not within his ken
How tables should be fixed.
He knows it has no sporting news
When baseball is the rage
And misses half the joy because
He skips the women's page.

Richest Church Site.

Another very interesting London building which is threatened with demolition is the church of St. Margaret's, Lothbury, situated at the back of the Bank of England. The land on which St. Margaret's stands is worth several pounds a square foot, being the richest church site in London. The original St. Margaret's was erected in the reign of Edward II. It was destroyed in the Great Fire, and rebuilt by Wren.

Butchers.

Choice butchers sold at $7.70 to $8; good, $7.40 to $7.60; medium, $7 to $7.25; common, $6.50 to $6.75; choice cows, $6.75 to $7; good cows, $6.50 to $6.75; medium cows, $5.50 to $6; common cows, $5 to $5.50; canners and cutters, $3.75 to $4.50; bulls, choice, $7 to $7.50; good bulls, $6.50 to $7; medium, $6 to $6.50.

Veal Calves.

Receipts of calves were again light and prices ruled firm. Choice veal calves, $10 to $11; good, $9 to $10; medium, $7.50 to $8.50; common calves, $5.00 to $7.

The sheep and lamb market was firm. Sheep, light ewes, sold at $6.50 to $7; heavy ewes, $5.75 to $6.25; rams, $5.25 to $6.25; heavy lambs, $8 to $8.75; choice lambs, $9 to $9.75.

Hogs.

Selects, fed and watered, sold at $9.25 to $9.50.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, March 4.—There was no further change in the condition of the market for cattle, prices being steady at the decline noted on Monday because of the smaller offerings. The demand from both packers and butchers was limited because of the Lenten season and the fact that they provided for their wants for the week fairly well on Monday, therefore trade was rather slow and some were left over for next week. A few choice steers sold at $8.25 to $8.50, good at $7.75 to $8, fair at $6.75 to $7.25 and the commoner grades at from $4.75 to $6 per 100 pounds. Cows brought from $4.50 to $7 and bulls from $5 to $7.50 per 100 pounds. There is a steady demand for milch cows, of which offerings are small and prices in consequence remain very firm, with sales of choice milkers at $100 to $110, good at $80 to $90 and medium at $70 to $75 each.

In spite of the advance of 25c per 100 pounds in the Toronto market yesterday for live hogs, there was a more pronounced weakness in the local market today, and prices declined a further 15c to 25c per 100 pounds because of the more liberal supplies coming forward.

The demand for calves was fair at prices ranging from $3 to $12 each as to size and quality.

Truss Torture
Once Thought Necessary, but Now Your Search for Relief Is Ended.
Wonderful Method Retains Rupture Without Knife, Danger or Pain.
J. Y. EGAN, Specialist of Toronto

Old-fashioned truss torture is no longer necessary. Galling, slipping trusses and barbarous methods of treating rupture are done away with by the wonderful invention of a specialist who has devoted fifty years to this one affliction. The marvelous new EGAN "CURATIVE" gives to the ruptured instant relief, rest and security where all others fail. It stops all irritation and restores every part to its natural position as soon as it is used and for all time and old style trusses are thrown away.

Premier Irish Baron.

It is quite within the nature of things that the premier baron of Ireland, who is Lord Kinsale, and who has the right to don his headgear in the presence of his sovereign, does not possess a single acre in the distressful country. Still he is in a position to boast that his peerage has been in existence nearly seven hundred years, so he can afford to turn up his nose at those who have recently acquired the strawberry leaves.

Lord Kinsale is one of the ten peers who have solemnly sworn that they will never accept seats in the Irish Legislature. The swearing is decidedly premature, for the noble baron has not received an offer, but Irishmen have a penchant for being before or behind the clock. An ancient deed declares that Lord Kinsale's family relinquished their rights in Ireland to Henry III., so Mr. John Redmond has no finger in this pie.

LONDON'S GREAT SEAL.

Historic Implement Will Be Placed in British Museum.

The mayoral seal of the Empire's capital — old London — which has been in use since 1381, has been replaced, and is to be exhibited in the British Museum.

When seals go out of use it is customary to cut a thick grove across the face of them so that further use may be absolutely prevented, but in this case the aldermen were so much alive to the historic value of the seal that they would not allow it to be actually defaced.

In order to remove the seal from use, however, it was ceremonially tapped with a small hammer—of course, without any injury to the markings—and from that moment the new seal took its official place.

The reason why the seal has been withdrawn from use and a duplicate supplied is that it may be preserved from further wear. It was discovered a short time ago that the seal contains, as the lower part of its design, the earliest known representation of the City Arms — the Cross of St. George with the Sword of St. Paul. The discovery was recognised to be of particular importance in view of the fact that Sir William Walworth, mayor of London in 1381, killed Wat Tyler with a dagger in Smithfields.

Now there is still current a legend that the "dagger" was added to the City arms to commemorate this event. However, the mayoral seal can be proved to have been made certainly two months, probably six months before the death of Wat Tyler.

But, besides the fact that the seal disproves this legend, it was recognised that the earliest record of the City arms ought to be preserved without fear of the further defacing due to constant use. The inscription round the seal is already practically obliterated, no full letters remain, and if the seal were not withdrawn from use the incisions would undoubtedly lose their clearness in time.

There are other very interesting circumstances connected with the seal. The preservation up to the present date is in itself extraordinary for the reason that it bears the images of St. Thomas a Becket and St. Paul, and Henry VIII. ordered the destruction of St. Thomas a Becket's images and pictures throughout the whole realm.

When this order went forth, the reverse of the common seal of the City of London—which also bore the inscription: "Cease not, Thomas, to guard me who brought thee forth," referring to St. Thomas' birth in the city—was destroyed. How, then, did the mayoral seal escape? It presumably escaped destruction owing to an error in the official records relating to the seal, in which St. Thomas a Becket was called throughout St. Peter.

There is little doubt that Henry VIII.'s officers would have destroyed this seal but for this lucky error. The figure called St. Peter on the seal is undoubtedly St. Thomas a Becket since he wears the mitre.

The seal is a piece of very beautiful, deeply cut, Gothic work in silver, mounted on an iron boss, which was attached to the sealing press when documents were sealed.

The new seal is a precise duplicate except that two small Tudor roses have been put underneath the portion containing the City Arms, to distinguish it from the disused seal. In 1381 the officials of the city reported that the old mayoral seal was "too small and rude and ancient, and unbecoming and derogatory from the honor of the City," and recommended that "the new seal of honorable aspect and work of art which the mayor has had made" should be substituted for it. The substitution was made, and after 581 years the seal still shows its admirable workmanship.

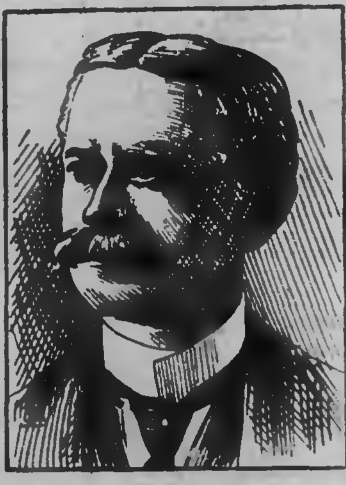
AID FOR THE RURAL SCHOOLS

DR. S. B. SINCLAIR WILL STUDY CONDITIONS IN ONTARIO.

Head of School for Teachers at Macdonald College Is an Expert on Education and Has Taken High Honors In His Specialty — Is Author of Three Well-Known Works for School Teachers.

Dr. S. B. Sinclair, who is relieved from the headship of the school for teachers of Macdonald College to spend a year in investigating problems relating to rural schools is one of Canada's leading educationists. He holds a B. A. degree from Victoria with first-class honors in mathematics and gold medal standing in mental and moral philosophy, an M. A. degree from Toronto University and a Ph.D. degree cum laude from Chicago University, in 1901, his major subject being education. At Chicago he obtained the highest fellowship of $520 and was supervisor of mathematics in the university elementary school. He has made an extended observation and study of schools in Europe and is the author of three well-known works: First Year at School, The Possibility of a Science of Education and Introductory Educational Psychology.

Dr. Sinclair has had wide experience in the teaching profession, having been mathematical master of Ridgetown Collegiate Institute, principal of Hamilton Central School and Hamilton Teachers' Training School and for fourteen years was vice-principal of the Provincial Normal School at Ottawa, where he had charge of the departments of education, mathematics and natural science.



DR. S. B. SINCLAIR.

He is past president of the Ottawa Education Association and vice-president of the Quebec Protestant Teachers' Association. He is a member of the Central Board of Examiners and ex-officio a member of the Teachers 'Training Committee and corporation of McGill University.

Dr. Sinclair is not retiring from work, but is taking a year for research that he may be better qualified to teach the subjects in which he is most interested, which is the rural school work. He has spent a number of years on his own farm and took a post-graduate course in forestry at Toronto. He is the author of the lecture on forestry in the Bickmore series of McGill University. During the four years he has been at Macdonald College he has not only increased the attendance, but has stirred up great enthusiasm among the students. His attitude towards the other schools at Macdonald has always been sympathetic and his influence has tended to maintain a feeling of good will and co-operation among all the schools since he has been appointed dean.

The subject of rural education is recognized by public men to be one of the most essential in the development of the Dominion. The rural school is the key to the farm situation. In the country school principles of agriculture may be taught which will result in country boys attaining a love for and a skill in farming operations that will result in their own usefulness to the country and in profit to themselves.

Politics a Disease.

Mr. Will Crooks, M.P., relates some of his experiences during his recent tour of Australia and South Africa.

"Not the least remarkable thing," he says, "was that at every port or railway station at which we stopped somebody recognised me. The climax was reached at Pretoria. I visited the Central Convict Prison, when one of the prisoners looked up and, 'How do you do, Mr. Crooks?'

"The palm is taken by a story I heard in Tasmania. A local politician was traveling on a country road, and an old farmer gave him a lift.

"'And what are you in business?' the farmer asked.

"'Me! I'm a professional man!'

"'What profession?'

"'I'm a politician.'

"'Politician!' scornfully replied the farmer. 'That's not a profession. It's a disease!'

"It shows what they think of us out there."

Women Were Brewers.

The brewing trade in England was formerly almost wholly in the hands of women. Until the close of the eighteen century the preparation of ale for the household was reckoned among the duties of the mistress and her maids. The same custom prevailed in the brewing of ale for sale, and the "brewsters" or "alewives" long held a great part of the trade, both in town and country. Philologists will remember the termination that was feminine—the "spinster," the "sempster" and the "brewster."—London Chronicle.

OBITUARY

MISS KATE DORIS.

Miss Kate Doris, daughter of Mr. Edward Doris of Keene, passed away at her home at eight o'clock Wednesday morning after a prolonged illness. She is survived by her father, two brothers, Richard and John, all at home, and three sisters, Mary at home, and two others in Rochester.

The funeral will take place on Friday morning at nine o'clock from the late residence to St. John's Church, Keene, and St. Peter's Cemetery.

WM. H. LANGFORD.

There passed away at his residence at Mount Julian on the evening of Feb. 19th William Henry Langford, an old and respected resident of the Township of Burleigh, who for many years was a member of the Municipal Council of the united townships of Burleigh Chandos Anstruther. He was born in Bath near Kingston on July the 13th in 1843. He was 72 years old. His youthful days were spent at Norham in the township of Percy. In 1870 he married Emma Jane Church and settled on lot 6, concession 4 in the township of Burleigh where his wife died in 1889. He was later married to Martha Megahy, who with one son, William, one brother, Robert, of Sask., and one sister, Mrs. A. H. Smith, of Norham, are left to mourn his loss. The remains were taken to Norham for interment.

BISHOPS TO RUN THEATRES

The modern drama probably had its origin in the miracle plays, anciently played in churches. Mr. Albert Chevalier, the famous London comedian is now out with a proposition that the church should once again take theatricals under her wing.

"Let the Bishops of London and Kensington," advises Mr. Chevalier, "and others interested in the keeping of public entertainments up to the standard of their views, let them run a theatre and a music hall, engage a manager of experience, insist that their views concerning what is decent and what is indecent shall be observed, allow nothing to be staged of which they do not approve—make all this known to their followers, then give a good show, and it would not surprise me to find in a very short time that the bishops were in possession of two of the most paying concerns in the city of London.

"In making this suggestion I take it that each of the bishops has a sense of humor. Without it neither should enter into the entertainment world."

A Translator's Error.

"The Germans don't know everything; they don't always know how to translate English and Scotch words," said Sir Frederick Bridge in an address at the London Institution on "The Beggar's Opera."

The song for "Polly" was set to a delightful old Scotch tune, "Gin (if) thou were mine awn thing," and the translator not knowing the meaning of "gin" looked up the word in the dictionary and translated it "schnapps!"

Portraits of Dogs.

Talking about women and dogs, it might be mentioned that the latest craze of wealthy women who are dog-fanciers is to have the portraits of their pets painted in oils. It is not going too far to say that there is a colony of artists, with headquarters in London, who spend the greater part of their time in fulfilling commissions at shows in all parts of the country.

POULTRY ASSOCIATIONS MAY MEET IN THIS CITY

To Decide on Schedule of Dates for Shows East of Toronto

A GOOD MEETING

Although it is only two months ago that the Peterborough Poultry Association held the annual poultry show, active steps are being taken to insure a bigger and better show for 1915.

At a well attended meeting of officers and members last night, a committee was appointed to deal with the advisability of holding an excursion in the early summer, down the river or to the lakes.

It will be necessary to provide more coops for the next show and the members thought by holding an excursion and providing a programme of sports, they would receive considerable financial assistance.

JUDGES APPOINTED.

Applications from judges were received. On the vote the applications of Joseph Bennett, Toronto, and Joseph Minshall, Brantford, were accepted.

The secretary of the association at Napanee suggested that associations east of Toronto hold a meeting and decide on a schedule of dates so that dates of exhibitions would not conflict as has been the case in the past. This suggestion was supported and the secretary was instructed to answer the communication and recommend that the meeting be held in Peterboro, this city being a convenient centre for all associations.

This year local members will endeavor to breed those birds which have not ben exhibited by local breeders, and as a result, outside exhibitors have swept the boards. This will give Peterboro representation in every class on the prize list.

At the next meeting five varieties of Wyandottes will be exhibited, with Messrs. Baptie and Lush acting as judges. The awards will be in the form of ribbons.

The members of the association are enthusiastic and wide-awake to every opportunity to promote the welfare of the association, and they are confident of meeting with continued success.

LIBRARY BOARD HELD MEETING

The regular monthly meeting of the Peterborough Public Library Board was held in the Library last night.

There were present Messrs. H. Ritchie, chairman, E. H. D. Hall, F. Sollitt, Dr. McNulty and H. R. H. Kenner.

The report of the Library Committee advising that about $100 of books had been purchased and that the reserving of books be discontinued, was received and adopted.

The report of the Finance Committee, recommending the payment of a number of accounts was adopted.

A PUBLIC MEETING

Two Members of Cabinet and Mr. J. H. Burnham to Speak

IN OPERA HOUSE

The executive of the Liberal Conservative Association met last night and appointed a committee to arrange for a public meeting at the Grand Opera House.

The meeting will be held this month on a date yet to be arranged. The speakers will be Hon. R. Rogers, Hon. Arthur Meighen and Mr. J. H. Burnham.

A complimentary dinner will also be tendered the visitors.

HOME RE-UNION

The first annual meeting of the local branch of the Imperial Home Re-Union Association will be held in the Bank of Montreal Chambers this evening, at 8 o'clock.

THAWED OUT DYNAMITE.

Russian Laborer Had Narrow Escape From Death.

SUDBURY, March 6.—In attempting to thaw out a pail of ice containing dynamite, Nicholas Sobofsky, a Russian laborer, was nearly blown to pieces. He was brought to St. Joseph's Hospital, where he was attended by Dr. Dixon, and is expected to recover.

The victim was employed on the construction of a five-mile spur from the C.P.R. main line into the Big Levack mine, which is to be opened up this spring by the Mond Nickel Co. He placed the pail on a fire. It exploded, bruising and tearing the flesh from the legs and arms and cutting the face. A large piece of tin buried itself in the right leg near the ankle. Other injuries more or less severe were sustained.

WIFE MURDERER IS CONVICTED

CHICAGO, March 6.—William C. Ellis was yesterday found guilty of murdering his wife, Mrs. Eleanor Hosea Ellis, last October in a Chicago hotel. Punishment was fixed at imprisonment in the state penitentiary for 15 years.

The jury reached a decision after deliberating three and one-half hours.

The defence of transitory insanity, set up by Ellis, apparently was disregarded by the jurors. Ellis claimed that he had been driven to mania by the knowledge that his wife had been lost to him and her infatuation with a young Brantford dry goods merchant the Ellises met during a vacation at Georgian Bay.

SERVICE FOR LOST SAILORS

PLYMOUTH, March 6.—With impressive ceremony a funeral service was read yesterday for the 11 men who perished with the lost submarine A7, hope of recovering which has been abandoned by the Admiralty.

While the burial rites of the Anglican Church were read aboard the spot in Plymouth Sound where the A7 is supposed to be buried in the sand, a duplicate service was read in the royal navy barracks at Keyham.

BUFFETED BY TRAINS.

London Man Meets Terrible Death While Walking on Track.

TORONTO, March 6.—Struck by one train and tossed in front of another, Frank Hilbert, 164 Anne street, London, Ont., was almost instantly killed while walking along the C. P. R. tracks near Campbellville, between Milton and Guelph Junction, last night.

In attempting to avoid the Goderich train Hilbert stepped in front of the Chicago flyer, which was coming from the opposite direction. He was struck by the Chicago train and thrown in front of the train he had sought to avoid, which hurled him to one side.

The man was placed on board the Goderich train and Dr. Anderson of Milton summoned, but he died a short time later.

The body was brought to Toronto and taken from the train to the morgue. An investigation into the occurrence has been ordered.

THERE WAS NO BABY.

Wife's Attempt To Delude Husband Caused a Mystery.

WINNIPEG, March 6.—The "baby mystery" turns out to be no mystery at all. Mrs. J. B. Jones, who claimed that a midwife had carried off her four-hour-old child, has admitted that no child was born to her, and that the story was merely intended to delude her husband.

Jones desired a child, his wife told him one was coming, and planned with Mrs. Anderson to adopt an infant and present it to Jones as his own. They were unable to find a child. His wife told him a child had been born and taken away by Mrs. Anderson. When the child was not returned, Jones notified the police. Finally the facts came out.

WOMEN AND GIRLS MUST BE PROTECTED SAYS JUDGE IN SENTENCING McCLAY TO PRISON

After being strongly censured by Judge Huycke for his conduct, John McClay was this morning sentenced to one year in Central Prison on the charge of supplying drugs to Margaret Dale for an illegal purpose. Mr. J. V. McElderry defended the prisoner and Mr. Joseph Wearing, M.A., conducted the prosecution.

McClay's counsel had appealed the verdict of the judge but the Court of Appeal sustained the finding.

In sentencing the prisoner, who stood pale-faced in the dock, sullen and dogged looking, His Honor said: It is a very painful duty to sentence you. You have been ably defended and every opportunity given you, therefore it is not by any means the fault of your counsel that you stand where you are. The Court of Appeal to which you carried your case, decided unanimously in favor of the finding of this court. Your own admissions in the trial did not impress me very favorably with your conduct. Our women and girls must be protected sometimes from themselves and from men also. The evidence on which you were convicted would have served to convict you on a more serious charge, the penalty on conviction being seven years. The finding and penalty must be an example for the public generally, and to warn others from resorting to crime and the wronging of women.

TWO ARE FROZEN

Tragedy is Discovered on Farm by Neighbor

BERLIN, Ont., March 6.—Jacob Thomasing, aged 75 years, and his sister, Mary Thomasing, aged 77 years, who have been living together since infancy, were found frozen to death at the farm on the road leading from Bloomingdale to New Germany, at 9.30 o'clock yesterday morning.

The shocking discovery was made by a neighbor, Mrs. Sebleski, who went to the Thomasing farm yesterday morning for the purpose of purchasing some wood which was for sale. She found the body of the aged man lying on his side in the shed alongside the hay wagon. He had apparently been standing in the wagon and had fallen to the floor, as his face was bruised considerably, and there was a gash on the right side of his forehead. The horse and cow had been feeding from the hay wagon, and the man's coat had also been bitten by one of the animals.

Mrs. Sebleski, horrified at her discovery, immediately went to the nearest neighbor, Andrew Benninger, and, along with Albert Snider and Eli Clemmer of Berlin, they returned to the tragic scene. In the house, which is a small red brick structure, with two rooms downstairs and three upstairs, all in a most deplorable and insanitary condition, they found the frozen body of Mary Thomasing. She was lying on the bare floor in the bedroom off the living-room, wearing a thin dress, and had her hands across her body.

There were no evidences of decay, owing to the body being frozen stiff. It is practically certain that death was due to exposure to the cold. As neither of them had been seen for upwards of a week, indications are that they died during the extremely cold spell of last week.

HORSEFLESH EATEN IN MONTREAL

Montreal, March 6.—The price of beef and mutton having risen so high, Montreal is now eating horse flesh. There are three abattoirs in the neighborhood of Longueuil that are killing horses; they have stated to the civic authorities that the meat is for export to Sweden, but Dr. S. Boucher, medical officer of health, said this morning that his department believed strongly that some of the meat was coming to Montreal and being sold as beef or as sausages.

CANADIAN CLUB HEAR PETERBORO OLD BOY WHO IS NOW IN PARLIAMENT

Mr. R. F. Green, Member for Kootenay, Speaks on British Columbia

Mr. R. F. Green, member of the House of Commons for Kootenay, B. C., and formerly Minister of Lands and Works in the Provincial House of B.C., addressed the Canadian Club of Peterborough last night. He gave an admirable address on the province of his adoption.

The speaker went into a detailed account of the area resources, industries, trade and climate of the Province of British Columbia. He gave comparative figures of its growth in population and wealth since it entered confederation in 1871. Thus, in that year the white population consisted of about 10,000; the total population being 36,274; to-day the population is 525,000. The area of British Columbia is 536,000 square miles or about 228 million acres. The revenue has grown from two million dollars in 1893 to ten millions and a half in 1913.

In 1903 Mr. Green took over the Forestry Department as Minister of Lands and Works for British Columbia and was instrumental in securing the legislation for the present license system of timber lands.

Concerning the Oriental problem the speaker said that the chief objection to Asiatics was not their color or creed, but their capacity to crowd out white labor through their cheap way of living. There was nothing patriotic about them. To have a white man's country in B.C. there must be white labourers, white people on the land as well as white doctors and lawyers. We must have men on the land and if we can get that, that is all we want.

The fisheries are next in importance of our natural resources in B. C., and in this particular we lead the Dominion. The speaker gave some details which are almost beyond comprehension. He said that stern wheel steamers on the Frazer River are sometimes forced to stop because the paddle wheel is clogged up with salmon fish. When the salmon run you can stand on the bank with a spear and pitch them out by the cart load, so numerous are they. The Oolachan or Candle fish, is a much prized fish for the amount of oil it contains. It received its name "Candle Fish," from the fact that Indians used to take them when dried and burn them as candles. In 1913 the salmon industry reached the sum of $9,540,000.

Referring to the mining industry, he said that any decent mining property would yield dividends. "Let me say to you frankly," he continued, "that I do not believe there is any mining property within our Province that has ever been reported upon by reputable mining men of experience as having a reasonable chance of making a mine upon development, that has not turned into a dividend payer." The ores in B. C., are not as high grade as the New Ontario ores, hence they require more men to work them and the mining industry is thus very important. The total gold production to the end of the year 1912, was $143,000,000. That of coal $132,871,155. That of silver $35,863,940. That of lead $29,529,953, and that of copper $73,725,562.

Dealing with the agricultural industry he said the great difficulty was getting people on the land. Fifty to five hundred dollars per acre is the cost of clearing land in some parts. The land will produce anything in vegetables and is particularly good in producing fruit. Inspectors have been appointed to examine orchards and they send out instructors whose duty it is to advise the growers regarding the best methods to be followed in planting, pruning and caring for their trees.

In regard to the 15,000 miles of coastline, he said, B.C., has the best breeding and spawning grounds for the untold millions of fish and magnificent harbors for the ships that we expect to have carrying world trade. The completion of the Panama Canal will be a great boon to trade and the shipping industry of the Province. At the present time the Narrows, that large ship-building firm of Great Britain, has started to build a branch of their works at Esquimalt, about four miles from Victoria.

As to climate, we can give you any kind you prefer. In the mountains of the north on an elevation of 3500 to 5000 feet it is more rigorous than in Ontario, while at the southern end of Vancouver Island, it is more genial, more invigorating and more evenly tempered than that of Los Angeles. The nights are always cool, and if we have our rainy season Los Angeles has also its drawbacks. The scenery of British Columbia is not surpassed any plae in the world.

"At this particular time I would venture to say that were you to drop down into any of the Coast cities of our Province, you would find the grass growing green, spring flowers in bloom, and everybody hard at work, fixing their gardens for the coming summer.

I can only say in conclusion how much pleasure it gives me to visit my old home town of Peterborough, to tell you in my own feeble way a few of the beauties, a few of the pleasures, and a few of the advantages of living in British Columbia, the home of my adoption.

Mr. Green was tendered the thanks of the Club; the next meeting to take place March 18th, when Professor Mavor, of Toronto University, will address the Club.

Two Murderers Reprieved.

OTTAWA, March 6.—Clark and Davis, the two murderers who were to have been hanged at Vancouver to-day have been granted a reprieve by the Minister of Justice for fifteen days in order to enable them to present their case for revision by the Supreme Court of the province.

Sir George Ross' Condition.

TORONTO, Jan. 6.—Sir George Ross showed no improvement yesterday, and according to the attending specialists, grows weaker every day. Although he is so weak he cannot even recognize members of his own family, Dr. Goldie believes he may linger some days.

PARCELS UP TO ELEVEN POUNDS ARE ACCEPTED

Fee of Five Cents for Local Delivery by Carrier Also Eliminated

The ultimate eleven pound limit of weight for the parcel post goes into effect to-day. Post-Master Jas. Edgar has received a circular to this effect. Thus the restriction to six pounds for each packet accepted for transmission by parcel post during the months of February, March and April, has been removed. The order that has gone forth from the post office department also eliminates the additional fee of five cents to be prepaid by postage stamps on each parcel mailed for local delivery in places where the letter carrier system is in operation. However, the insurance of packets does not become operative until the first of May, as at first set forth, and in the meantime packets of the parcel post may merely be registered.

BIGGER TRADE EXPECTED.

Although the increase in the use of the parcel post has been continuous and steady since its inauguration on February 10th last, the rush on the mails was not by any means as great as might have been expected. Now since the full weight is being accepted it is expected by the post office officials that the new department in the mail service will loom large, and that many manufacturers and shippers as well as the public in general will take advantage of the cheap rates afforded by the parcel post in preference to those of the express companies.

Villa Demands Ransom.

EL PASO, Texas, March 6.—Gen. Luis Terranzas yesterday afternoon appealed to Marion Letcher, American consul at Chihuahua, who is now in this city awaiting instructions, to save his son, Luis, whose life will be made the forfeit if 500,000 pesos of ransom money is not paid over to Gen. Francisco Villa, the rebel leader.

The messenger of Villa to Gen. Terrazas said that the money must be paid within five days or Don Luis will be killed. The five days expires today.

Revolution In Brazil.

BUENOS AYRES, Argentina, March 6.—A state of siege was proclaimed in Rio Janeiro, Brazil, yesterday, according to despatches reaching here from that city.

It is understood here that a strict censorship has been imposed on despatches from Brazil.

Youth Carried Revolver.

SUDBURY, March 6.—The appearance of a youth at the wicket of the Palace Skating Rink with a revolver in his hand caused some excitement, when Miss Flora Glenest, the ticket seller, fainted, and Mr. James, the caretaker, backed the "desperado" out of the building as he was "covered" with the revolver.

The youth entered the rink early in the evening, and after skating for a while on leaving the rink demanded his admission refunded.

Miss Glenest refused his request, and the "desperado" thrust his hand and revolver into the wicket.

The police are looking into the case.

MAY ENLARGE THE COMMISSION

Opponents of Georgian Bay Canal to Sit in Enquiry

OTTAWA, March 6.—As a result of representations that have been made to the Minister of Public Works, it is understood that two more members will be added to the commission which will enquire into the feasibility of the Montreal-Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal project, one of the new members will probably be from Toronto and the other from Ontario west of Toronto. The object is to have represented on the commission those who are opposed to the proposal to create the new ship waterway. The appointments will not be made for a few days.

Drunken Indians In Riot.

WIARTON, March 6.—Word has just reached town of a grand debauch of the Indians of Cape Croker Reserve on Shrove Tuesday. Many red men got some fire water, and with two squaws, they got drunk and started a small riot. When the Cape constable tried to quiet them they took his baton from him and pounded him unmercifully. The arrival of some sober braves stopped this and the whole affair will come before Magistrate Miller.

HOME RULE INTRODUCED

Last Trip of Measure Begun in London

LONDON, March 6.—The Home Rule for Ireland bill was introduced again into the House of Commons yesterday by Augustine Birrell, Chief Secretary for Ireland, and was read a first time amid prolonged Ministerial and Nationalist cheers.

The Government has succeeded in keeping the secret of the concessions to be offered by Premier Asquith on Monday, when the bill comes up for second reading. According to reports from quarters connected with the Cabinet, however, Premier Asquith will simply propose that any Irish county may, by a plebiscite, vote itself out for a period of three years.

It is generally regarded in Parliamentary circles as certain that the Unionists will reject any concessions Premier Asquith is likely to offer.

WOULD TAX THE BANKS

Member for Hastings Suggests New Source of Revenue

TORONTO, March 6—With a view to providing a new source of revenue for the province J. W. Johnson, Government member for Hastings, laid a suggestion regarding bank taxation before the House yesterday afternoon. He claimed that the immense sums held by the banks were a legitimate subject for taxation, especially because they were only possible through the entrusting of large sums to these corporations by the people of Ontario. If his scheme were put into operation the revenue would be increased yearly to the extent of $450,000.

His suggestion was that a one per cent. tax be levied on the paid-up capital of banks operating only in Ontario. Dominion-wide banks should be roughly estimated as gaining one-fourth of their patronage from Ontario, and on this understanding should be subject to one-quarter of one per cent. as a tax rate.

The budget debate was continued yesterday afternoon when T. W. McGarry (Renfrew) took the discussion for the Government and Sam Clarke (Northumberland) replied for the Opposition.

Mr. McGarry said there was a vast improvement in the handling of finances since the present administration bad taken hold. Whereas nine acres had been disposed of under the old regime for $200,000 a block of six acres had recently placed $500,000 in the provincial coffers. This was merely illustrative of the general work being done in the agriculture, crown lands and other departments.

The attack of Sam Clarke centred about Government House. It would prove an immense burden, he said, at an immense cost. He also criticized the policy of feeding prisoners in the Guelph farm on "quail on toast" and domiciling them in quarters with hardwood floors and like luxuries.

Messrs Hugh Munro (Glengarry) and J. W. Johnson (Hastings) followed with short addresses.

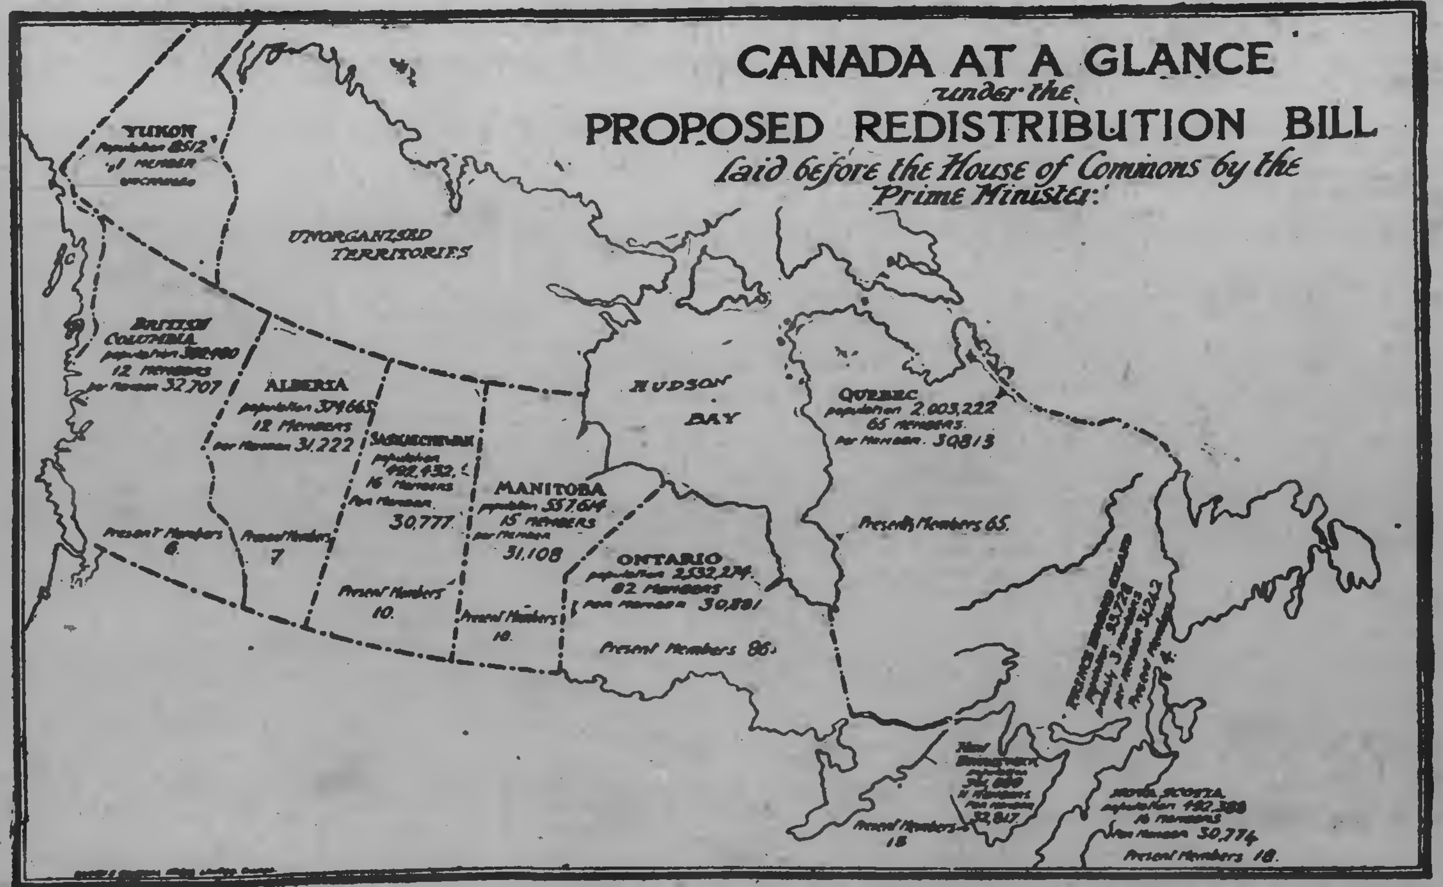
MAP OF THE DOMINION SHOWING PROPOSED REDISTRIBUTION OF SEATS IN FEDERAL HOUSES



This drawing presents in concise form the effect of the redistribution of seats as proposed by Premier Borden. Quebec, the province upon whose fixed representation that of the others is determined, now has a population of 2,003,222, and its 65 members represent on an average of 30,813 persons each, and an effort is being made to re-arrange the seats so that, as nearly as possible, the other provinces shall be represented on the same basis. The Yukon, of course, is an exception, as it has a population of 8,512 and sends one member to Parliament. This sketch shows the present population of each province, the present number of members, the proposed representation under the new bill and the average population to be represented by each member. The special committee to which the measure has been referred is composed of the following gentlemen:

Conservatives—Hon. Messrs. Rogers, Pelletier and Reid; and Messrs. Bennett (Calgary) and Rhodes (Cumberland, N.S.)—5. Liberals—Hon. Dr. Beland (Beauce), and Messrs. F. F. Pardee (West Lambton), E. M. Macdonald (Pictou), and Wm. A. Buchanan (Medicine Hat)—4.

PETERBOROUGH, THURSDAY, MARCH 5, 1914.

UNION STATION FOR PETERBOROUGH.

THERE IS one thing that should concern the City Council and the Board of Trade—that is a Union Station for the City of Peterborough. Perhaps some will say there is plenty of time for that later on, let us give our time and attention to things of more pressing concern. Before giving finality to such a summary estimation of this question, some consideration of the history of other cities that have built or desire union stations, is in order. In the first place, every year that the problem hangs fire the more difficult and expensive will become a satisfactory solution. Peterborough is a growing city and such a condition means a gradual rise in real estate values, particularly in the locality where a union station is desirable. But what is of more importance than the site of such a station is the railway approach there to. If a new line has to be run through a fine residential district, property adjacent to the line falls in value while high prices are asked for the land immediately necessary for the road bed. Hence, there arises a long and difficult wrangle, slow legal expropriation proceedings, decisions of boards of arbitration, divisions within councils and opposition by interested parties.

The city of Hamilton has long wanted a union station. Changing from the C.P.R. or T.H. and B. to the Grand Trunk is very inconvenient and involves a great deal of lost time. The two stations are so far apart that a street car ride is necessary. The Grand Trunk station is situated even for its own business, in a most unhandy location. For years the question has been mooted in the city council and debated at municipal elections, but while time has flown the city has developed, property has risen in value, each railway company has secured large freight yards and will not move without proper compensation. Property owners in one place are desirous to sell, others are arrayed in opposition, so that if Hamilton ever gets a union station a very large amount of money will have to be expended. Toronto has for years borne the inconvenience of crowded railway facilities because the expense of building proper accommodation is so large. Chicago also has its difficulties along the same line.

Peterborough, however, is extremely well situated to secure a union station. The stations at present are not too far apart, nor are the approaches so separated as to disorganize a large section of property were they united. Further, the stations are not large enough to accommodate the traffic and as Peterborough grows the need for increased accommodation will become more urgent. The city is large enough now to have stations in keeping with its size and importance. Why not a union station, before such a problem becomes too big for the council or too expensive for the tax payer?

MR. HEARST LAUDS NORTHERN ONTARIO.

FOR A NUMBER of years, Ontario was represented in the school geography as that portion of land bordering Lakes Ontario and Erie, and lying between the Ottawa river and Lake Huron. The great northern stretch of territory was huddled in one corner of the map and received about as much attention as the Arabian desert. It was not important then anyway—what did the teacher know about it? The C.P.R. ran through it and the scholars had to learn the rivers "off by heart." But things have changed and now, what was once considered as a vast, almost worthless stretch of country, is found to be very valuable.

The Hon. W. H. Hearst in his reply to the toast, "Northern Ontario," at the Ward 5 banquet, given in Toronto Tuesday evening, greatly praised the north country and dwelt on some of its possibilities and their relation to old Ontario. The new Transcontinental line runs through a fine stretch of agricultural land. The depth was practically without limit and the Ontario government was pursuing a great plan of development, involving road construction and the building of schools. New settlers are pouring in and taking advantage of the cheap lands which are reported to be surpassed no where in Canada, not even in the West. The rise in values from $1.50 per acre to $5.00 and $10.00 per acre, where roads have been built, speaks volumes for both the country and the policy of the Ontario Government.

No one can estimate the importance of a great tract of agricultural land in Northern Ontario to the older settled part in the south. It only shows that, together with the great mining operations in the same region, Ontario is only beginning to realise its possibilities.

ALL NOT WHAT THEY SEEM.

MR. C. C. FARR, editor of the Haileyburian, desired to investigate personally the problem of the unemployed in Toronto. He had heard many stories concerning the out-of-works and here is the way the Toronto Star relates his experience:

> "Being a newspaper man, Mr. Farr decided to go out and look for copy. He decided to investigate for himself the treatment accorded out-of-work strangers. Going to a second-hand store he discarded his own clothes for a shabby suit in keeping with the part he was to play and started for the office of the British Welcome League, to see how he would be treated. But he did not get there. In his disguise a policeman judged him to be a vagrant and gathered him in. He complains that he was locked up, was refused permission to telephone the Albany Club or to any of his acquaintances.
>
> Next morning he was brought before Magistrate Ellis and, still in the old clothes he had doned the night before, was not believed when he declared that he was C. C. Farr, of Halleybury. Either those in court did not know of C. C. Farr or they did not believe him, and we prefer to think that they did not believe him. So far from believing him they doubted his sanity, and he was remanded for a week to be examined by the jail physician. By denying the identity of the disguised person before them they paid a compliment to the real C. C. Farr.
>
> Fortunately a friend saw an item about it in a newspaper, and Col. Hay promptly secured his release.
>
> This case seems to show that the police are too deaf to explanations offered by men they do not know. Surely a man—any man—ought, at least, to have the right to communicate by telephone or messenger with his friends or solicitors.
>
> But, as a newspaper special writer, looking for copy, it cannot be denied that Editor Farr found it. Having set out to learn how an out-of-work is treated, he found it out. A despatch from the north states that he will devote the whole front page of his paper to the treatment he received. Those who know what a writer Mr. Farr is will await the Haileyburian with interest. In the meantime he can feel that he has scooped six city newspapers, and has got a story that will be the envy of all reporters. His adventure was a success; it worked out away beyond his expectations."

The experience of Editor Farr will certainly wake up the Toronto police. They were too hasty and probably they have caused many innocent or unfortunate persons needless suffering. The police are only the arm of the law, which seeks to establish right dealing and justice between all conditions of men. They were never constituted for the sole purpose of "running in" or condemning all persons who happened to look like good subjects for arrest.

Brandon's Street Railway.

Monetary Times.

The city of Brandon is facing the facts in regard to its street railway system. Including interest, this enterprise was responsible for a loss of about $100 daily. Drastic steps have, therefore, been taken by the city council to economize and to endeavor to bring the system somewhere near a paying basis. The superintendent's resignation has been accepted, half the motormen and conductors have been dismissed, and a general "one man to a car" system adopted. Unfortunately, Brandon is an early sufferer of the recent Western craze for street railways—a craze, by the way, which may yet spread in Ontario, to Ontario's regret. Not long ago, when optimism got out of check, there seemed to be a conviction that if a city could boast of a street railway, positive proof existed of its high standing and dense population. This obviously was incorrect, but street railways have been built largely on the strength of such sentiment.

A street railway's success depends much upon earnings and upon economy of operation. To have sufficient earnings, one must have density of population or freight, or both, and sufficient area. It is very questionable whether Brandon can support a street railway, even under the new system of economy.

GOSSIPS

By Walt Mason

The gossips are a noisome bunch who play an ugly game; they'd leave the finest Waldorf lunch to mangle some one's fame. They're prone to injure all they touch, with their long tongues and jaws, and yet they cannot hurt you much unless you give them cause. The man whose life is circumspect, who minds the Golden Rule, won't see his reputation wrecked by any prating fool. And those who suffer most from talk quite often are the guys who hear a tale and walk a block to put the neighbors wise. I often say, with Virtue's tongue, "The gossips I abhor," and then I tell how Sandy Bung ran off with Mandy Dorr. The noxious deeds that others spring we righteously despise, and then we do the self same thing, dad bust our pious eyes! We all are gossips, more or less; with glee we trot along to tell about our fake distress when some good man's gone wrong. On Smith and Jones we're keeping tab, and if they make a break, we'll stand around the streets and gab until our windpipes ache. So when we roast the gossip vile who deep in scandal delves, 'twere well to pause a little while and just size up ourselves.

Birthdays of Note

FRIDAY, MARCH SIXTH

George Bury, vice-president of western lines of the C.P.R., who observes his forty-eighth birthday to-day, was destined by his parents for a legal career. He objected however to having his future mapped out for him in this way and decided that he would prefer railroading. So he left college and applied for a position in the C.P.R. offices in Montreal. The story goes that there were two vacancies to be filled, one in the office of Archer Baker, the general superintendent, the other in that of "Tom" Shaughnessy, the purchasing agent. Young Bury was advised to try for the first, as it was regarded as the greater "cinch." He did not consider this good policy however, and applied to Mr. Shaughnessy, who gave him a berth. Since then his promotion has been rapid, thanks largely to the favorable impression he made on the future president as a lad.

Tiny German States.

While it is well known that some of the German states are of Liliputian size, few persons are aware that it is quite possible to visit seven of them, including two kingdoms, two duchies and three principalities, in an easy walk of four and a half hours.

A good walker, starting from Steinbach, in Bavaria, will arrive in half an hour at Lichtentanne, which is situated in Saxe-Meiningen. Thence the road proceeds in one and one-half hours to Rauschengesees (Reuss, Elder Branch), after which in a few minutes Gleima, in Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt, is reached.

Half an hour's walk brings the pedestrian to Altengesees (Reuss, Younger Branch). An hour farther on lies Drognitz, on Prussian soil, and the last stage is another hour's stroll, finishing up at Saalthal, Saxe-Altenburg.—Harper's Weekly.

Tarzan of the Apes

by Edgar Rice Burroughs

Copyright, 1912, by the Frank A. Munsey company.

How could she leave the poor, faithful thing to those merciless yellow fangs? No, she must use one cartridge on the senseless woman ere she turned the cold muzzle toward herself again.

She shrank from the ordeal. But it would have been cruelty a thousand times less justifiable to have left the loving black woman who had reared her from infancy to regain consciousness beneath the rending claws of the tiger.

Quickly the girl sprang to her feet and ran to the side of the negress. She pressed the muzzle of the revolver tight against that devoted heart, closed her eyes, and—

The tiger emitted a frightful shriek.

Jane Porter, startled, pulled the trigger and turned to face the beast, and with the same movement raised the weapon against her own temple.

She did not fire a second time. Astounded, she saw the huge beast being slowly drawn back through the window, and in the moonlight beyond she saw the heads and shoulders of two men.

As Clayton rounded the corner of the cabin to behold the animal disappearing within it was also to see the ape man seize the long black and yellow tail in both hands, and, bracing himself with his feet against the side of the cabin, throw all his mighty strength into the effort to draw the beast out of the interior.

Clayton was quick to lend a hand, but the ape man jabbered to him in a commanding and peremptory tone—orders, Clayton knew, though he could not understand them.

At last, under their combined efforts, the great body commenced to appear farther and farther without the window, and then there came to Clayton's mind a dawning conception of the rash bravery of his companion's act.

For a naked man to drag a shrieking, clawing man eater forth from a window by the tail to save a strange white girl was indeed the last word in heroism.

In so far as Clayton was concerned it was a very different matter, since the girl was not only of his own kind, but was the woman whom he loved.

Tarzan was still issuing orders which Clayton could not understand.

He was trying to tell the stupid white man to plunge his poisoned arrows into Sabor's back and sides, and to reach the savage heart with the long, thin, hunting knife that hung at Tarzan's hip, but the man would not understand, and Tarzan did not dare release his hold to do the things himself. He knew that the puny white man never could hold mighty Sabor alone for an instant.

Slowly the tiger was emerging from the window. At last his shoulders were out.

And then Clayton saw a thing done which not even the eternal heavens had ever seen before. Tarzan, racking his brains for some means to cope single handed with the infuriated beast, had suddenly recalled his battle with Terkoz, and as the great shoulders came clear of the window, so that the tiger hung upon the sill only by his fore paws, Tarzan suddenly released his hold upon the brute.

With incredible swiftness he launched himself full upon Sabor's back, his strong young arms seeking and gaining a full nelson upon the beast as he had learned it that other day during his bloody victory over Terkoz.

With a shriek the tiger turned completely over upon his back, falling full upon his enemy. The black haired giant only closed tighter his hold.

Pawing and tearing at earth and air, Sabor rolled and threw himself this way and that in an effort to dislodge his antagonist. Always tighter and tighter drew the iron bands that were forcing his head lower and lower upon his white breast.

Higher and higher crept the steel forearms of the ape man about the back of Sabor's neck. Weaker and weaker became the tiger's efforts.

At last Clayton saw the immense muscles of Tarzan's shoulders and biceps leap into corded knots. There was a long sustained and supreme effort on the ape man's part—and the vertebrae of Sabor's neck parted with a sharp snap.

In an instant Tarzan was upon his feet, and for the second time that day Clayton heard the bull ape's savage roar of victory, and then he heard Jane Porter's agonized cry:

"Cecil—Mr. Clayton! Oh, what is it? What is it?

Running quickly to the cabin door, Clayton called out that all was right and bade her open. As quickly as she could she raised the great bar and fairly dragged Clayton within.

"What was that awful noise?" she whispered, shrinking close to him.

"It was the cry of the kill from the throat of the man who has just saved your life, Miss Porter. Wait, I will fetch him that you may thank him."

The frightened girl would not be left alone, so she accompanied Clayton to the side of the cabin where lay the dead body of the tiger.

Tarzan of the apes was gone.

Clayton called several times, but there was no reply, and so the two returned to the greater safety of the interior.

"What a frightful sound!" cried Jane Porter. "Don't tell me that a human being made it."

"But it did, Miss Porter," replied Clayton, "or at least if not a human throat that of a forest god."

And he told her of his experiences with this creature—of how twice the wild man had saved his life, of his wondrous strength and agility and bravery, of the brown skin and the handsome face.

"I cannot make it out at all," he concluded. "At first I thought he might be Tarzan of the apes. But he neither speaks nor understands English, so that theory is untenable."

"Well, whatever he may be," cried the girl, "we owe him our lives. May heaven bless him and keep him in safety in his jungle."

"Amen," said Clayton fervently.

"Fo' de good Lawd's sake, ain' Ah daid?"

The two turned to see Esmeralda sitting upright upon the floor, her great eyes rolling from side to side, as though she could not believe their testimony as to her whereabouts.

CHAPTER XI.

"Most Remarkable."

SEVERAL miles south of the cabin, upon a strip of sandy beach, stood two old men arguing.

Before them stretched the broad Atlantic, at their backs the dark continent; close around them loomed the impenetrable blackness of the jungle.

Savage beasts roared and growled. Noises, hideous and weird, assailed their ears. They had wandered miles in search of their camp, but always in the wrong direction. They were hopelessly lost.

Samuel T. Philander was speaking.

"But, my dear professor," he was saying, "I still maintain that but for the victories of Ferdinand and Isabella over the fifteenth century Moors in Spain the world would be today a thousand years in advance of where we now find ourselves. But, bless me, professor, there seems to be some one approaching."

Professor Archimedes Q. Porter turned to the jungle in the direction indicated by the nearsighted Mr. Philander.

"Tut, tut, Mr. Philander!" he chided. "How often must I urge you to seek after absolute concentration of your mental faculties? And now I find you guilty of a most flagrant breach of courtesy in interrupting my discourse to call attention to a mere quadruped of the genus felis. As I was saying, Mr."—

"Heavens, professor, a lion!" cried Mr. Philander, straining his weak eyes toward the dim figure outlined against the dark tropical underbrush.

"Yes, yes, Mr. Philander, if you insist upon employing slang in your discourse, a 'lion.' But, as I was saying"—

"Bless me, professor," again interrupted Mr. Philander, "permit me to suggest that we postpone discussion of Moors until we may attain the enchanting view of yon felis carnivora which distance proverbially is credited with lending."

In the meantime the lion had approached with quiet dignity to within ten paces of the two men, where he stood curiously watching them.

"Most reprehensible, most reprehensible!" exclaimed Professor Porter, with a faint trace of irritation in his voice.

"Never, Mr. Philander, never before in my life have I known one of these animals to be permitted to roam at large from its cage. I shall most certainly report this most outrageous breach of ethics to the directors of the zoological garden."

"Quite right, professor," agreed Mr. Philander, "and the sooner it is done the better. Let us start now."

Seizing the professor by the arm, Mr. Philander set off in the direction that would put the greatest distance between themselves and the lion.

They had proceeded but a short distance when a backward glance revealed that the lion was following them. Mr. Philander tightened his grip upon the professor and increased his speed.

"As I was saying, Mr. Philander"—repeated Professor Porter.

Mr. Philander took another hasty glance rearward. The lion also had quickened his gait and was doggedly maintaining an unvarying distance behind them.

"He is following us!" gasped Mr. Philander, breaking into a run.

"Tut, tut, Mr. Philander!" remonstrated the professor. "This unseemly haste is most unbecoming to men of letters."

Mr. Philander dropped the professor's arm and broke into a mad orgy of speed that would have done credit to any varsity track team.

With streaming coattails and shiny silk hat, Professor Archimedes Q. Porter followed, while from the shadows peered two keen eyes in interested appreciation of the race.

It was Tarzan of the apes who watched, with face a-grin, this odd game of follow the leader.

He knew the two men were safe enough from attack in so far as the lion was concerned. The very fact that Numa had foregone such easy prey at all convinced the wise forest craft of Tarzan that Numa had already dined.

The lion might stalk them until hungry again, but the chances were that if not angered he would soon tire of the sport and slink away to his jungle lair.

So Tarzan swung quickly to a lower limb in line with the approaching fugitives, and as Mr. Samuel T. Philander came panting and blowing beneath him, already too spent to struggle up to the safety of the limb, Tarzan reached down and, grasping him by the collar of his coat, yanked him to the limb by his side.

Another moment brought the professor within the sphere of the friendly grip, and he, too, was drawn upward to safety just as the baffled Numa, with a roar, leaped to recover his vanishing quarry.

For a moment the two men clung, panting, to the great branch, while Tarzan squatted with his back to the stem of the tree, watching them with mingled curiosity and amusement.

It was the professor who first broke the silence.

"I am deeply pained, Mr. Philander, that you should have evinced such a paucity of manly courage in the presence of one of the lower orders. As I was saying, Mr. Philander, when you interrupted me, the Moors"—

"Professor Archimedes Q. Porter," broke in Mr. Philander in icy tones, "the time has arrived when patience becomes a crime and mayhem appears garbed in the mantle of virtue. You have accused me of cowardice. Believe me, sir, I am tottering on the verge of forgetfulness as to your exalted position in the world of science and your gray hairs."

The professor sat in silence for a few minutes, and the darkness hid the grim smile that wreathed his wrinkled countenance. Presently he spoke.

"Look here, Skinny Philander," he said in belligerent tones, "if you are lookin' for a scrap, peel off your coat and come down on the ground, and I'll punch your head just as I did sixty years ago in the alley back of Porky Evans' barn."

"Ark!" gasped the astonished Mr. Philander. "Lordy, how good that sounds! When you're human, Ark, I love you. Somehow it seems as though you had forgotten how to be human for the last twenty years."

"Forgive me, Skinny," the professor said softly. "It hasn't been quite twenty years, and heaven alone knows how hard I have tried to be 'human' for Jane's sake, and yours, too, since my other Jane was taken away."

An old hand stole up from Mr. Philander's side to clasp the professor's, and no other message could better have translated the one heart to the other.

"You certainly pulled me up into this tree just in time," said the professor at last. "I want to thank you. You saved my life."

"But I didn't pull you up here, professor," said Mr. Philander. "Bless me, the excitement of the moment quite caused me to forget that I myself was drawn up here by some outside agency. There must be some one or something in this tree with us."

"Eh?" ejaculated Professor Porter. "Are you quite positive, Mr. Philander?"

"Most positive, professor," replied Mr. Philander. "And," he added, "I think we should thank the party. He may be sitting right next to you now, professor."

Just then it occurred to Tarzan of the apes that Numa had loitered beneath the tree for a sufficient length of time, so he raised his young head toward the heavens, and there rang out upon the terrified ears of the two old men the awful warning challenge of the anthropoid.

The two friends, huddled trembling in their precarious position on the limb, saw the great lion halt in his restless pacing as the bloodcurdling cry smote his ears and then slink quickly into the jungle to be instantly lost to view.

"Most remarkable, most remarkable," murmured Professor Porter, clutching frantically at Mr. Philander to regain the balance which the sudden fright had so perilously endangered. Unfortunately for them both Mr. Philander's center of equilibrium was at that very moment hanging upon the ragged edge of nothing, so that it needed but the additional impetus supplied by the additional weight of Professor Porter's body to topple the devoted secretary from the limb.

For a moment they swayed uncertainly, and then, with mingled and most unscholarly shrieks, they pitched headlong from the tree, locked in frenzied embrace.

It was quite some moments ere either moved, for both were positive that any such attempt would reveal so many breaks and fractures as to make further progress impossible.

At length Professor Porter essayed an attempt to move one leg. To his surprise it responded to his will as in days gone by. He now drew up its mate and stretched it forth again.

"Most remarkable," he murmured.

"Thank heaven, professor," whispered Mr. Philander fervently. "You're not dead, then?"

"Tut, tut, Mr. Philander; tut, tut!" cautioned Professor Porter. "I do not know as yet."

With infinite solicitude Professor Porter wiggled his right arm—joy! It was intact. Breathlessly he waved his left arm above his prostrate body. It waved.

"Most remarkable; most remarkable!" he said.

"To whom are you signaling, professor?" asked Mr. Philander in an excited tone.

Professor Porter deigned to make no response to this puerile inquiry.

Mr. Philander had not moved from where he had fallen. He had not dared the attempt. How, indeed, could one move when one's arms and legs and back were broken?

One eye was buried in the soft loam; the other, rolling sidewise, was fixed in awe upon the strange gyrations of Professor Porter.

Professor Porter rolled over upon his stomach. Then he sat up and felt of various portions of his anatomy.

"They are all here!" he ejaculated.

Whereupon he rose, and, bending a scathing glance upon the still prostrate form of Samuel T. Philander, he said:

"Tut, tut, Mr. Philander; this is no time to indulge in slothful ease. We must be up and doing."

Mr. Philander lifted his other eye out of the mud and gazed in speechless rage at Professor Porter. Then he attempted to rise, nor could there have been any one more surprised than he when his efforts were immediately crowned with marked success.

He was still bursting with rage, however, at the cruel injustice of Professor Porter's insinuation and was on the point of rendering a tart rejoinder when his eyes fell upon a strange figure standing a few paces away, scrutinizing them intently.

Professor Porter had recovered his shiny silk hat, which he had brushed carefully upon the sleeve of his coat and replaced upon his head. When he saw Mr. Philander pointing to something behind him he turned to behold a giant, naked but for a loin cloth and a few metal ornaments, standing motionless before him.

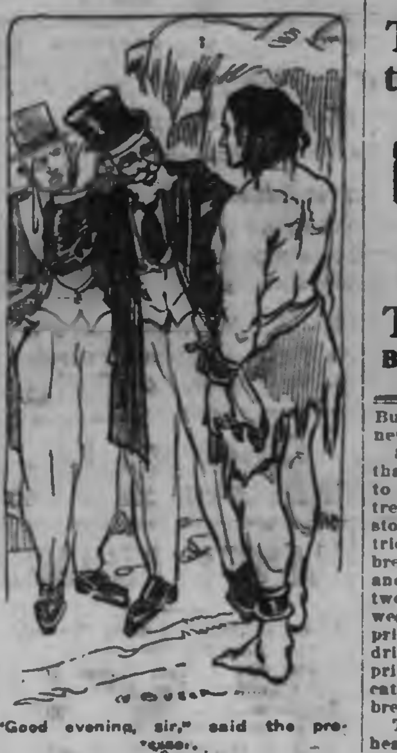
"Good evening, sir," said the professor, lifting his hat.

For reply the giant motioned them to follow him and set off up the beach in the direction from which they had recently come.

"I think it the part of discretion to follow him," said Mr. Philander.

"Tut, tut, Mr. Philander," returned the professor. "A short time since you were advancing most logical argument in substantiation of your theory that camp lay directly south of us. I was skeptical, but you finally convinced me, so now I am positive that toward the south we must travel to reach our friends. Therefore I shall continue south."

Further argument was interrupted by Tarzan, who, seeing that these strange men were not following him, had returned to their side.



"Good evening, sir," said the professor.

Again he motioned them to follow him, but still they stood in argument.

Presently the ape man lost patience with their stupid ignorance. He grasped the frightened Mr. Philander by the shoulder, and before that worthy gentleman knew whether he was being killed or merely maimed for life Tarzan had tied one end of his rope securely about Mr. Philander's neck.

"Tut tut, Mr. Philander," remonstrated Professor Porter. "It is most unbeseeming in you to submit to such indignities."

But scarcely were the words out of his mouth ere he, too, had been seized and securely bound by the neck with the same rope. Then Tarzan set off toward the north, leading the now thoroughly frightened professor and his secretary.

In deathly silence they proceeded for what seemed hours to the two tired and hopeless old men, but presently, as they topped a little rise of ground, they were overjoyed to see the cabin lying before them, not a hundred yards distant.

Here Tarzan released them and, pointing toward the little building, vanished into the jungle beside them.

It was a much relieved party of castaways that found itself once more united. Dawn discovered them still recounting their various adventures and speculating upon the identity of the strange guardian and protector they had found on this savage shore.

CHAPTER XII.

Burials.

AS it was now quite light the party, none of whom had eaten or slept since the previous morning, began to bestir themselves to prepare food.

The mutineers of the Arrow had landed a small supply of dried meats, canned soups, and vegetables, crackers, flour, tea and coffee for the five they had marooned, and these were hurriedly drawn upon to satisfy the cravings of long famished appetites.

The next task was to make the cabin habitable, and to this end it was first decided to remove the grewsome relics of the tragedy which had taken place there on some bygone day.

To be Continued.

KING GEORGE AS FARMER.

His Majesty Had Thirty-Five Entries In Smithfield Show.

The crowned heads of Britain, for many years, have recognized the fact that agriculture is the basis of a country's prosperity.

For several years past many of the big prizes at the Smithfield Show, London, have been awarded to the farmer sovereign, whose exhibits are always a feature of the show.

Even as far back as 1800, King George III. was an exhibitor at the great show, but failed to secure a prize. Six years later, the Duke of York was successful. Queen Victoria won many trophies, being awarded the Champion Cup for the best beast in the show in 1883, 1889, 1890, 1896, and 1899, and it may be incidentally mentioned, that by her command no exhibit that has not been bred on one of the royal farms has been exhibited by the sovereign, since the year 1890.

King Edward won the championship of the cattle section in 1874, and the Cup for the best pen of sheep in 1885; while our present King won the championship for pigs in 1895, and the Prince Consort a gold medal for pigs in 1859.

Nor has the Smithfield Club lacked royal support from other points of view, as King Edward was their president in 1875, 1888, and again at the Centennary Show in 1898; while H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh occupied the position in 1887 and H.R.H. Prince Christian, who is a constant exhibitor, in 1893.

At the recent show, Windsor, Sandringham and Balmoral were all represented, the royal entries totalling thirty-five. King George inspected all his entries, and handled many of them.

Perhaps the King chiefly differed from more specialist exhibitors, in the particular interest he took in the men who tended his stock. As he stroked the forehead of his beautiful shorthorn heifer he inquired of the herdsman how many years he had served at Windsor; and if ever a Scotsman rolled his "r's" it was that herdsman when he replied with obvious pride, "Nearly thirty years." But in those thirty years he had never seen Windsor so unrivalled.

Someone propounded the theory that the soil of Windsor, which used to produce the best English oak trees, must have similar properties in stock production. Out of twelve entries from Windsor three special-breed cups won in Devons, Herefords, and Shorthorns—of which the first two are sometimes supposed to need west-country air — and seven first prizes and two seconds. The Sandringham farm won a few firsts; principally in small classes for small cattle, kerries and crossbreds of this breed.

The King again and again laughed heartily throughout his extended tour of the show. He merrily urged his shepherds who were holding his pen of Southdowns, to use their best devices when it came to a contest with the pen of Hampshires which were known to be dangerous rivals, as they proved.

The immense zeal of the guardians of some of the stocks to show their animals to the best advantage before the King produced an almost embarrassing situation in the Gilbey Hall, which was devoted to machinery and pigs.

As soon as the King, accompanied by Sir Bowen Bowen-Jones, this year's president, appeared in the hall almost all the prize pigs were roused from their recumbent ease by vigorous slaps with flat "bats" that are the technical weapon. White pigs and black pigs and red pigs at once started such a chorus of protest, some upsetting their troughs and shaking the flour from their "fleeces," that the spick-and-span Gilbey Hall might have been an Irish fair and so it continued.

"Rogues' Guide" Author.

After twenty-five years' service Inspector Joseph Madigan has retired from the Criminal Investigation Department, Scotland Yard.

Mr. Madigan began the compilation of what, from a police point of view, is the most valuable book in the world—"The Rogues' Guide"—containing intimate biographical sketches with portraits and details of the methods of all the famous national and international thieves and swindlers. It is a book which is always growing, for almost every day a new rogue is added to the list.

SEASONABLE.

IN June the ancient question
On moonlit nights gets popped
Unless by an injunction
The eager youth is stopped.
Though painfully he stammers
Whenever she is near,
He manages quite deftly
To make the meaning clear.

There's something in the season
And in the air of June
Or maybe in suggestions
Reflected from the moon
That turns a fellow's fancies
To thoughts of wedded bliss
And makes him in the shadows
Go fishing for a kiss.

He rather likes the fishing,
And with the proper bait
He finds that for a nibble
He doesn't have to wait.
Perhaps a little [illegible],
A promise—cross his heart—
And then they swear in chorus
They nevermore will part.

And that's why it is easy,
The way is pleasant made,
For if in fear he falters
She prompts him as first aid,
So in the moonlight fishing
He makes a pretty catch,
And then they talk it over
And call the thing a match.

LONDON CONVENTION HEARS BECK PROGRAM OUTLINED

Radials and Provincially-Owned Telephone System Are Forcasted in Notable Speech to Delegates at Western Ontario "Field Day"—Minister Urged to Continue in Charge of the Work.

LONDON, March 6.—A statement of the operation of Hydro, plans for acquiring further power, the need of radials and how they might be secured and a suggestion for a provincially-controlled system of telephones were the features of Hon. Adam Beck's address last night at the London "Field Day" for the discussion of the power situation in Western Ontario.

At the outset he expressed his desire to do everything possible to bring the plans for a system of radials to a successful issue. It would be his privilege in the course of a week or so to place on the table of the Legislature the last annual report of the Hydro-Electric Commission.

"The commission," said Mr. Beck, "has paid to the Provincial Treasurer $599,388 as interest charges on the Hydro investment. Not one dollar after the completion of municipal construction work has been charged to capital account, but every dollar after that has been taken from operation. We have an available surplus of $189,203, an amount adequate to meet complete sinking fund charges. In addition every one of the sixty odd municipalities has had a handsome surplus at the end of the year, with the exception of a few still in the constructional stages. The total investment in the Niagara scheme by the end of the year will be approximately $9,500,000 by the Government and $5,350,000 by the municipalities in the Niagara zone and $2,000,000 by other municipalities, making an investment of $21,000,000, this being the liability of the province through the municipalities, and every dollar of it is self-sustaining."

Motive power was available, said the speaker, to meet all the demands at the lowest cost. In the dual undertaking of transmitting Hydro and operating radial railways, they had at once the most economic way of bringing both to the doors of all the people in Ontario. In the three or four years of operation they now had electricity at the disposal of one and a half millions of the two and a half millions of people in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Beck said that he quite concurred in the expressions of anxiety as to further supply of Hydro to meet the ever-increasing demand, and he referred to the action of the Ontario commission in protesting against private companies being given extensions of charters to secure power from Niagara Falls.

"We must ask that Government at Ottawa, that Government that is rich and extravagant as Dominion Governments have been since time immemorial, to give you assitsance towards this end," said the Minister. "We mean to have some of that money, not to be squandered but carefully invested to make Ontario the province that she should be, agriculturally, socially, and commercially."

Mr. Beck then gave estimates on the cost and revenues of the projected Toronto, Markham & Port Perry Hydro Radial, which is expected to serve as the first experiment of radial building by the Ontario commission. The line, he said, was estimated to cost $2,470,770, or $38,400 a mile, which figure did not include the asked-for federal subsidy. Comparative figures were then brought forward to show how the construction of the roads would reduce the price of Hydro-electric power.

The exercises opened at one o'clock in the Masonic Hall on Queen street with the welcoming of delegates by Mayor Green and members of the Board of Control and City Council. The visitors then signed the register.

A resolution offered by Mayor Jackson of Clinton, warmly endorsing the work of Hon. Adam Beck and urging the continuance of his efforts towards the upbuilding of a radial system, was passed unanimously.

Philip Pocock, of London, presided, and Ald. Hanningan, of Guelph; Alex. Summers, vice-president of the Guelph Board of Trade; J. J. Pettypiece, M.P.P., of Forest, and J. C. Elliott, of Glencoe, spoke during the afternoon.

LILIES OF THE BIBLE

They Are Wind Flowers, as No True Lilies Grow in the Holy Land.

It is a common belief, even among well informed people, that the word "lily" as used in the sacred text means a real lily in the modern sense of the word. This, however, is not the case. No real lily grows or ever grew within the confines of the Holy Land. The white lily (Lilium candidum), which is often mistaken for the plant of Scripture, is not a native of Palestine, nor can it be made to grow there, even in cultivation, without great care.

It is commonly conceded that the plant Christ saw about him during the Sermon on the Mount was the same plant which in early spring is still found in great abundance in the valleys of that country—namely, the oriental wind flower (Anemone coronaria). The tint of its blossoms is from blood red to crimson, and it is called wind flower, not, as commonly supposed, because the slender stemmed blossoms sway in the breeze, but because the hairy seeds of some species are carried and propagated by the wind.

The fact that Christ used the word "lily" when a wind flower or anemone was meant need not surprise us, for the word was used as the people of his day used it. And all the ancient peoples, even the Greeks, employed the word lilium or lirion or krinon when referring to any plant with a cuplike flower. Even today, when scientists speak of common plants, they mention "water lilies," "lilies of the valley," etc., although they know full well that these plants are not real lilies nor even closely related to them.—Baltimore American.

He Unburdens Himself.

"Can you bear it if I tell you something serious?" ventured the young husband.

"Yes. Don't keep anything from me!" gasped the bride.

"Remember, this does not mean that my love for you is growing less."

"Don't break my heart. What is it?"

"Well, my dear, I'm getting tired of angel food every day for dinner. Would it be too much to ask you to have liver and onions?"—Kansas City Journal.

The Black Cap.

Discussing the action of Justice Ridley recently in passing the death sentence at the Old Bailey, London, without assuming the black cap, The Law Journal says: "Justice Ridley was well justified on this occasion in omitting the grim formality. The black cap owes its origin to the Order of the Coif, and, according to Serjeant Pulling, the historian of the order, its existing use is in keeping with its primordial purpose. The coif, he explains, was originally a close-fitting head-covering made of white lawn or silk. The black cap, or sentence cap, of judges and serjeants, is the covering expressly assigned to veil the coif on the only occasion when the coif was required to be hidden. By the ancient privilege of the serjeants the coif was not to be taken off in even the royal presence. The chief insigne of the order, it was to be so displayed when sitting on the Bench or pleading at the Bar, but this rule seems always to have been departed from in passing sentence of death. The head of the administrator of justice was then covered or veiled as a token of sorrow by the black sentence cap.

FANCY FRAMES

New and Elegant Designs For Holding Favorite Photographs.

Attractive picture frames for milady's boudoir are made with swinging frames and mounted in renaissance style. The one shown here is in gilt. The other frame, also in gilt, while less novel in shape, has a handsome braid trimmed mat of art silk set underneath the glass. These dainty frames make charming gifts. They are always useful. One can never have too many, as they are being constantly needed to replace the old and shabby ones that enshrine the faces of friends or hold prints of favorite pictures.

HOUSEHOLD JOTTINGS.

Hints That Will Save the Housewife Time and Trouble.

Stair carpets should be heavily padded if one desires them to wear well.

Salt sprinkled on a carpet before sweeping reduces the amount of dust that rises.

Tincture of myrrh is a good thing in the water used to rinse after brushing your teeth.

Good eggs will sink in a brine of two ounces salt to a pint of water; bad ones will float.

A slip for a balsam pillow is best made of tan linen, with a pine tree cross stitched upon it.

Apply glycerin to a scald directly the accident occurs and cover it up with strips of rag soaked in glycerin.

When fruit leaves a stain on the teeth this may be removed at once by rubbing a little salt on the teeth.

A clothesline may be cleaned by wrapping it around a washboard and thoroughly scrubbing it in soapsuds.

When the sickroom is being ventilated a screen should be placed in front of the window to prevent danger of a draft.

Allow the children to eat almonds. One dozen blanched almonds are equal to about one pound of round steak in nutritive value.

Tarnished silver can be brightened if placed for a short time in boiling water in which a fair sized lump of washing soda has been dissolved.

To keep the table salt dry and soft dry it, then crush it under a rolling pin till perfectly free from lumps and sift into it a tablespoonful of cornstarch.

A weak solution of carbolic acid applied to ink stains on carpets will remove them. If this changes the color it may be restored by ammonia water.

Maddening Calmness.

A New Yorker who had planned a week end trip with his wife fumed and fretted without avail on the morning set for their departure because she made such slow progress in getting ready for the journey. At last he fairly dragged her from the house and into a waiting taxicab, although she kept protesting that there was no occasion for hurry, as they had plenty of time. Arrived at the station, the couple dashed for their train and were just in time to see it pulling out. "There," said the irate husband, "didn't I tell you that we'd never catch that train on account of you?"

"Yes," said his philosophic spouse calmly, "but we didn't miss it by much."—New York Tribune.

PLEA FOR HONESTY

Europe Believes U.S. is "Sailing Close to the Wind"

WASHINGTON, March 6.—President Wilson went to Congress yesterday and pleaded for repeal of the provision of the Panama Canal Act, which exempts American coastwise shipping from tolls. He tersely asserted that his reason for asking the repeal was that everywhere except in the United States the tolls exemption was regarded as a violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, and he further asked it in support of the administration's general policy.

That the President's request will be granted there seemed last night to be little doubt, despite the fact that there will be vigorous opposition to the repeal, both in the Senate and the House.

Aside from the bearing of yesterday's message on the Panama tolls question, some of the phrases used by the President attracted widespread comment in Congressional quarters as relating to foreign relations in general. In some quarters there was a warning on the difficulties involved in other matters of even greater delicacy and nearer consequences.

The President told callers at the White House yesterday that while he had never received any formal communications on the subject, he had understood that European nations generally took the same view as did Great Britain, that the Hay-Pauncefote treaty was violated by the Panama Canal Act. He pointed out that in dealing with foreign affairs nations which believed the United States did not keep a promise on so important a treaty as the Hay-Pauncefote convention, would not be likely to be sincere on other delicate questions.

Word had come to the President of a general impression in Europe that the United States was "sailing as close to the wind as possible" in interpreting promises made in its treaties.

Brookfield Wrote With Either Hand.

Among the many accomplishments possessed by Charles Brookfield was the exceedingly useful art of being able to write with either hand. This he owed to the early training of his mother, who when the future dramatic censor was a baby fell a victim to writers' cramp. She thereupon learned to write with the left hand and soon became proficient. In 1864 Mrs. Brookfield published her first novel, which she claimed to have written throughout with her left hand. As soon as her children could use a pen they were taught to hold it in either hand indifferently, and this early training served Charles Brookfield in good stead when he became a prolific author.—London Graphic.

Ocean Derelicts.

Abandoned vessels have often floated for many months waterlogged, but carried far by winds and currents. There was the Fanny E. Wolston, deserted on Oct. 15, 1891, which traveled about 4,000 miles before she was last reported in December, 1893. And the W. L. White was a derelict from 1888, when she was near New York, till she ran ashore on the Hebrides a year later. Forty vessels saw her, but could not sink her.

DEPUTY SPEAKER AND ELECTIONS DISCUSSED

Sir Wilfrid Laurier Presents Resolution Urging the Exclusion of the Deputy From Participation in Contests

OTTAWA, March 6.—The House spent practically all of yesterday's sitting in committee of supply, with the estimates of Hon. Bruno Nantel, Minister of Internal Revenue, after listening to a brief discussion between Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Prime Minister respecting the propriety of the Deputy Speaker taking any part in electoral contests.

Earlier in the day Mr. Nantel introduced a bill respecting the metric system. It makes the metres and kilogram kept as a standard at the international bureau in Paris the standard for Canada.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier presented a resolution declaring that the same rule which applied to Mr. Speaker applied to the Deputy Speaker, and that the latter should be barred from taking part in electoral contests.

Sir Wilfrid said he desired to say nothing controversial. The rules of this House, except as modified, were the rules which governed the British House at the time of Confederation. An unwritten rule in the British House had been then, and ever since that, the presiding officer should refrain from expressing any political views, either in or out of Parliament. He was glad to say in Canada all the Speakers since Confederation had scrupulously refrained from expressing any political views, and from all displays of partisanship. The same, he thought, could be said of all the gentlemen who had occupied the position of Deputy Speaker since the operation of the office in 1891, except Mr. Bergeron. He did not say this to reflect on Mr. Bergeron, as no one had objected at the time to the course he saw fit to take. He concluded with an appeal to the Prime Minister to establish the British practice in Canada.

Mr. Borden said, in reply, that the British practice rested on no written rule, and we would probably make more progress towards having the Deputy Speaker non-partisan by making no hard or fast regulation, but by relying upon public opinion in and out of the House. In England the Speaker had no temptation to take part in politics, because his seat was never contested. That was not the case in Canada, with either the Speaker or the Deputy Speaker. He was quite in sympathy with the views of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, but trusted that the resolution would not be pressed at this time.

Glancing at the historical part in Sir Wilfrid's address, Mr. Borden said that not only Mr. Bergeron, but Messrs. Macdonald, Brodeur and Marcil had appeared on the stump while holding the office of Deputy Speaker.

The committee which has charge of the redistribution of constituencies will meet on Tuesday next to consider the proposals of the two parties in the different provinces. Nothing has yet been done by the committee itself with regard to any of the seats, not even the unit of redistribution, but so much harmony has been in evidence that several proposals which will be laid before the committee on Tuesday will be unanimous.

The first matter which will be agreed upon unanimously will be the unit. It will be a general basis of 45,000 for cities and 20,000 for rural constituencies. That is, in regard to the latter, where there is not less than 20,000 in a constituency, the riding will not be disturbed. There may, of course, be additions to it, as in the case of several Quebec and Ontario constituencies, which have to be merged in others to make way for the increased representation of cities. For instance, it has been definitely decided that Montreal will have 12 seats, but apart from that, nothing has been done in the French-Canadian province.

HE WANTS HIS MONEY.

Evanturel Has Applied for Sessional Indemnity To Date.

TORONTO, March 6.—There is some interesting speculation concerning the sessional indemnity to which the member for Prescott is entitled. He has already sent in an application to the Government for the payment of his salary up to date.

It was stated yesterday by a Government official that Mr. Evanturel's sessional allowance would stop from the day that the original statement was read in the House. This, however, is questioned by others. The rate usually allowed is twenty dollars per day up to the end of thirty days. For more than thirty days the indemnity is $1,400, minus $15 a day for each day over a week absent.

Late in the evening the Government was not in a position to say what action would be taken.

Good Train Service.

Talk of trains and one is reminded of the perfect line. Read of this service and applaud: "The trains come in to the minute and go out to the minute. The officials are intelligent and polite. The carriages are good. Every station has its waiting room, where you may sit and read and drink a cup of coffee that is not only hot and fresh, but is recognizably the product of the berry. It is impossible to travel in the wrong train. It is very difficult not to get out at the right station. The fares are very reasonable. The time tables are models of clarity." No, the reference is to no railway in the south of England. It is Mr. E. V. Lucas' summary of the good points of the train service of the happy Hollander!—London Spectator.

Parisian Street Barbers.

The French capital, like that of China, has its street barbers. In Paris the perambulating tonsorialists carry a little box containing the usual outfit of their calling. Their chief patrons are laboring men. The street barber of Paris usually places his customer upon the banks of the Seine or in some spot aside from the crowd, covers his knees with a newspaper and proceeds to work. For only 1 sou he will shave a man, cut his hair and generally impart to him a more or less smart appearance. These barbers are said to make quite a respectable sum even at the small fee they charge.

Made in Canada - Saving Duty Charges

Last season we inspected all the leading clothing Houses of Canada, also Society Brand of Chicago, in search of new clothing that would interest our customers. We were particularly impressed with Society Brand Clothing for young men. We introduced Society Brand Clothing to the young men of Peterboro, and its merits were speedily recognized. This season we again present Society Brand Clothing, but under more favorable circumstances. A contingent of American Society Brand designers and tailors arrived in Canada; huge bales of English woollens were here in readiness, and Society Brand Clothing, with all its style, splendid tailoring and beautiful finish, improved by the use of English materials, and the price, less the cost of duty, is here for the fitting out of the particular, well-groomed young man. The preference this season is grey and brown, leaning towards the rougher weaves, and these are shown in splendid variety. Come in and see them. Whether you buy now or later, matters not to us. Be Sure To Take Advantage of the Big Values on "Dollar Day," Thursday, March 12th

ARE YOU WASTING YOUR TIME OR ARE YOU TAKING ADVANTAGE OF IT

You Cannot Make up Lost Opportunities in The Review's Big Contest

This is the question that every fair-minded, live, energetic contestant should ask him or herself.

Have I got one or more subscriptions written up in my book beside ant should ask him or herself.

Have I got promises that will be turned into money before March 11?

Five days have gone of this great chance to win a valuable prize. This is half of the alloted time of the great offer. The contest is fast nearing the end, and the time is now here that you may conquer or fall by the wayside and go down in defeat, if you do not get subscriptions. This is only a small battle for fame and fortune, but it is measured nevertheless, by the results that you have.

ABOUT THE CLUB OFFER.

Contestant Must Procure Subscriptions.

For the benefit of the contestants who are idling away their time, and who at the beginning procured a few subscriptions, we might say that if these people think they are going to win any of the prizes, or even the 5 per cent. commission, they will be badly mistaken, for in order to win a reward it is necessary to remain in the contest to the finish, and you do not remain in the contest unless you continue to turn in business up until its close. This is only fair to the contestants and to The Review. We do not say that you shall get any stipulated number of subscriptions, but we do insist that you work and that you procure subscriptions up to the close of the contest. You will notice that from time to time a name is dropped out of the voting list. That is because those people have ceased to be active factors, have ceased to turn in business, and hence can no longer be properly considered contestants. In a battle such as this, where for the next few weeks every participant must strain every nerve if he is going to come under the wire a winner, it is essential that there be no dead timber, and so, in accordance with the established rule in contests of this kind, those who turn in no business for a period of one week are considered to have dropped out and their names will be omitted from the voting list.

The Last Great Chance.

This is the last great chance you will ever have in The Review contest to put yourself in possession of so many votes. You must have votes if you expect to win. And this is your one last chance to store up the needed number.

ONLY FOUR MORE DAYS.

ATMOSPHERIC CHANGES.

What It Means in Air Pressure When the Barometer Falls.

It is not an uncommon thing at certain seasons of the year for the barometer to shift an inch within twenty-four hours. Sometimes the change is even greater. Few persons have any idea what tremendous changes in the atmosphere are indicated by such a rise or fall in the mercury column.

A cubic inch of mercury weighs half a pound. When the mercury falls an inch a weight of one ton is removed from every 4,000 square inches of surface. This is a ton for every area five and a quarter feet square. If your house, for instance, is 25 by 40 feet, with an area of 1,000 square feet, a load of about thirty-six tons is lifted from the roof every time the barometer shows an inch fall—that is, a thirty-six ton load would be lifted if the house were air tight. But as air presses in every direction there is as much of a push upward against the roof from below as there is of a push downward from above. So the roof actually feels no effect from the removal of this heavy load.

In the same way a man of average size would be relieved of a weight of about a ton and a half if there were no air chambers in the human body.

It has been figured that a fall of an inch in the barometer over a territory 400 miles square removes a weight from the surface of the earth of 160,000,000,000 tons. If this were loaded on freight cars, twenty tons to the car, and thirty cars to the train, more than 200,000,000 trains would be required to move it. If each train were 500 feet long they would stretch out in a line more than 25,000,000 miles long.

The only noise that accompanies this great transportation feat is made by the wind, that does considerable roaring in the course of such violent atmospheric changes.—Kansas City Star.

Fire-Eating Italian Committed.

LONDON, March 6.—Roca Mellie, alias Mellie Antinanos, the man held by the police on the charge of shooting with intent to kill William Skingley and Hector Miller, the two Hydro employes, in the Hotel Harrison on Tuesday night, appeared before Magistrate J. C. Judd yesterday and was committed for trial at the spring assizes in April without entering a plea.

It developed that the name the prisoner gave the police when he was arrested, Antinanos Meliel, was not his proper name, and that he also was at present out on suspended sentence, having been found guilty on Feb. 20 by Magistrate Judd on a charge of assaulting another Italian.

No Tick Business.

"What line is he in?"

"A dealer in secondhand clocks."

"How does it go?"

"Not very good. Time hangs heavily on his hands."

Utility.

"Has his education been along practical lines?"

"I should say so. Three ball teams are after him already to sign for next season."

MANY REFORMS ARE FAVORED

Social Service Congress Adopts Long List of Resolutions

WOMAN SUFFRAGE

OTTAWA, March 6.—Several resolutions were passed at yesterday afternoon's sessions of the Social Service Congress calling on the Dominion Government to appoint a royal commission to investigate and make a report on the coal miners' strike on Vancouver Island; to prevent the manufacture, importation and sale of cigarettes in Canada; to establish free employment bureaus; to appoint a royal commission to investigate the unemployment problem; to enact a policy that will raise the Indians to a level of citizenship; to adopt a closer inspection of immigrants from southern Europe; to create a department of child welfare; to give pensions to mothers; to initiate an old age pension, and to assist the extension of co-operative societies.

The congress went on record as being in favor of woman suffrage, labor unions, total abstinence and social survey work. A resolution recommending that civil servants be appointed for the outside service the same as they are for the inside service, and to give them their political rights—it was not decided just what those rights are—caused a warm discussion, and finally the resolution went back for reconsideration to the resolution committee along with one to ask the Government to establish moral education in the schools.

The resolution regarding the western miners' strike, after reviewing the great hardships caused, concluded:

"Therefore, be it resolved, that this social service congress urgently requests the Dominion Government to appoint a royal commission to examine into the whole dispute from its beginning; to bring all the facts to light, and thereby to bring the full strength of public opinion to bear on those concerned in order to effect a settlement of the dispute.

Sharp Retorts.

A man who was offering gratuitous information at a country fair was disparaging the show of cattle.

"Call these here prize cattle?" he scornfully said. "Why, they ain't nothin' to what our folks raised. You may not think it, but my father raised the biggest calf of any man round our parts."

"I can very well believe it," observed a bystander, surveying him from head to foot.

It is not every one who enjoys a joke at his own expense. The judge who pointed with his cane and exclaimed, "There is a great rogue at the end of my cane," was intensely enraged when the man looked hard at him and asked coolly:

"At which end, your honor?"

A friend of Curran's was bragging of his attachment to the jury system and said:

"With trial by jury I have lived, and by the blessing of God with trial by jury I will die."

"Oh," said Curran in much amazement, "then you've made up your mind to be hanged, Dick?—London Tit-Bits.

The three-flounced skirt, the cross-over fichu into the corsage, the wide, carelessly wound sash, and the tucked-up polonaise are details of the new models.

The Political Cabinet.

George I. is said to have been responsible for the word "cabinet" as it has long applied to politics in the United States. When he was king he could not take part in the deliberations of his own privy council because he knew no English. British statesmen did not speak German. So the ministers who served this first of the Hanoverian sovereigns of Great Britain used to meet in the king's private room or cabinet—derived from the French cabine or little room—while he was absent. Afterward they informed him of the result of their discussions. It followed naturally that the part of the privy council which was supposed to be in particular favor with the king and especially close to him came to be spoken of as his cabinet council.

Handmade Ragtime.

"Of course," said the salesman, "anything handmade is sure to be superior to what is made by machinery."

"Not always," answered the musical person. "If you start up a music box it generally plays something in the way of a standard composition. But when anybody sits down at the piano and turns out something by hand the chances are that it will be ragtime."—Washington Star.

Sammi's Advice

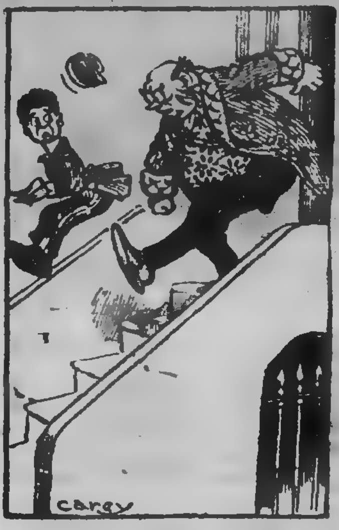
The Elevator Boy Rises to Give a Few "Don'ts."

By M. Quad.

ALTHOUGH I retired from the profession of elevating an elevator many years ago and have been living in luxury in the bosom of a happy family ever since, I still take a deep interest in the welfare of the lad who starts out to seek fame and fortune by conducting a cage.

Of course there are failures in this profession as in all others, but Mr. Bradstreet is happy to inform me that the per cent is the lowest of any. That means that the great majority of boys who take hold are determined to reach the top.

The first time I was employed to take charge of the elevator of an office building I made the mistake of thinking I was the whole show.



"HE GAVE ME THE BOOT."

The agent of the building was a Mr. Rentum. I left the Mr. off when I addressed him.

I addressed the engineer as "old man."

I poked a solemn old banker in the ribs and asked about his hollyhocks.

We had a professor of natural history on the sixth floor, and I called him "professor."

My idea was to let everybody know that I did not feel above them because I was earning $4 per week.

Fatal Advice.

There was no one to tell me that I was making a fool of myself, and I went on for about ten days. Then I called at the residence of the owner one night and advised him as a business move to build a summer garden on the roof of our building.

I can't say what he thought of it. He gave me no clew, but he gave me the boot, and I never called at the office for the 65 cents salary due me.

Don't walk into your cage with any idea that you own any part of the building or that you have come to teach the agent, the engineer or the janitor how to run a side show.

Don't stop your elevator between floors to ask the man with the game leg whether he was disabled by a kick from a jackass or fell off the roof of a cider mill.

When I got my next place I was wise enough to cut out some things, but not enough. We had several brokers in our building, and I set out to make them my friends. If I could do this they would tip me off on many a good thing.

I asked after the health of their wives and children.

I asked if they preferred bulldogs to collies.

I wrote to my cousin for news of the corn crop that I might post the "street."

I ventured several financial opinions that were apparently well received.

It took a long time to thaw those brokers out and get their confidence, but I persisted, and at length the day came. I was taking Mr. Skinem up alone. I suppose I looked at him as appealing as a calf for its milk, for he put his mouth down to my ear and whispered:

"Buy Rock Island, my son!"

That was enough. I borrowed all the cash I could from the other boys, sold my revolver, skates and bike, had mother draw her savings and bought Rock Island on a margin.

In four days I was wiped out.

So was mother.

So were the boys.

It was a week later before I met Mr. Skinem again. He poked me in the ribs, winked and asked:

"Is that gigantic mortgage lifted, Sammis?"

"It's spiked down anew, sir," I replied.

"Why, how's that?"

"I followed your advice and bought Rock Island."

"Rock Island! Why, you young idiot, I told you to buy rock salt! It has gone up 5 cents a bag, and you ought to be $1,000 to the good!"

I have never trusted a broker since.

Etiquette and Diplomacy.

Another mistake I made was a misunderstanding of the rules of etiquette. I thought it was required of me to call on every tenant and welcome him and make him feel at home.

There is no etiquette around a skyscraper.

The nearest approach to it is a demand that when an elevator boy busts his way into a room on the fifth floor to tell the occupant that there is a small fire in the basement and finds five men playing poker he shall immediately withdraw with the remark:

"Please excuse me. I did not know that you were writing your last wills and testaments."

The elevator boy who should go around the building telling about that poker game and that one of the hands he caught sight of was a straight flush would lose his job that very night.

Every elevator boy is sooner or later bound to get at least one bright idea. Beware of them. I got one after I had served about six months. It was to fence off a half of each elevator and rent the spaces to umbrella menders and shoestring men. Thus they would always be at hand when wanted and the rentals of the building be largely increased. The agent listened to my plan and then led me to the door by the ear and said:

"Go! Go down to Wall street! You belong among the financiers!"

And one thing more. Never, under any circumstances, if a woman comes to your cage and wants to know if Smith, Jones or Brown has an office there, do you answer "Yes." Your answer must be:

"I will see, madam; I will see."

And then you must slip up and notify the party that he is being asked for by a woman, and describe her and leave it to him whether to make a sneak or not.

I lost a luxurious job by letting a woman ascend to an office unannounced, and her husband lost most of his hair and whiskers at the same time.

SAMMIS.
The Elevator Boy.

Father's Ultimatum.

The father of a large family of children was trying hard to read the evening paper.

"What's that terrible racket in the hall, Martha?"

"One of the children just fell downstairs."

"Well," he replied, turning over another page of the paper, "you tell the children if they can't fall downstairs quietly they'll have to stop it."—Lippincott's.

An Impossible Person.

Mrs. Catterson—I don't like Mrs. Chatterson. She's so sly and deceitful.

Mrs. Patterson—Doesn't she tell the truth?

Mrs. Catterson—That's the trouble. Every time I'm certain she's lying I find that she isn't.—New York Globe.

Ambition and Realization.

"What broke up the club?" asked one young lady from Bryn Mawr to her friend, both being members of the club for girls who would not marry a man getting less than $10,000 a year. "A young clerk getting $10 a week," said Ida as the conductor tried not to smile.—Philadelphia Press.

Just Like a Man.

"Men are inconsiderate things," observed the bride of a few months.

"You are not growing pessimistic already?" smiled her friend.

"Well, they are selfish. Yesterday Harry had the cook broil for him the nice lamb chops I had ordered for my dog."—Judge.

Conservation of Energy.

"Johnny, I don't believe you've studied your geography."

"No, mum. I heard pa say the map of the world was changin' every day, an' I thought I'd wait a few years till things get settled."—Brooklyn Life.

The Way to Launder Curtains.

When doing up fine curtains the weight alone of the heavy work often tears the curtain.

To avoid this take cheesecloth that has been shrunk or old sheets sewed together, on which carefully baste the curtains.

After shaking out the dust soak in cold water. Put in suds and boil. Gently lift up and down in the water.

Rinse in several waters, the last slightly blued for white curtains or stained with coffee for ecru.

Put through the wringer; never wring by hand. Set up the stretcher and after doubling your curtain to find the center commence to pin on from center to outside.

Keep the curtains constantly wet while pinning on or they may tear. Four curtains may be pinned on at once, so keeping all pairs precisely the same size and shape for bay or double window.

A little starch may be added to the last rinsing water if desired.

Banishing Odors.

Very often when the dining room is near the kitchen the odor of cooking becomes unpleasant. By pouring a few drops of oil of lavender into a glass of very hot water the air of the room is purified almost instantly. This is also useful in a sickroom. If the lavender is prepared just before dinner is ready to be served the room will be filled with a faint but very acceptable odor of freshness.

Brave Man.

"Jones," whispered a confidential friend at a social gathering, "here is your hat, and I can show you how to get out the back way. There is yet a chance to escape."

"Escape from what?"

"There is a widow in the other room who has designs on you, and she is working this way."

"Where did you say my hat was?"

"Right here."

"Will you please lose it for me?"

HE REACHES YOUNG MEN

NOYES POETRY POPULAR WITH RISING GENERATION.

Distinguished English Poet, Who Is Little More Than Boy Himself, Has a Splendid Record of Achievement In Almost Every Branch of His Art—Now on This Side of Atlantic.

Alfred Noyes, the young and distinguished English poet, is now on this side of the Atlantic on a lecture tour and will remain in this country for about six months. His poems and plays have been widely read upon this side of the water, and his popularity in Canada is emphasized by the fact that his work is a subject for study, and also for papers in the literature seminaries of Canadian universities. His verse and his personality make a special appeal to young men. Among some of his better known works are "The Loom of Years," "The Flower of Old Japan," "The Feast of Wild Thyme" and "Drake," an English epic.

ALFRED NOYES.

Lord Wolseley's Way.

A capital story is told of Lord Wolseley by Mr. Nourse, who, The Cottager and Artisan points out, was with the English forces through the Soudan campaign. At Korti, Nourse went into the postoffice to look for some letters. The postmaster was a native, and not much used to handwriting. He made superficial examination of a big pile of letters and papers, and said there was nothing for the applicant. Nourse asked to see the pile of letters, and while he was looking them over a man with nothing to designate his rank came into the office. He took in the situation at a glance. "Let's clear this thing out," he said. They jumped on the counter and proceeded to "clear it out" by first bundling out the postmaster.

Then they began a careful examination of the postoffice, and found it congested with mails for the army. They searched every nook and cranny, throwing the letters for each regiment into a different pile, and heaping up all the newspapers in the centre of the room. Then they went through each pile and separated it into companies. Before night every letter was in camp and distributed, and the next day the papers were out. Some time after Nourse found it necessary to see the commandant, and sitting near the tent to which he had been directed he saw his companion of the postoffice. "Hello, Charlie! I'm looking for the commandant. Where shall I find him?" "Well," said Charlie, "you won't have to look far. I'm the commandant. Come inside and have a bit to eat and drink." It was Lord Wolseley.

FOR THE COOK.

Two Dainty Ways of Serving Well Known Foods.

A delicious prune pudding can be made in the following way: Get the large California prunes; soak them overnight; in the morning cook them in very little water for about five minutes so that they can be stoned easily.

Chop one cupful of suet very fine, add a cupful of molasses, a teaspoonful of mixed spice, one of salt, a cupful of milk and three and a half cupfuls of flour, into which has been sifted one teaspoonful of baking soda. Cut the prunes in small pieces and pour all together, transferring the ingredients into a buttered mold, filling it about three-quarters full. Set in a pot of boiling water and let it boil uninterruptedly for four hours. Whatever is left of the pudding can be served again if cut in slices and fried brown in butter.

Veal cutlets when properly broiled are very much better than when fried in the usual manner. Season well two pounds of the meat and half an hour before serving broil quickly and thoroughly. A pan with a tightly fitted cover should be in readiness in the oven, into which a cupful of hot water and a piece of butter about the size of an egg should be poured. Lay the cutlets in this and cover up closely so that they will remain very hot until carried to the table.

Why Not?

"Why don't you make a kick about it if you find conditions so intolerable?"

"Kick about it?"

"Sure. I'd kick like five government mules if I were in your place."

"But I have kicked to beat the band and am kicking all the while hard as I can kick."

"Well, for goodness sake, man, why don't you stop kicking, then?"

Canadian League Prospects Being Doped Out—White Caps to be Troublesome

The Ottawa Free Press says: "Although the rosters of the various Canadian League clubs are ambiguous and outside of last year's players little is known of the calibre of the new men, sharps are doping out the teams that will fight for the bunting this year. In this connection, Erie, London, Toronto and Ottawa are figured as the clubs likely to set the pace. St. Thomas and Peterboro have good pitching staffs left over from the season of 1913, and may prove troublesome. Hamilton and Brantford will have to show what they got before anyone will place them first division contenders.

Peterboro will start the season with a good manager in Curly Blount, leading the team. Blount managed the Youngstown Inter-State League club last year and in 1912 played the outfield for Fort Wayne during Frank Shaughnessy's regime. He hit .300 even in 129 games, stole 26 bases, and was the second best run getter in the league with 101. Gilhooley, now of the New York Americans, leading him in this department with 104. It will therefore be seen President Denham has a ball player of real merit at the head of his club.

The Petes are strong on the mound. Bob Sterling, one of the best pitching prospects in the minors, will be back along with Belting and Tracey and Cresswell, all high class men. Peterboro, however, is shy a first sacker, a good second baseman and have a willing youngster in Byrne at third. Brant, their shortstop goes to Chatanooga. The outfield is only fair, but will be strengthened by Manager Blount himself. Taking it all around, Peterboro looks ace high.

To decrease the number of accidents a French city is building a street with separate roadway for each kind of traffic—motor, horse and foot.

Industrial Items.

Austrian salt mines employ 7,000 miners.

The petroleum industry of the United States has more than trebled in five years.

Eighty per cent of cotton cloth in the United States is made in six states in New England and the south.

In proportion to the number of men employed there are more fatal accidents in the metal mines of the United States than in the coal mines, according to government statistics.

Willing to Participate.

Andrew Broder, the humorous member of Parliament from Dundas, came to the opening of the House with some new stories gleaned from his constituency. Andy says he received a letter from one of his electors shortly after Sir Wilfrid Laurier made his now famous speech at Hamilton, in which he laid down a new policy for the Liberal party. The letter was brief and to the point, running like this:

"Dear Andrew,—I see that man Laurier is in favor of free food. So am I, as this is going to be a hard winter, and I am out of work. Can you tell me where I can get a barrel of flour and a side of pork free. If this man Laurier can get it free I wish you would write him for me."—Toronto Saturday Night.

Getting Even With the Parson.

Parson Wheeler was invited out one afternoon for a motorcar ride with one of his friends. The minister, who enjoyed all outdoor sports, was very enthusiastic over motoring, so he was allowed to drive the car. While speeding along he was stopped by a constable and ordered to the station house.

"Well," said the captain, after listening to their story, "you say you were going at only fifteen miles an hour, but the constable declares you were traveling at forty. Now, I don't like to doubt the word of either of you. Can you think why he insists you were traveling at that rate of speed? Is there any grudge he owes you?"

"No," said the clergyman thoughtfully. "No, I can't think of anything—unless it is that I married him four years ago."—Lippincott's.

"I tell you. If you eat me on der farm I come for fife dollars, but for twenty-fife dollars I eat myself at Schmidt's."—National Food Magazine.

SENSATION IN NEW YORK

"Broadway Jones" Proved a Big Hit on the Metropolis

Geo. M. Cohan's latest play, "Broadway Jones," which has proved a sensation in New York, will be the attraction at "The Grand" next Monday, March 9.

"Broadway Jones" is positively the best play Mr. Cohan has ever written, and it is doubtful if a better play has been seen on Broadway. The young author has put a touch of nature in his latest work that lives long in the memory of the audience, the comedy is clean and will appeal to everyone. The plot is woven around characters chosen from the walks of everyday life. It tells a true story of how a pretty girl can inspire the spirit in a man to fight for his rights and the people who love him.

Included in the cast are George Schaefer, Thos. V. Emory, Curtis Benton, Carolyn Lee, Geo. B. Miller, Maurice E. Fisher, Mrs. Chas. Willard, Frederick Maynard, Miss Olive Artelle, Miss Grace Morissey, George G. Henery, Miss Indie Whiteside, Frank Evans, and Chas. H. Henderson. The seats are now on sale.

The week-end attraction at the Royal this week is another feature film. This one is Leah Kleschna introducing Charlotta Nillson and is a production of the Players' Company. The story of a woman's trials were never before so well depicted on canvas. Lovers of the highest standard of motion pictures should not fail to see this grand production. As the above and other feature films fill the bill at the Royal, the usual vaudeville is being played at the Princess.

HIGHLY COLORED HILARITY.

Queer Kind of Fun That Goes With One Hindu Festival.

The "Holi Festival," as celebrated annually by the maharaja of Patiala, India, is described by Charles Bertram in his volume, "A Magician In Many Lands." Mr. Bertram writes:

"Early in the morning I went to the club, where I found many of the guests, who were taking part in the ceremony for the first time. We were provided with a complete new suit of Hindu garments, and our dressing was superintended by the maharaja's servants. We had camels, elephants and victorias provided for us. I was on an elephant, in a kind of box, and we drove in procession to the palace of the native city.

"We were received with great acclaim by the natives, and I was led to believe that it was to be decidedly a dignified occasion, but I was woefully mistaken. The fun had not begun. Certain formalities had to be gone through before the signal was given.

"We took our seats in the courtyard of the palace at a long table that was loaded with large gilt dishes filled with different colored balls as large as oranges and filled with holi powder. At a signal the brother of the maharaja came to the front of the table and salaamed to the prince, who took one of the balls and threw it gently across the table, striking the officer on the breast.

"The ball broke and scattered the powder over his costume. Then there was a general scramble, and in less time than it takes to write hundreds of balls were flying about, their many colored contents scattered broadcast on the crowd. Next baskets of loose powder were thrown upon us in handfuls.

"It was no use to expostulate; the moment you opened your mouth somebody filled it with powder. The battle grew fast and furious, when suddenly an enormous stream of water from a fire engine drenched everybody. The colored powders became wet and, mingling together, dyed us all in brilliantly variegated hues.

"After this sort of thing had gone on for half an hour it ceased by mutual consent, and we returned to the private gardens of the maharaja, where we were most unceremoniously pitched into a tank of running water. I was dyed a deep scarlet all over my body, and it was fully a month before the color entirely disappeared from my face and hands."

Montet's Burning Mountain.

The "burning mountain" of Montet, in Aveyron, France, is often mistaken for an active volcano because a pillar of cloud rises from it by day and a pillar of fire by night, but it is in reality a coal mine, which has been burning for several years.—London Opinion.

Chloride of Sodium.

In connection with the name salt a curious fact is to be noted. Salt was formerly regarded as a compound resulting from the union of hydrochloric (or, as it used to be called, muriatic) acid and soda, and hence the generic term of salt was applied to all substances produced by the combination of a base with an acid. Sir Humphry Davy, however, showed that during their action on each other both the acid and the alkali underwent decomposition and that, while water is formed by the union of the oxygen of the alkali and the hydrogen of the acid, the sodium of the former combines with the chlorine of the latter to form chloride of sodium and this term is the scientific designation of salt, which paradoxical as it may seem, is not a salt. At one time nearly the whole of the salt used as food and for industrial purposes was obtained from the sea and in many countries where the climate is dry and warm and which have a convenient sea board a great quantity of salt is still obtained.

HE LIKED BIG BANKNOTES

An English Lord Who Had a Curious Mania For Hoarding.

A curious story of hoarding is told in Ralph Nevill's book of gossip:

A former Lord Dysart who lived more or less an invalid's life in a house on the outskirts of London, carefully watched over by a lady who acted as a sort of companion-nurse, one day asked her to go to town and get a check cashed for him at the Bank of England. When she was ready to start the old peer sat down at his writing table and, having written out a check for £100,000, told her to be sure and see that she got one note for the whole amount. * * * When she reached the bank the cashier communicated with the manager, who asked the nurse to step into his private office. Having satisfied himself as to her authority for making such a request, he said that if she did not object he would much rather send a clerk to accompany her with the note. She gladly assented to this arrangement, and in due course the clerk in person handed the £100,000 banknote to Lord Dysart.

After having done so he told the peer that there were only three such notes in existence. "One," he said, "we have at the bank, another I have just handed to your lordship and the third, which some time ago disappeared from circulation, we have never been able to trace."

"Perhaps I can help you," said Lord Dysart, and, hobbling over to a bureau, he unlocked a drawer and took out the missing £100,000 banknote, which had been lying there for many years.

WATER IN COAL MINES.

Pumping It Out Costs a Big Pile of Money Every Year.

It costs quite a bit of money to pump 1,000,000,000 tons of water out of the anthracite mines of Pennsylvania every year, but it must be done or there could be no mines. In times past, collieries were abandoned because of inability to cope with the water flowing into them, but more and more pumps, some of them costing $30,000 and $40,000 each, have been installed, and the enormous amount of work they do is all that enables the operators to keep open the mines.

The calculation as to the amount of water handled in this way is simple. The output of the mines is a little less than 70,000,000 tons a year. The average amount of water pumped is about fifteen tons for every ton of coal produced. The cost of this is one of the most important elements in the increased cost of mining. As the richer and more accessible veins have been exhausted, shafts have been sunk deeper and the volume of water to be pumped has increased rapidly.

The pipes, of which there are thousands of miles in the mines, wear out quickly because the sulphur in the mine water eats into the iron like an acid. This destructive quality prohibits the use of the water in the boilers that generate steam at the collieries, and the result is that, when there is a drought, the companies often are obliged to haul water to the mines in tank cars from many miles away.—New York Post.

Odd Contrasts in Climate.

New York is usually thought of as being directly west from London. It is, however, despite its far more rigorous climate, 900 miles nearer the equator than is the British capital. The bleak coast of Labrador is directly west of London. The same line passes the southern part of Hudson bay and Lake Winnipeg. On the other side of the continent it touches the southern extremity of Alaska and continues through the center of the isthmus of Kamchatka and Siberia and Russia to Homburg.

Another illustration of the unexpected in contrasts is found in a comparison of St. John's, Newfoundland, with Paris. Paris has a winter of comparative mildness, while St. John's is a region of bitter cold and fogs, with drifting icebergs along its coast. Yet St John's is 190 miles nearer the equator.

Anatole France on Journalism.

M. Anatole France, in reply to a toast of his health, said: "I have been a journalist and am one still. I owe to journalism some of the qualities that you have exaggerated. Journalism taught me a great part of the art of writing. The two things most useful in writing are ease and simplicity. Journalism teaches those things so well that the style even of great writers like Chateaubriand gained from journalistic experience."—London Times.

New York's Sewage.

Every day there is poured into the Harlem river 99,000,000 gallons of sewage; into the North river, 132,000,000 gallons; into the East river, 264,000,000 gallons. So in the course of a year New York city pollutes its harbor with about 495,000,000 gallons of refuse matter.—New York World.

Trust Thrusts.

If trusts are not dissolving they are at least dissimulating.—Chicago News.

Unscrambling is now proceeding to the tune of "Everybody's Doing It."—New York Tribune.

Is the "radium ring" to take the place of the "octopus" in the trust vocabulary?—New York World.

The price of eggs has risen to a point where the Morgan firm has been driven to try whether the process of unscrambling may not after all be practicable.—New York Post.

A PERILOUS CROSSING.

They Got Safely Over and Then Came a Curious Climax.

Mrs. Exe stood on a crowded corner when the traffic was at its height, staring at the thick, tangled come and go of motorcars and drays and cabs, and not daring to venture in among the dangers of that moving mass.

"May I cross the street with you, madam?"

She turned and saw an elderly stranger with lifted hat and gallant smile.

"Oh, thank you!" said Mrs. Exe. And the stranger grasped her arm with a firm grip, and together they plunged boldly into the wild crush of vehicles.

In and out, right and left, up and down, they zigzagged, at imminent peril of life and limb. Pedestrians on the sidewalk stopped and looked at them. Drivers and chauffeurs shouted and swore at them. It was plain to all that they were in unusual danger.

The escort of Mrs. Exe, still wearing his gallant smile, still grasping her arm firmly, seemed to make no effort to avoid the oncoming vehicles. He darted erratically and yet calmly this way and that.

At last by a miracle the other side was reached. Mrs. Exe then jerked her arm away from her escort's grasp and, with a look of scorn, she said:

"It's no thanks to you that we were not both killed. Why, the way you positively courted danger one would think you were blind!"

"Madam, I am blind," he replied. "That's why I asked if I could cross with you."—New York Tribune.

TALE OF A LOST MINE.

It Is Somewhat Cloudy as to Its Source and Its Veracity.

This touching tale, for the veracity of which we do not vouch, comes from a source that we do not know, says the Engineering and Mining Journal:

"About 1000 a Spaniard in Peru named Jose Salcedo fell in love with an Indian girl. He proceeded to do a thing almost unheard of in those times—he married her. Out of gratitude her mother revealed to him a vein of silver of unexampled richness. He worked it and drew from it considerable wealth—too much for his happiness, for his opulence excited the cupidity of the viceroy, Count Lemos, who had him charged with high treason, the penalty of which was death and the confiscation of all worldly goods.

"It was in vain that Salcedo demanded permission to appeal to Madrid and offered to pay two ingots of silver daily during the fifteen months that must elapse before a reply was returned. The count refused and hanged him in 1009. But the butcher got small good out of it. The Indians, intent on avenging their friend, destroyed the works of the mine, filled it with water and concealed the entrance so cleverly that it could never be discovered. Neither promises nor threats could extract their secret, which remains so to this very day."

This story is more romantic than those of the Gunsight, Pegleg and several other "lost mines" of the American desert.

London's Kennel Club.

The London Kennel club has pedigrees of 500,000 dogs on file. The club was organized in 1873. At the annual show of the Kennel club in London about $40,000 is awarded in prizes. A committee of the club meets twice a month, and the chairman and members of the committee sit as judges and jury in every disputed case passed up to them by the judges of shows. Witnesses are called in the ordinary way and sometimes the sentences are very severe. Not infrequently the owners of dogs are prohibited from ever taking part in a show afterward.

SUCCEEDING THE MANNISH SUIT.

Here is the sort of plain suit that has usurped the place of the old plainly tailored mannish suit for day use which has had to give way in this day of strictly feminine effects, even for street use. The material is rust brown sicilian most appropriate to the design, the shade matched in the cloth tops of the patent buttoned boots. Peplum in skirt and jacket, frills of brown satin ribbon, and a touch of net in the neck, and the plain suit is modishly feminined.

DEVELOPMENT OF MAIL SYSTEM IN PETERBORO

Early Days Are Recalled — Dennis Perdue and His Boots

Truly we live in the age of marvels. The last thirty years have brought to us the telephone in its perfection of service, the phonograph, the moving pictures, wireless telegraphy, a host of inventions of large utility in the mechanical world, processes and developments in the arts, and latest of all the airplane. Mechanical flying is on the verge of being made fairly safe and practical. The next decade will see it useful. These are all very wonderful, several of them marvellous, but to me the most wonderful of all, in its state of automatic perfection of service to mankind at large, is the development of our national and international postal system.

Consider what it does for you. A friend living, maybe, at the foot of the Himilayan mountains writes to you a letter. Seals it in an envelope, affixes a penny stamp, deposits it in a receptacle and turns away. Not the slightest anxiety as to its delivery, at its destination. He does not ask of the attendant that extra care may be taken to ensure its safe passage. He does not even see the attendant. His act expresses the acme of confidence in a belief that the letter will be safely carried to its destination.

A month afterwards a neatly uniformed man knocks at the door and hands to you a letter. It has come across ten thousand miles of land and sea, an atom among ten-thousand other atoms. All have been handled with scrupulous care. All have shared in the solicitude of the postal people. Barring shipwreck or railway disaster the mail will and must reach the hands into which it is directed. The whole service is a remarkable example of duty done for duty's sake. Of a fidelity to service away beyond all traditions.

The Contrast.

Contrast this with the postal service, such as it was in this district about seventy-five years ago, and even later. Mails crossed the ocean at long intervals, generally from two to three weeks apart. The largest type in the headlines of the papers of that day was not used to signalise "Bill Smith's Long Throw," or "Tom Good's Steal of a Base," but told of the arrival of the vessel that was bringing the mails. The mail and its letters formed the link that connected Canada and the old country. It brought intelligence of relatives and friends to the pioneers who were hewing out homes in the forest that covered this part of the province.

"Arrival of The Europe." "Arrival of the "Baltic" was heralded from one part of the country to another by telegraph, if such connection were available. The side-wheel steamers of the famous Collins Line were the mail carriers, having taken from the sailing packets that duty. From Quebec the mails were forwarded inland, after 1850, by the Grand Trunk Railway. Previously by steamers that plied on the St. Lawrence and Ontario waters, with many trans-shipments, because there were no canals to preserve the traffic uninterrupted. From "The Front" as any point along Lake Ontario was termed, the mails came inland by wagon, were sorted at Peterborough, for this District the Newcastle district—and distributed as called for.

A Serious Duty.

People living in what was afterward to be known as Peterborough got their mail from the old postmaster, or succession of postmasters, at the local office. At first it was in a store. Elderly men were in charge. The giving out of mail was too serious a duty to entrust to some light, volatile person. It was a matter of large responsibility. When a man or woman got one letter a year it was too precious to be mislaid or lost. So responsibility was placed on mature shoulders.

I have before referred to the settlement of this part of the province by the people of the Robinson emigration. Some day I will write the story, for there are very few now living who come at all near to participating or even being bystanders of the time and its events. The story is as serious and pathetic a relation of the hardships of pioneer life as any in the annals of Canada. Scattered, they were, over four of five townships, besides those remaining in Peterborough. Miles from the town, cut off and practically isolated in the woods, the first years were passed in extreme loneliness. To come to town for mail was a two day's journey. And to come to town on the chance of a letter being in the post office was a serious thing to undertake. These people were helpful one to another. A caller at the post office would ask for letters for friends, neighbors in the bush, and if any undertake to deliver. Going miles out of the way often on foot in the dead of winter and through the forest trails as a short cut, or over roads that were roads only in name, and from which only the largest stumps had as yet been removed.

Making Cart Wheels.

Possibly the settler making the trip from say the neighborhood of Warsaw would bring in some produce to dispose of. At first, and for many months they came only for rations served out by officers of the government. The cart used to make the journey was a singular affair. I have seen these, so late as 1857. Kept as a relic of pioneer days. They were home-made in the broadest sense of the term. When some settler would cut down an unusually fine pine or hardwood tree of thirty to thirty-six inches diameter he would cause the fact to be made known. Others who wanted wheels for carts would come. With a cross-cut saw, an implement that in collusion with the chopping axe became responsible for nearly all the work accomplished for many years, slices of the tree were cut off, about six inches thick. Holes were bored with an augor in the centre of this disc, and burned out to the proper size. Why the burning?

Carbon, in the shape of what we call plumbago, is one of the very best of lubricators. Wood charcoal is a form of carbon that answers for some purposes. By burning out the hole, and so leaving it charred the wearing quality of the orifice, under a load was very materially improved. With a liberal coat of tallow there was very little friction. The axle was also of wood, with a washer of leather and pin driven outside the wheel to hold it on the axle. A rough floor of hewn boards, or boards whip-sawn was constructed, and with a pair of pole shafts the horse or ox, indeed in cases the family cow was pressed into service. Sex was of course considered, but needs must, so the cavalcade would jog along, creaking and wheezing, jolting and twisting, the driver and passenger, if one, hanging on and hitting the high spots with good nature and occasional profanity.

A Friend Indeed.

Away back in the early forties, and for many years afterwards, the postmaster at Peterborough was Mr. P. C. Carver. He could recount by rote the name, ear-marks, habits, location and circumstances of every settler for miles around. He was a sort of confidential friend to all. He wrote letters for those who could not write, and often paid the postage when the correspondent neglected to procure stamp. Everybody liked and trusted him. He was a sort of correspondence god-father to all. Many of the settlers had been out here for years, friends at home had lost direct connection and trace. Distance had dulled the longing for home, other interests had intervened. Some had moved away, gone over to the States to try for fortune. And in anxiety to get trace of relatives letters would come with all sorts of pleadings and becheeings written on the envelopes, addressed to the postmaster, urging delivery. Asking that unusual care be taken to find the person addressed, if at all possible. Mr. Carver kept a small book in which he copied many of these queerly addresed letters. He gave the book to my father, who was an intimate friend of Mr. Carver, and it lay around the house for years, but has been lost. I used at times when a boy to pore over the book, and wonder who the people were and if they would ever be found. So from recollection I reproduce a few of the queer addresses.

Luke Randalls,

Stephen Billet,

The custom was to print in the local papers, so soon as these came to be published a list of letters uncalled for. In looking over one of these lists in 1843, and I know at this date many of the names of people throughout the townships, I am surprised at the number of names that have disappeared. Names that once were familiar, but which are wiped off the slate, completely, so to speak.

Dennis Perdue's Boots.

Many stories are told of the uncertainties of delivery of mail. Here is one. Out in Douro lived Dennis Perdue. He was ever ready to do a good turn, in fact would do one for another person before he would do so for any member of his own family. Dennis was in town one winter day. He came to the office for mail, and presently took five letters for people out in the section where he lived, promising to deliver the letters without delay. That was of a Friday. Following Tuesday Dennis was in town again. He would buy for himself a pair of new boots, and went to McKellar's store, that stood where the Bank of Toronto now stands. He would try on a new pair, possibly several pairs before suited. Now the act of getting off a pair of long boots, especially if wet with snow water called for energy and strategy. The boot jack was a household implement, and a bandy weapon in all times of controversy. There was no boot jack in the store, so Dennis wrenched off the left boot. Five letters fell to the floor. "Bad cess to it, tare an ounds," said Dennis, "there be them five letters I've looked for everywhere." And public opinion, in view of the evidence there displayed, reached the conclusion that for four nights Dennis Perdue had slept with his boots on.

Somebody Guessed Right.

The Cheddar cheese which is brought into the rooms at Simpson's, Cheapside, London, each day at lunch time, had its height, girth and weight, correctly guessed by one of the diners the other day. The measurements were: Height 13 3-4 inches, girth 28 3-4 inches, and weight 24 1-2 pounds. This feat has only been accomplished nine times in twenty years. Old city men who have lunched regularly at the same restaurant for forty years make the three guesses each day. The cheese is brought in on a foot-high revolving pedestal, and placed in front of the chairman. Each guest is supplied with a slip of paper on which to record his guesses, and whenever any one succeeds the proprietor asks all the guests to drink the health of the winner in champagne. The custom is believed to be nearly two hundred years old, and before the luncheon, for which sixty-five places are set at three tables, the chairman invariably says grace.

SPECIAL CORNER FOR AFTER DINNER READERS

HER TITIAN RIVAL

Story of a Vivacious Red-Haired Maid

By Martha Cobb Sanford

"Wanted, a talented and vivacious young woman fond of children and of art to accompany mother and son abroad. Must have red hair."

"Well, of all things!" exclaimed Zephine Holliday. "What a funny advertisement, and if it doesn't hit me off to a T!"

She read it over again, as if to convince herself that it was really not an optical illusion. Then she settled down to think it over.

A large half packed trunk stood open before her, and about her on table, chairs and floor were piled all her worldly accessories, for Zephine was to start the next day for a distant western city, where she had accepted a position as a teacher.

There seemed nothing else to do now that the college course was over, and there were no surplus funds in the family exchequer.

"I'll answer that ad. in person," Zephine announced to the trunk, whose expansive yawn indicated expressively its amazement. "A kindergarten of one somehow sounds more attractive than a boarding school full of scatter brained girls."

When Zephine rang the Maxwell bell that afternoon at the address given in the advertisement she looked captivating enough to adorn any European party, no matter how fastidious its constituents. Her smart little autumn hat and her trig tailor costume both toned in harmoniously with the gold bronze of her hair that blew about coquettishly in the stirring breeze.

After sending up her card Zephine, with a half conscious sigh of appreciation, sank down into the cushioned depths of a luxurious easy chair to await the presence of the mysterious mother. When the latter entered the drawing room Zephine gazed upon her with frank admiration. She was stately and beautiful and above all undeniably motherly.

"You came in answer to my advertisement in the morning paper?" she asked. Her sweet naturalness quite banished all Zephine's embarrassment.

"Yes. I—I thought I would like to know more about it," the girl answered cautiously.

"You are fond of art, Miss Holliday—do you paint?"

"I am not an artist, if that is what you mean, but I am very fond of pictures and paint a little for my own amusement. Do you wish me to teach your son how to paint, Mrs. Maxwell? I'm afraid"—

"Oh, no, indeed; just help him out a bit now and then with a suggestion. He likes to have his own way about doing things, only he needs some one who is in sympathy with his little fads and fancies. You like children, do you not, Miss Holliday? Of course that is essential."

"I can't live without them," Zephine replied with glowing enthusiasm. And how could she? If it were not for children her chances of earning a livelihood would be small indeed!

"If you are vivacious I do not need to ask," commented Mrs. Maxwell, glancing at Zephine with genuine approval. "I like to have Ralph have lively companionship. He's so stirring himself. He leads me altogether too merry a chase."

"But why is red hair essential?" Zephine finally plucked up sufficient courage to inquire, at the same time blushing bewitchingly.

Mrs. Maxwell laughed softly.

"Oh, that's just to satisfy one of Ralph's whims. He's so cranky since he got over his long illness, poor boy, that we do all we can to please him in every little way. And he simply dotes on red hair. Why, he always paints women with red hair, and last Christmas, when we were selecting a doll for a little girl friend of his, he insisted on her having red hair."

Zephine joined in the laugh and almost forgot her misgivings over the prospect of her handling this "cranky" and evidently spoiled son of an overfond mother, who frankly acknowledged that she couldn't handle him herself.

When the arrangements were finally concluded Zephine walked home in a daze. She brought herself back to reality long enough, however, to send a telegram to the distant boarding school, which she would never enlighten with her fonds of knowledge after all.

"Well," she announced to the hospitable trunk, which still gaped in astonishment when she returned, "it's lucky my clothes are all in order. Think of it, we start for Europe, old trunk, day after tomorrow, you and I—and Ralph and Ralph's mother," she added in a subdued anticlimax. "I wish I'd seen the kid. I know he's incorrigible."

The day for sailing was ideally fair. Mrs. Maxwell met Zephine at the steamer and accompanied her to her stateroom, establishing herself comfortably there with much motherly kindness.

"After the farewells are over you and Ralph must get acquainted," she said, hastening back to the deck.

Zephine herself had a few goodbys to wave. Indeed, she was a central figure of attraction as she stood at the rail of the steamer waving her handkerchief gayly, all unconscious of her picturesqueness as the sun crept under the brim of her hat and made a bright glory of her hair.

"By George, isn't she a stunner!"

Zephine could not help hear a young man near her exclaim.

She blushed with confusion and was relieved to see her patroness approaching.

"Let me introduce my son Ralph," Mrs. Maxwell said proudly, laying her hand on the arm of the young man who had just complimented Zephine so spontaneously. "I expect you two to get on famously together."

Ralph extended his hand with willing cordiality, but Zephine stood transfixed with astonishment. At last she looked at Mrs. Maxwell appealingly.

"I thought he was a little boy," she gasped helplessly.

The explanations that followed were chaotic at best. Mrs. Maxwell supposed, of course, that Zephine knew of her son, Ralph Maxwell, the artist, the popular portrait painter of children and modern madonnas. Why, had she not mentioned especially how he painted all women with red hair? That is why she had thought it would give him particular pleasure to have the third member of their party possess this distinctive mark of beauty.

And as for Ralph—why, he himself had been entirely ignorant of the whole plot until that very morning, when his mother had revealed it to him, telling him with boundless enthusiasm that she had asked Miss Holliday, a charming young woman, to accompany them on their trip so that he would have some one to share his art enthusiasm with and to join him in his tireless jaunts in search of picturesque children to pose for him.

While this rapid fire of elucidation was going on Zephine looked from one to the other in her effort to comprehend the situation. Finally she burst out laughing—a trifle hysterical perhaps—but still it was the vivacious Zephine coming to her rescue.

Mrs. Maxwell sighed and smiled all at once.

"Oh, I'm so glad we all understand each other now. And I know we're going to be the best of friends."

With this optimistic assertion she turned to greet an old acquaintance.

"And so you thought I was a kid," laughed Ralph, looking at Zephine with undisguised admiration. "Well, I am pretty much of a one. You'll have to take me in hand just the same. I may not mind promptly sometimes, but that will be because I'm oblivious to everything save the glory of your hair."

"It's dyed. I did it to get the job," replied Zephine, as she turned and left the young man staring blankly after her.

• • • • • • •

On the last day out Zephine sat curled up comfortably in her steamer chair, pretending to read. Ralph sat not far off sketching her, as she very well knew.

"When we get settled in the studio I shall make a portrait of you, Miss Holliday—that is, if you are willing."

"Then I shall be both a dyed and painted lady," she laughed teasingly, "an irresistible combination."

Ralph made no reply, but gazed at her so steadily that at last Zephine was compelled to raise her eyes.

"I could love you in spite of either," was the unexpected declaration that he made in response to her questioning glance, "but fortunately I'm not put to the test. All the dyes in the world couldn't produce the matchless brightness and beauty of your hair, dear. Why did you try to deceive me, Zephine?"

"Were you deceived?"

"For a day or two, because you shocked me into it. You haven't told me why yet."

"Oh, because you annoyed me that very first day by making love to my hair. Everybody does. It's my rival, and I—I wanted you to make love to me."

"And didn't I do it the very next day?"

Zephine looked at him indulgently.

"Yes, and every day since. You're every bit the incorrigible boy I imagined you."

"Only this incorrigible boy is in love with his teacher," answered Ralph, stealing hold of her warm little hand beneath the steamer rug.

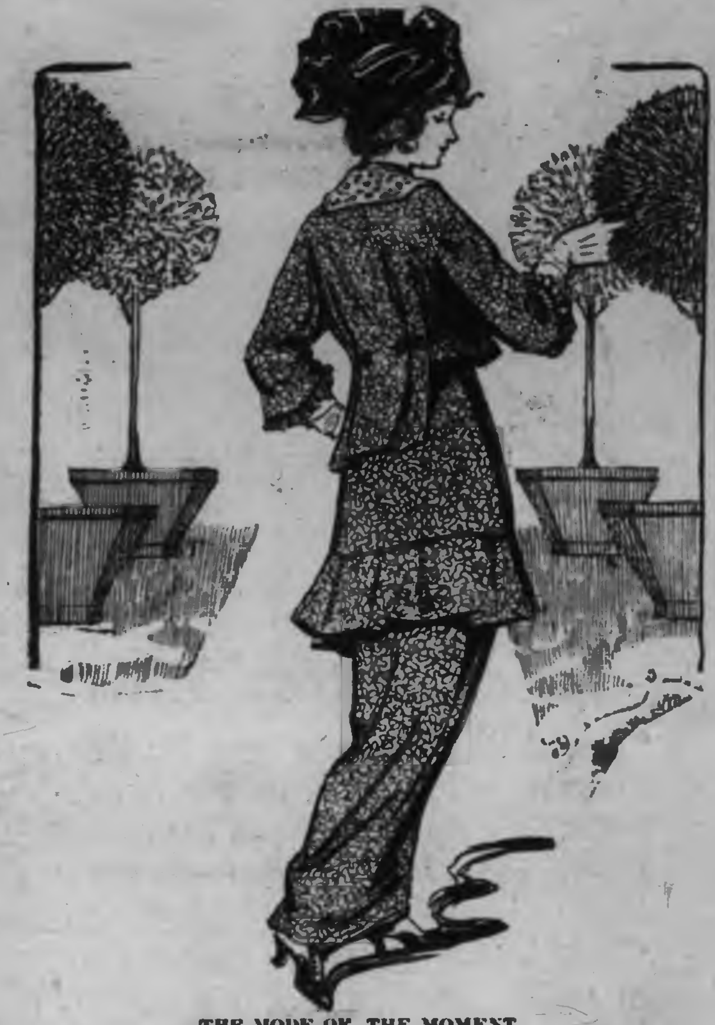
LATEST FROM DAME FASHION



THE MODE OF THE MOMENT.

The most modish touches of the moment are delightfully assembled in this dressy suit of printed Egyptian crepe, a silk that has found great favor in Paris this spring because of its heavy drapable qualities. The short jacket, loose in front, the peplum skirt, the slender type of buttoned boot and the flaring taffeta hat mark the latest fashions. A light spring touch is given in the short sleeves, the collar of batiste embroidery, and the embroidered silk gloves.

SANDWICHES FOR LENT

How to Prepare Two Dainty and Nourishing Foods For Luncheon or Tea.

With Lent coming on apace, the question of suitable and attractive food in which meat is no factor begins to occupy the mind of the housewife. For luncheon or the small informal Lenten tea the novel sandwiches in which these requirements are met will be appreciated. Recipes are given here for two dainty sandwiches.

To make sardine or anchovy sandwiches with canapes, says the Boston Cooking School Magazine, pound the flesh of the fish in a wooden bowl until smooth; if convenient add the sifted yolks of two or more hard cooked eggs and again pound until smooth; season with paprika, salt if necessary, and press through a sieve; add chopped pimentos and truffles. Have ready one-fourth the measure of rich cream; beat this stiff and fold into the fish mixture; add salt and pepper as needed and use as a sandwich filling. Garnish the plate of sandwiches with three or four canapes or open sandwiches. For these toast the halves of crackers. When cold spread with the fish mixture, rounding it slightly to dome shape; make smooth with a silver knife and draw the knife through the center of the surface to make a design; fill this with chopped truffles and set a few bits of pimento on the edge.

SARDINE AND CHEESE SANDWICHES.

To prepare cream cheese sandwiches with canapes, mash Neuchatel or Philadelphia cream cheese to a smooth paste and fold into it enough stiff beaten cream to make a mixture that will flow easily through a pastry bag and tube. Spread entire wheat bread made with whole filberts with creamed butter and cheese; set one or two preserved strawberries or bar le duc on the cheese and cover with a second piece of bread spread lightly with butter and the cheese mixture. Garnish the plate of sandwiches with three or four open sandwiches. To make these, pipe a ring of the cheese mixture on toasted halves of crackers and set a strawberry or currant in the center and at each side.

New Linen Shoe Bag.

An Austrian linen shoe bag trimmed with a band of Porto Rican embroidery which is worked into a design spelling "Shoes" costs $1. It is well and durably made in spite of its small price and is useful for any one who spends week ends or other time visiting.

DAMES AND DAUGHTERS.

Mrs. Francis Bowes Sayre, who was Jessie Woodrow Wilson, has eight hats.

Mrs. Gertrude M. Benham, an English girl, has succeeded in crossing Africa with only a cookboy and porters as her escort.

One of the newest arts to be taken up by women is that of bookbinding, and the latest entry into the art is Mrs. James Montgomery Flagg, wife of the artist, who has already twenty beautiful hand tooled volumes to her credit.

Miss Anna J. Cannon, who has well under way the task of cataloguing star plates at the Harvard astronomical observatory, has come to be known as the most distinguished woman astronomical worker in the world. She is a native of Delaware and in the course of her work has discovered 150 variable stars.

Hampton Court palace may become the home of Lady Scott, widow of the south pole explorer, King George, it is said, having decided to make the offer. These apartments are occupied principally by the widows of men who have greatly distinguished themselves in the service of the country in a naval, military or civil capacity.

In the Art World.

To Victor D. Brenner, the sculptor and designer of the Lincoln cents, has been awarded the order for new work in granite and bronze for the entrance to Schenley park, Pittsburgh, in honor of Mrs. Schenley.

Peter A. Gross, dean of the American old school artist colony of Paris, has returned to this country after an absence of thirty-seven years, bringing with him an art collection valued at $800,000. Mr. Gross had his first canvas hung in Paris in 1883 and has since missed only one year, when he was in Nice.

Nicola Marschall, said to have designed the flag of the Confederacy and the gray uniform as well, is still hale and hearty at the advanced age of eighty-four. At the time the war began he had a studio at Marion, Ala., and upon request painted a flag design, following which came the details of the uniform. He is still a resident of the south.

Courtesy of Traffic Police — Wedding Presents a Tax on Purse Strings — Society of Soured Spinsters Will Institute Annual Reception and Distribution of Gifts

Dear Elsa—I have just finished reading a delightfully characteristic letter from Charlotte S. You possibly remember my telling you that several years ago she decided to leave the rush and bustle of New York for the simple life in a charming little California town. That the exchange of residence has been a happy one the following, quoted from her letter, abundantly proves:

"Well, how is little old New York? It seems to be able to worry along without me somehow, though, of course, there must be a lack somewhere if people only stopped long enough to notice it.

"My, how wild and woolly I'll feel if I ever get back! But do you know that I, a bred in the bone Gothamite, have grown to like this place even better than the 'old town'? You see, I know so many people whose interests are one with mine, and it seems as though I was more a part of it all than I was in the old New York life. You can hardly imagine the extent of civic pride the people out here have, so much more than I ever noticed in the east."

Civic pride! I've been hunting for the last half hour in my bureau of sentiment to find some feeling of municipal elation lurking in my soul, and the only real emotion I seem to carry about with me is an unbounded admiration for the splendid public servants—the traffic policemen—who aid life and limb at the congested intersections of the city.

What would one's life be worth, say at Forty-second street and Seventh avenue were it not for the two stalwart bluecoats who command the reckless taxi drivers bent upon mowing down inoffensive pedestrians and the general flotsam and jetsam of traffic to stand still at the mere motion of a hand?

Really, these "bobbies" put to shame poor old Canute's ineffectual order to Neptune requesting the waves to stop rolling. Yes, herein lies my civic pride—New York's squadron police—and these guardsmen are the particular envy, too, of a man I knew, one well favored by the gods, but possessed of the usual innate perverseness, whose greatest earthly ambition is to be the "big guy bluecoat" stationed at Fifth avenue and Thirty-fourth street, who holds up Mrs. Astorbilt's motorcar and undauntedly bids Mr. Couponcutter lower his auto speed while driving to his banks to do more paper chopping. And the amusing part of it all is that this man, who has not outgrown his boyish enthusiasms, is so utterly unfit physically for the job, being possessed of much more pugnacity than brawn.

Speaking of unfitness, here am I in a state of entire financial collapse, having indulged too freely in post holiday bargains, being called upon for another wedding present. The daughter of a business friend of Dick's is foolish enough to add matrimony to her other attractions. And the gift in question is obliged to be something that will "do the family credit."

You, of course, know, my dear, how far away are the good old days when a book or homemade gift, backed by friendly thoughts, was considered all sufficing by the wealthiest bride.

Not content with the wedding present, there's the engagement gift to be provided for the girl friend who is contemplating the fatal step. The moment one hears of Mary or Dorothy's engagement one must hunt up some "lovely" gift as a contribution to the future menage. It may be a porcelain cup and saucer, a decorative rug, a picture or a vase or some hand embroidered piece of linen. But, whatever is offered, it does not absolve the donor from the necessity of giving a wedding present in due course.

An unattached girl I know predicts that soon a society of soured spinsters will institute an annual reception and distribution of gifts to compensate them for the amount of hard cash they have expended on wedding presents for their friends.

In continental countries less ceremony is observed about wedding gifts. Among the peasantry in some parts of Germany laurel leaves and bouquets are brought as offerings to the bride, a fashion which might well be followed in higher circles.

Dick says he wishes he had been a native of the William Tell country when he had to purchase my engagement ring, for in Switzerland no special engagement ring is given by the young man to his fiancee. A gold wedding ring worn on the third finger of the right hand serves in that capacity as a betrothal ring, being transferred to the third finger of the left hand when the marriage takes place.

Speaking of fingers, mine are stiff with cold. It is a freezing day, and I have scribbled this scrawl huddled over the radiator. There is some unwritten law among apartment house janitors that the steam heat goes down with the thermometer. Why this is thusly please explain to yours perishingly, MABEL.

COLONIAL SILVER FOR SPRING BRIDE

Modern Ware Reproductions of Old Designs

Colonial silver is, owing to its simplicity, "the" correct thing in tableware at this time. Each piece has the paneled sides and the simple classic lines unbroken by any ornamentation save the single engraved initial in old English text.

Silver of this kind will make very acceptable gifts for the spring bride. The quaint old time baking dishes with the paneled lids, the compotes and tall salt cups, the "well and tree" platters with their delicate thread line borders, all are as attractive as can be.

Even the flat serving pieces have the long, straight handles with just a slight flare at the top. Those who designed them intended that they should be strong as well as beautiful.

The candlesticks are patterned after the old colonial ones of pewter which held the big, thick bayberry candles. Some of them are double, the outer covering being of pierced silver. The bases are very wide and flat and there are high colonial handles.

Some of them have the silver snuffers fastened at one side. These candlesticks are very decorative and form quaint ornaments for the dining room furnished in colonial style.

In the shops one sees duplicates of the old fashioned cake baskets which our mothers had before us and which we promptly relegated to the attic when we took a hand at managing the house.

The silver mounted muffin and bonbon carriers are again in vogue, and certainly they are pretty and convenient things for graceful serving at afternoon tea.

The carriers come in two, three or four tiers and hold cut crystal dishes for olives, almonds or salted nuts or Royal Worcester or Doulton plates for the muffins or sandwiches.

The English wares are all very popular, particularly Sheffield plate, which bears as honored a name as though it were sterling.

The real old Sheffield is silver plated on copper, and the copper, after a time, has been known to peep through, so that many people buy a modern form of Sheffield which is plated on nickel and which will not show up the occasional scratch.

The English shell shaped serving dishes with the old fashioned linings of frosted glass are very quaint. The combination of silver and glass gives an opalescent appearance that is most attractive. The butter ball dishes of cut crystal in silver settings form a very pleasing feature of a daintily set table.

How a Little Girl Made a Valentine for Her Papa

GAVE HIM A GLAD SURPRISE

Novel and Pretty Idea of a Bright Little Lass—Origin of St. Valentine Customs—Anecdote of Abraham Lincoln, Great War President.

This is the story of what a girl named May did last St. Valentine's day. When she went to breakfast that morning she found a valentine beside her plate. It was from her papa, who had gone to business before May arose from bed. Here is what her papa said in rime:

MAY'S VALENTINE TO PAPA.

Here's to my little maid,
 Whom I love well.
All her sweet, winsome ways
 I cannot tell.

I am her sweetheart true,
 And she is mine.
She is the girl I choose
 My valentine.

Of course May was delighted and planned a surprise for papa. After much thought she hit upon an idea. She made a great heart out of white paper, and when her father entered the door that evening she thrust her head through the paper heart and said, "Here is your valentine!" You may be sure her father was pleased with such a pretty valentine.

St. Valentine's Day.

Of all our festal days that of St. Valentine is perhaps the one about which the least is known. Not even historians agree as to its origin. It may surprise you somewhat to learn that there were two St. Valentines, and on the church calendar their births and deeds are now celebrated the same day.

But how these two saints could ever have been associated with the customs now in vogue on their day is the despair of historians, for they were austere men who could not possibly have been one bit concerned with the sending and receiving of love freighted messages, much less the "comic" ones which have in late years become so large a part of the exchange of St. Valentine greetings.

The first of these two saints was a bishop of the church in Greece. He is said to have healed the son of a rhetorician, named Croton, who was seriously ill.

The second St. Valentine was one of the popes or bishops of Rome in the early days of the Claudian persecution. He, too, effected a miraculous cure, for while in prison he restored the sight of his keeper's daughter. Despite that, alas, he was finally executed.

Riddles.

Why are crockery ware dealers unlike all other shopkeepers? Because it won't do for them to crack up their goods.

Why is swearing like an ill fitting coat? Because it's a bad habit.

Tom went out, his dog with him. He went not before, behind nor on one side of him. Then where did he go? On the other side.

Why must chimney sweeping be a very agreeable business? Because it suits (soots) every one who tries it.

In what color should a secret be kept? Inviolate (in violet).

What is always behind time? The back of a clock.

Which is the more, six dozen dozen or half a dozen dozen? Six dozen dozen are seventy-two dozen, but a half a dozen dozen are six dozen.

A farmer had a duck in front of two ducks, a duck behind two ducks and a duck between two ducks. How many ducks were there? Three.

Lincoln's Quick Wit.

Many anecdotes about President Lincoln have been told and written. The following is characteristic:

One day Mr. Lincoln and a number of men were discussing how long a man's legs should be. One man said so long, and another said a different length. Finally they asked Mr. Lincoln.

"Well," he said, "I haven't thought much about it, but I think a man's legs ought to be long enough to reach the floor."

My Valentines.

Grandma and I made valentines—
I painted, and she drew the lines.
A herd of sheep turned out bright red.
I meant to make them white instead!
She said 'twas just the setting sun
That cast a glow on every one.
A flock of geese I meant for gray
Are navy blue, as plain as day!
But grandma said 'twas twilight grim
When they flew home, so they looked dim.
So when I try with all my might Grandma can always make things right.

NEW KITCHEN DEVICES.

It Is Well to Be Wary in Trying Many Innovations.

One of the tests of efficiency in a factory is to have no unnecessary equipment, no article which has not been tested and proved useful. The efficient housewife realizes the force of this wisdom in her plant as well.

There are numberless patent devices on the market and new ones being invented every day. On a trip through the kitchen department of many large stores the unwary housewife is beset on every side by alluring demonstrators, who proudly proclaim the marvels of the labor saving articles they exhibit. But if she buys things that have not been tested she will soon have on her hands dishwashers which only succeed in breaking the dishes and potato parers which crumble up into bits of useless tin after short use, can openers which refuse to open anything, and her only recourse will be to throw these failures into the scrap heap.

The wise housewife will have learned her lesson by this experience and will begin again along different lines. She will buy her kitchen utensils and home equipment generally at a reliable store whose very name precludes the idea of cheap and uncertain articles being carried.

The housewife may go watch the process of any article she desires to purchase and be instructed in its use, and before purchasing any article, whether expensive or cheap and especially those which are essentially labor saving, it is certainly reassuring to know that it has been proved to be of value by experienced people.

Cleaning Polished Floors.

When cleaning polished or parquet floorings or linoleum which has been beeswaxed a good idea is to tie a large soft duster around a broom, going over the floor carefully with it, taking up the dust without causing any to fly about as one does when using a hair broom and sweeping in the usual way.

This done, remove the duster and in its place cover the broom with a bag made of flannelette or any material you may have, sewing several thicknesses over the part to come in contact with the floor. The legs of old stockings will do for the padding or, better still, an old piece of velvet or plush.

Then hold the broom slantwise, rubbing backward and forward all over the floor, thus polishing the surface without the trouble of stooping.

Occasionally the floor will need a coat of floor polish, but the method described is easy, and one is able to get over the work in a few minutes in a perfectly satisfactory manner.

Flippant Flings.

Kansas has a double standard, and married men convicted of drunkenness are fined twice as much as single men charged with the same offense. This is hardly fair in view of the fact that single men have no excuse for getting intoxicated.—Rochester Post-Express.

The fact just disclosed that William H. Taft has thirty-seven pairs of trousers, each of which was made to fit his unexpurgated size last year, throws a flood of light on the scarcity of material of men's clothing in the market and the consequent high prices for "gents' goods" at that time.—New York World.

NATIVES OF GIRARA, NEW GUINEA, CLAIM DECENT FROM A DOG

Remarkable stories of the curious natives inhabiting Papua and various parts of New Guinea are related by Mr. W. N. Beaver, resident magistrate in the western division of New Guinea, who is now in England on leave. Mr. Beaver has been nine years in New Guinea, and for the past five years has been in charge of the western district, comprising some 30,000 square miles, and extending to the boundary of Dutch New Guinea. He has been engaged in all the important expeditions in that portion of the territory. Just before leaving Port Moresby he met Mr. John Henry Werner, who has been killed and eaten by the natives. Mr. Werner, who was a middle-aged man, had just arrived from Australia, and told Mr. Beaver that he was then going on an expedition in search of radium in the Gulf division of Papua, part of which is very wild.

Two of the most interesting expeditions in which Mr. Beaver took part were to the Girara country, which, for three parts of the year, is almost entirely submerged. The inhabitants are practically unknown, and in their ceremonies and customs are quite distinct from other New Guinea natives.

The expedition was despatched to punish the people for a number of murders committed in an inter-tribal raid. In conversation with a Reuter's representative, Mr. Beaver gave some interesting particulars of these people who, he said, claim descent from a dog. They possess five totems which are drawn on all their houses. Their villages are erected on hillocks so as to be clear of the water, and the people of each village inhabit one large common house, sometimes as much as four to five hundred feet long and sixty to eighty feet in width. The centre of this huge building is a kind of common hall which is only used by the men while the walls of the structure are divided into cubicles in three or four floors, access to which is gained by means of ladders.

The women are not allowed to enter the building by the same door as the men. These Girara people, though head hunters, are not cannibals. The men have a curious habit of dressing their hair on their faces, so that it appears like a length of rope. The Girara, who are the only people in Papua who cover their heads, wear head-dress consisting of a fibre hat.

Mr. Beaver states that a great deal of sorcery prevails in the western division. In the wilder parts of the country the chief is himself a head sorcerer. He claims to be able to separate his spirit from his body, and to send it on various missions, including that of killing people. Quite recently a number of sorcerers went by night to the house of a native on whom they cast a spell by pointing at him a human bone. They afterwards murdered their victim, and after his burial dug up the grave, eating portions of the body for purposes of sorcery.

To the west of the Fly River there is a general belief in a kind of clairvoyance. Mr. Beaver also recently explored a large tract of country in Dutch New Guinea where the majority of the people had never before been visited. These were very primitive folk, armed with bows and arrows. They assume a fierce aspect by inserting kangaroo claws in their nostrils and by wearing in their hair artificial tails extending to their waists. In one district, near Daru, it is the custom to brand, by means of a mark on the shoulder or breast, girl children with the mark of the man they are subsequently to marry. Notwithstanding the great care taken by the Government, cannibalism still exists, and Mr. Beaver narrates that on several occasions he has come upon the scene of a cannibal feast, with the remains of human flesh lying around.

A Disillusioned Politician.

Mr. A. E. W. Mason is one of a number of disillusioned politicians who have tasted the joys of life in the British House of Commons and found them very flat. He discovered that the House "increases one's knowledge and narrows one's point of view," and is, moreover, fatal to a novelist's work.

It was Lord Morley who described the life of an M.P. at St. Stephen's as "business without work and idleness without rest," which admirably sums up the situation. He himself entirely disappeared from the House when writing his famous "Life of Gladstone." Lawyers are about the only class who can combine successfully their daily tasks with their Parliamentary duties. Hence the number who sit on both sides of the House. But there is not a man in the assembly who produces imaginative work of the first rank, and our foremost writers steer clear of the sterile atmosphere of St. Stephen's.

She Helped Her Father.

"I help my father in his work as much as I can. I think it is the duty of every girl to try to help her father," says Miss Olwen Lloyd George, the eldest daughter of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Miss George, who is a charming, happy-looking girl of twenty-one, has taken over a sort of press department of the new Land Campaign. Her chief industry is the allocation and classification of all the press cuttings concerning her father, and when one considers the hundreds, and perhaps thousands, of references to the Chancellor of the Exchequer which are made in newspapers and magazines every week, the arduous nature of her task is apparent. Miss George goes to the Treasury every morning to get the newspapers, and she sorts them out and keeps a record in press-cutting books.

WHEN HE HUSTLED

The Goods Were Delivered When Called For

By ABBIE F. RANSOM

She stood by the window watching the retreating figure of the young man, too much absorbed to notice the entrance of her father until he was by her side. Without speaking she leaned her arm upon his shoulder and thus they watched until the young man was no longer in sight. Then her father spoke:

"It won't do, Elsie. You've got to tell him I said so. He isn't the one."

The hand which had been caressing his hair was thrown out with indignant protest and the girl faced him, pained surprise in every curve of the dainty lips.

"What's wrong, father?" she demanded. Why haven't you said that before?"

The gray eyes gazing into her own held far more kindness than his words. They were full of stern decision.

"Because I haven't been sure. Now I am. Fred Denton can never support a wife. He isn't able to now, and he never will be. You've got to call it off."

"But, father," she began.

"It's no use, Elsie," he interrupted. "It isn't in him. A young man to succeed nowadays must get out and hustle, and that's something Fred Denton will never do. He spends his time in his office reading, reading, reading, and that never brought patients to a doctor yet.

"Why, the other night there was an accident at Cedar Glens. Kensett was mixed up in it. Had a drunken chauffeur, and the whole car came precious near going over the cliff. Would have gone if it hadn't been for a young med. who understood sprinting and who saved it in the nick of time.

"As it was, Kensett got off with a broken collar bone, a friend of his came home with a smashed hand, and—well, you read it in the papers. That sawbones is fixed for life just because he happened to be on the spot and knew what to do and how to do it. But it wasn't Denton. He was in his office reading up on the microbes of leprosy or some other outlandish disease."

"Fred was just telling me," began Elsie when her father cut her short.

"Then, too, he had a little money in one of the banks. Where's that? He wasn't content to let it stay where it was. He asked me what I thought about Aurora stocks, and I told him they weren't worth the matches to burn 'em, but he invested in them. Where are they now? Whew! Now you see 'em and now you don't."

"Father, if you would only listen"—

"Listen to what—the same old story of love in a flat and your $500 a year? I've got a deal on hand and won't be home before tomorrow night. In the meantime you just give me that ring on your finger and I'll return it to Fred Denton, M. D."

Slowly his daughter drew off the ring, a curious expression growing in her eyes, one which her father was quick to observe.

"See here, Elsie," he said as he took it from her. "I want you to promise that if he calls you won't see him until I give you permission—that is, if I ever do."

"You are very unjust, father. If you would only listen"—

"I've waited too long already," he responded, starting off. "Mind your promise, Elsie. There isn't to be any more of this nonsense."

"Perhaps there'll be more instead of less," she murmured as the door closed behind him. Then she went up the stairs to her room with a tread as full of decision as his tones had been.

It didn't take long for her to reappear dressed for the street, and fifteen minutes later she surprised a certain young man who was very busily engaged doing nothing at all in a pleasantly furnished office of a downtown business block.

"He wouldn't give me a chance to say a single word," she concluded indignantly.

Fred Denton smiled complacently into her flushed face. There was no trace of the despondent lover about him.

"We won't try to explain," he said. "Suppose you take this trip to New York with me this morning? You look very bride-y," he continued—"white dress, white hat, white shoes and gloves. Really, Elsie, one would almost believe that you had dressed purposely for a wedding trip."

"Fred Denton, you don't believe"—She paused, crimson to the very ears. Then she added irrelevantly:

"Father ran away with mother; I've heard him tell about it time and time again."

"Come on!" Denton cried.

"It doesn't seem right, Fred. Father has always been the kindest, the best father in existence, and he is doing this just because he loves me."

"That's just the reason we're doing what we are," was his ready response. "Come, dear; we haven't a moment to lose. You go to the Wilson avenue station and take the train from there while I'll trolley it to Woodlawn and get on board at that place. Then no one will see us together until after we leave the city and we are all O. K."

At Woodlawn station she saw Fred Denton swing himself upon the platform of the smoker, but the city streets were far behind them, and the train was speeding fast through the country meadows before he joined her. When he did he held in his hand a little circlet of gold whose center held a very familiar diamond. Slipping into the seat beside her, he said:

"Better put this upon your finger. It's been away from its place too long already."

"Why, Fred," she gasped, "where did you get that?"

"Your father handed it to me a few moments ago."

"Father! Where is he? Where did you see him?"

"He's back there in the smoker," he replied nonchalantly. "He gave it to me just after the train left Woodlawn."

Her face went white.

"What did you say?"

"Nothing. I was passing through the car on my way to you when he hailed me and said in the pleasantest tone imaginable: 'Mr. Denton, I promised my daughter to give you this package. There isn't to be any answer.' I took it from him, with an 'All right,' and came on into the next car, sitting where I knew he could see me from his seat. Then I waited awhile and hunted you up."

"He told me this morning he was going away for a couple of days." Tears were very near her eyes. "Oh, Fred, if he should see us and try to make a scene! What will we do?"

"See here, little girl," said Denton tenderly, "you've got your engagement ring back again, haven't you? Now, in the course of three or four hours I intend to supplement that with a plain gold band. Don't you worry. Aurora stocks may have gone up in hot air, but I didn't. Your father wants you to marry a hustler. Now, you just watch me deliver the goods when he calls for them."

"First call for dinner! First call for dinner!" cried the porter on his way to the smoker.

"Shall we go now," Denton asked, "or do you prefer waiting a little?"

"Father always likes an early dinner," she answered, "and he'll be sure to pass through here very soon. There won't be so many in the dining car. Let's go now."

They found a vacant table in the far end of the dining car and seated themselves there. Scarcely had their order been served when Kingston entered. Elsie, raising her eyes, saw him standing in the aisle, and she gave a little sigh, which made Denton look quickly around. A moment more and he was by their table.

"I will sit here," he said to the waiter. "Bring my plate to this table." When they were alone he spoke again, this time to his daughter.

"Is this the way you keep promises?"

"You did not ask me to promise not to meet Fred," she answered, "so just after you left I went to his office."

"Then what?" he asked.

"Then," said Fred, before Elsie could speak, "I asked Elsie to take this trip with me, and she consented."

"Huh!" grunted Kingston. "A wedding trip, I presume."

"Hardly that," responded Denton, "as we are not married yet. We just expect to be when we reach New York."

"Then what?" The question was asked in a tone which made Elsie quiver.

"Nothing much," Denton answered coolly, "only Aurora stocks brought me in a neat three thousand more than I put into them, and yesterday I secured a position as house physician in the Woodlawn sanitarium, and that's good for a couple of thousand a year."

"What's that?" asked Kingston sharply.

"You see, Kensett is one of the most influential men connected with that institution, and the little service I was fortunate enough to render the night that drunken chauffeur tried to kill him brought me the place. I've worked for it for three months, but that clinched it, sure."

"I thought that was a fellow by the name of Lent," growled Kingston.

"That's what the papers said. I didn't care whether they called me Lent or Easter so long as I got the place and Elsie with it."

Three hours later in the vestry of the Little Church Around the Corner the bride was given away by her father.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Danger Signals.

We are sometimes told that headache, giddiness, pains in the region of the spine, weak digestion and a host of similar complaints are preliminary signs of oncoming breakdown. Yet, while they often accompany the latter condition, they are also significant of many other ailments, which have nothing to do with it.

The fact that we suffer from any one of them does not imply that we are threatened with a breakdown. For all that, it is not well to neglect these complaints, for it is certain that if we have any tendency to nervous trouble they will hasten it on.

One thing it is necessary to emphasize. If any symptom of this sort—and the remark applies especially to headaches—is found consistently to come on during the hours of work, alleviating after work is over for the day, it should be taken as a danger signal, for when any one's occupation brings on a headache the complaint is much more likely to be due to some weakness of the nervous system than to any fault in digestion or eyesight. And the same applies to many other symptoms also.

And tells his ma the sprinkling cart
Came by and wet his hair.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

UNAPPRECIATED.

THERE are some forms of pleasure
That nearer touch the spot
Than tending to the furnace
That it may keep things hot,
Some phases of enjoyment
That please me, on the whole,
Much more than sifting ashes
Or putting on the coal.

I'd rather light my meerschaum
And in a cozy nook
Sit down and scan the pages
Of some old fashioned book
Or read the daily papers
And thus keep up to date,
Than go into the basement
And monkey with the grate.

I know that useful labor
A man should not despise,
But still I can't help thinking
My wife needs exercise.
If I should sprain my ankle
In going down the stair
She always would regret it,
And she needs no more care.

Of course I'd rather do it
Than sit around and freeze
Or have a family racket
Because I strive to please,
But, as for light amusement,
It's not the very trick
If I could have the choosing
That I would rise and pick.

Supplying a Need.

"I have been thinking," said the monkey, combing his beard thoughtfully with a discarded tomato can that hunters had left behind—"I have been thinking of the possibilities of a great commercial enterprise."

"What is it?" asked the hippo without evincing too much curiosity.

"You know it has been the grief of the leopard's life that he cannot change his spots."

"Yes; I have often heard him making a roar about it."

"Well, we will import a carload of reliable hair dye of all colors and let him be a striped hyena if he wants to."

Twenty years ago on the First of March next, a well-known resident of this city took out at age 28 a 10 pay 20 year endowment policy for $1,000, No. 43860, in the Sun Life of Canada.

The premium he paid on the participating plan was ...	$69.30
The premium he paid on the non-par plan was ..	62.25
Extra paid for profits for 10 years ..	$7.05

He received in cash at the end of 20 years, $1,279.25, that is, the $70.50 extra that he paid for profits yielded him $279.25, almost 400 per cent.

Would you not like something like that?

Or, he could draw out $736.45 in cash, which is $43.45 more than all he paid in, and receive a fully paid-up participating policy for life.

You can never obtain such results as these on the non-participating plan unless you die and die early, so that the price will not become too high.

SIR GEORGE ROSS DIED ON THE STROKE OF EIGHT

None of His Family Present When His Spirit Took Its Flight

Canadian Press Despatch.

TORONTO, March 7.—Sir George Ross died on the stroke of eight o'clock this morning, having been unconscious for several days. The only persons present at the bedside at the actual moment of dissolution were Dr. Garnett Greer, of the hospital staff, a nurse, and Sir George's valet.

The improvement which was noticed in the patient's condition yesterday was maintained until midnight, when the expected relapse came. The family were immediately summoned, and Dr. Goldie and assistant physicians made an attempt by the use of stimulants to delay the approach of the inevitable end. Efforts were successful for few hours.

Lady Ross returned home with the understanding she would be called should any sharp change take place. Shortly before eight o'clock the patient began to sink rapidly, and the family were summoned. Lady Ross arrived at the hospital at eight o'clock, but Sir George had passed away before she reached his room.

THE LATE SIR GEO. ROSS.

Like many other noted men in Canada, the Hon. Sir George William Ross was a school teacher in his early life; also a moulder of public opinion as a newspaper editor and writer. Subsequently he became a lawyer, and statesman, whose fame was not by any means confined to the province in which most of his political victories were won.

BORN NEAR NAIRN.

Born in the county of Middlesex, Ont., near Nairn, on September 18, 1841, the future Premier of Ontario received the groundwork of his education in the public schools, afterwards passing through the Toronto Normal School and Albert College, Belleville, from which he received the degree of LL.B. in 1883. The honorary degree of LL.D. was afterwards bestowed on him by these universities; St. Andrew's, Scotland, 1888; Victoria, 1892; Toronto University, 1894; McMaster, 1902; and Queen's, Kingston, 1903.

THREE TIMES WEDDED.

He was married three times. First to Christina Campbell, in 1862; secondly to Catherine Boston, in 1875; and in May, 1907, to Mildred Peel, sister of the late Paul Peel, a Canadian artist whose fame extended far beyond the land of his birth, by whom he is survived.

IN COMMONS FIRST.

Hon. Sir George W. Ross took his first plunge into the maelstrom of politics in 1872, when he was elected to the House of Commons for the west riding of Middlesex, which be represented till November, 1883, when he entered Ontario Provincial politics, taking the portfolio of Eudcation under Premier Mowat. In the Legislature he also represented West Middlesex.

On Premier Hardy's retirement in October, 1899, Sir George succeeded him as premier, which office he held till the final defeat of his party at the polls in February, 1905; afterwards acting as leader of the Opposition in the Legislature till his appointment to the Senate, of which body he was elected Liberal leader in the fall of 1912, on the death of Sir Richard Cartwright.

During his career as a schoolmaster and inspector, the future premier of Ontario studied law; became a solicitor in 1883, and was called to the bar in 1887.

SOME PUBLIC OFFICES.

Some of the positions held by Sir George during his busy life, which brought him prominently into the public eye, were: Chairman of the Fielding Testimonial Committee, which raised $120,000 for that statesman; member of the Quebec Interprovincial Conference, 1897; vice-president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, 1897; president of the Dominion Educational Association; represented Ontario at the coronation of King Edward and Queen Alexandra, in Westminster Abbey, in 1902; called to the Senate by Earl Grey in January, 1907, and was knighted by King George in 1910.

The meeting last night in St. Alphonsus Lyceum of St. Peter's Ladies Literary Society, was featured by a very interesting and instructive address on the Panama Canal by Mr. A. J. Grant. In that gentleman's hands the subject was treated in the best possile manner and his personal experiences while visiting in that section of the country were listened to with pleasure.

The meeting was further marked by the following musical numbers:

Vocal solo—Miss A. McCabe.

Piano solo—Miss B. Goslin.

Piano solo—Miss M. Longergan.

Miss M. A. O'Connell occupied the chair.

GRAHAM ON HIS DEFENCE

Ex-Minister Says N.T.R. Report is Partizan

TORONTO, March 7—Hon. George P. Graham, ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, was the guest of honor at the banquet of the Liberals of the University of Toronto last night. During his speech to the students, Hon. Mr. Graham dealt with the Staunton-Gutelius report on the cost of the N.T.R.

The speaker declared that Messrs. Lynch-Staunton and Gutelius was both enemies of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and that the public would consider Mr. Lynch-Staunton too violent a partisan to take much notice of any report of a political character be might make. He had even dropped his pen whilst he was in the act of preparing the report and gone into South Bruce to help the Conservatives in the bye-election there. In appointing those two men the Government had not appointed a royal commission, for neither of them had taken an oath that their findings would be according to the evidence. In one instance Mr. Lynch-Staunton had actually appeared in the role of counsel for the commission, and signed his name to documents as counsel for the commission.

"From one end of this report to the other," said Mr. Graham "there is not one line that breathes a symptom of independent consideration or finding. The report is for the most part an expression recklessly regardless of law, fact, principle, railway practice or commonsense.

"Small mistakes and small leaks may have occurred; they are liable to occur as long as man is mortal; but I challenge any man to prove that I have spent one dollar of the one hundred and sixty millions for self-interest."

RELIEF OFFICER TO PASS INDIGENT CASES BEBORE ENTRANCE TO HOSPITAL

CITY TO PAY $1 PER DAY FOR EACH CASE

Must Also Meet Deficit, Which However is Not Expected—Old Accounts Settled

Beginning January 1st of this year, the city will pay $1 per day for every indigent patient who receives treatment at Nicholl's Hospital. The city will give a grant probably between $2,500 and $3,000 in a lump sum. If this does not cover the account the city will have to make up the deficit.

As for St. Joseph's Hospital, the payment per patient will be the same, but the city does not have to meet a deficit, as in the case of the former hospital. Definite arrangement with the officials of St. Joseph's will not be made until Council has a conference with the officials.

Investigate First.

Relief Officer Miller will investigate all cases before the patients are taken to the hospital. The general rule in the past has been to investigate after entrance to the institution. Under the new plan, it is felt that the number of indigent patients will be materially cut down and the whole scheme will be more satisfactory for both the city and the hospitals.

Mr. Miller will have more work to do, and it is quite likely that he will receive an increase in salary.

Rev. Jas. Rollins, John Crane, W. H. Hill, and Wm. Madill, members of the board of management, waited on the committee of the whole Council last night, and Mr. Rollins explained the situation. The hospital was in need of money; the hospital belonged to the city, and by the charter taken over by the city, it was provided that the city must make good for any deficits. As Mr. Rollins explained, the hospital occupies a similar position to the Board of Education, and just as the School trustees are authorized to secure from council sufficient money to operate the schools which are owned by the city, so the hospital board can make the same demands.

Swap Accounts.

The Board also agreed to "swap" accounts with the city, which had an account for $1,500 for sewer work against the hospital. The hospital had a big account for indigent cases since September, 1912. Both items are cleaned off the slate, and the city starts paying for indigent cases from the first of this year.

WANT SECOND BUILDING.

The Council of Omemee want a new armoury and they have passed a resolution urging the Minister of Militia to replace the building destroyed by fire.

MISSIONARY SLIDES.

Carranza's Cause in Mexico Hangs in the Balance

WASHINGTON, March 7.—High officials of the administration believe the fortunes of the constitutionalist movement in Mexico hang largely in the balance, and that only a clear explanation of the Benton incident and satisfactory reparation will regain for them the prestige they had acquired as persons desiring the restoration of constitutional government in their country.

Should the Benton case remain unsettled in the event the cause of the constitutionalists is triumphant, there are strong intimations heard in official circles that Great Britain would refuse to recognize Carranza, if he were elected. It is also taken for granted by officials that Great Britain might influence other European nations to withhold recognition until reparation is made for injury done foreigners. Administration officials here in discussing that phase of the situation yesterday pointed out that on the Benton case seemed to depend the political future of Gen. Carranza.

Rebels Defeated at Sea.

MEXICO CITY, March 7. — Despatches received by the Government yesterday said that in the naval engagement Wednesday at Topolobampo between the Federal gunboats Morelos and Guerrero and the rebel gunbot Tampico, the Tampico was forced to retire badly crippled. The rebel boat, according to the despatches, was attempting to escape when the Federal boats fired on her. No mention of the Tampico's defection has yet been published here.

Defeat In Battle.

MEXICO CITY, March 7.—Three thousand rebels under Gen. Toribio Ortega, who were moving towards Torreon, were defeated Thursday between Conejos and Escolan, according to advices received at the War Department. The despatch said four hundred rebels were killed in the engagement. The Federal forces, commanded by Gen. Ricardo Pena, numbered seven hundred.

COMMISSIONER IS ASSAILLED

Rowell Makes Attack on Work of License official.

The license administration of the province came in for criticism from Mr. Rowell. Men of the proper calibre, he sa'd, were not encouraged to serve on local license commissions. The case of William Smuck, of East Elgin, was quoted by the leader of the Opposition. He had been informed by a Conservative, a former resident of the riding, that Smuck had been a hotelkeeper for thirteen years, and that although there were many applicants for the new position of license inspector Smuck had been chosen. There had been many prominent temperance Conservatives who would have acted and several had protested against the appointment.

The Minister, in replying, said that the work of the several commissions was thorough and creditable to the department. As far as he knew the case in question the appointment was merely one where rivalry had resulted in some ill-feeling. The department had kept in close touch with this riding and it had been found that Smuck was giving diligent attention to his duties such as had never before been experienced in the riding. The fact that he was a former licensee was no reason for his dismissal as long as his work was well done.

HOTEL NATIONAL LICENSE.

The application for a license for the Hotel National will likely be decided at the meeting of the Commissioners to-night. It is understood the Ministerial Association sent the evidence to the department at Toronto,

HIP POCKET DISPENSARY

Orillia Blind-Piggers Jailed for Three and Four Months

ORILLIA, Ont. March 7.—Edward ("Pug") Warner came up before Magistrate Clark for selling liquor without a license and was found guilty. This being the second offence he goes to Barrie for four months with hard labor. Alex. Wilson also appeared on a charge of selling liquor without a license. $200 and costs or three months in county jail for him. He decided to sojourn in the rural quietness of Barrie until June. Edward Steele and Michael Lane, of Atherley, came up in the afternoon charged with stealing a case of whiskey, containing six bottles, out of the station at Atherley on September 28th last. Steele was sentenced to six months in central prison, Toronto, with hard labour, and Lane, two months in the county goal.

KILLED BY TRIBESMEN

British Officer Meets Death in the Soudan

LONDON, March 7. — News has just reached here of two exciting scrimmages by British troops and tribesmen in Africa. In the first of these Major James Lionel Joyce Coary of the Connaught Rangers, who was awarded the Distinguished Service Order medal in South Africa in 1900, was killed in a fight with outlaws near Wadai Hadi, in the Soudan. Major Coary was in charge of a contingent of an Arab battalion of the Egyptian army. The leaders of the outlaws and other members of the band were killed, and the remainder made prisoners. Besides Major Coary, the British troops lost three men killed and four wounded.

In the second affair Lieut. Jones was shot through both legs during an attack on a stockade by Abyssinian raiders, in British East Africa. When Lieut. Jones was wounded all his native soldiers, except three orderlies, fled. [illegible] command retook the stockade by assault.

Two of the soldiers bore the wounded officer [illegible] miles to headquarters. [illegible], however, [illegible] in, and a doctor was sent for. The doctor was absent, and a journey to Narobi was started. On the way the stretcher was charged by two rhinos, which the faithful orderlies killed. At Nyiri a doctor and nurse were found.

The muscles of one of Jones' legs was so shrunk that the leg will always be four inches shorter than the other, and Jones will be a cripple for life. The doctors regard Jones' arrival at the hospital alive as miraculous.

MOUSSEAU TO TRAVEL

Quebec M.P.P. to Gradually Regain His Health

MONTREAL, March 7.—J. Gustave Mousseau, the Quebec Provincial member found guilty of accepting bribes to pass legislation, is reported as gradually regaining his health. It was stated yesterday by Dr. Dumontigny that Mr. Mousseau, with his family, had left for a mountain resort to recuperate, but the doctor refused to state where this was. It is understood that if Mr. Mousseau's health continues to improve he will leave early in April for an extended tour in Europe.

L. B. Berard, ex-Legislative Councillor, who also accepted bribes, is now on his way to the continent.

Sir George's Condition the Same.

TORONTO, March 7.—Sir George Ross still lingers in a state of stupor, although he is said to be resting quietly. It is now practically concluded that the distinguished patient will not recover from his present illness, but he may live for a few days longer, or, should a sudden relapse set in after yesterday's apparent slight improvement, death may result in a few hours.

Sir James Whitney, on the other hand, has so far improved that it is thought advisable to allow him to return to his home on St. George street Monday morning.

Eleven Months For Bigamy.

BRACEBRIDGE, March 7. — Dymaise Paquette, a young Frenchman charged with bigamy, was tried in Chambers by Judge Mahaffy here yesterday afternoon. He pleaded guilty and was sentenced to eleven months in the Central Prison. This is the same term as was given Millie Draper for bigamy a week ago. Paquette was married at Brule Lake four years ago, and to Miss Johnson of Huntsville last July.

On Premier Hardy's retirement in October, 1899, Sir George succeeded him as premier, which office he held till the final defeat of his party at the polls in February, 1905; afterwards acting as leader of the Opposition in the Legislature till his appointment to the Senate, of which body he was elected Liberal leader in the fall of 1912, on the death of Sir Richard Cartwright.

During his career as a schoolmaster and inspector, the future premier of Ontario studied law; became a solicitor in 1883, and was called to the bar in 1887.

SOME PUBLIC OFFICES.

Some of the positions held by Sir George during his busy life, which brought him prominently into the public eye, were: Chairman of the Fielding Testimonial Committee, which raised $120,000 for that statesman; member of the Quebec Inter-provincial Conference, 1897; vice-president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, 1897; president of the Dominion Educational Association; represented Ontario at the coronation of King Edward and Queen Alexandra, in Westminster Abbey, in 1902; called to the Senate by Earl Grey in January, 1907, and was knighted by King George in 1910.

GRAHAM ON HIS DEFENCE

Ex-Minister Says N.T.R. Report is Partizan

TORONTO, March 7—Hon. George P. Graham, ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, was the guest of honor at the banquet of the Liberals of the University of Toronto last night. During his speech to the students, Hon. Mr. Graham dealt with the Staunton-Gutelius report on the cost of the N.T.R.

The speaker declared that Messrs. Lynch-Staunton and Gutelius was both enemies of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and that the public would consider Mr. Lynch-Staunton too violent a partisan to take much notice of any report of a political character he might make. He had even dropped his pen whilst he was in the act of preparing the report and gone into South Bruce to help the Conservatives in the bye-election there. In appointing those two men the Government had not appointed a royal commission, for neither of them had taken an oath that their findings would be according to the evidence. In one instance Mr. Lynch-Staunton had actually appeared in the role of counsel for the commission, and signed his name to documents as counsel for the commission.

"From one end of this report to the other," said Mr. Graham "there is not one line that breathes a symptom of independent consideration or finding. The report is for the most part an expression recklessly regardless of law, fact, principle, railway practice or commonsense.

"Small mistakes and small leaks may have occurred; they are liable to occur as long as man is mortal; but I challenge any man to prove that I have spent one dollar of the one hundred and sixty millions for self-interest."

RELIEF OFFICER TO PASS INDIGENT CASES BEBORE ENTRANCE TO HOSPITAL

CITY TO PAY $1 PER DAY FOR EACH CASE

Must Also Meet Deficit, Which However is Not Expected—Old Accounts Settled

Beginning January 1st of this year, the city will pay $1 per day for every indigent patient who receives treatment at Nicholl's Hospital. The city will give a grant probably between $2,500 and $3,000 in a lump sum. If this does not cover the account the city will have to make up the deficit.

As for St. Joseph's Hospital, the payment per patient will be the same, but the city does not have to meet a deficit, as in the case of the former hospital. Definite arrangement with the officials of St. Joseph's will not be made until Council has a conference with the officials.

Investigate First.

Relief Officer Miller will investigate all cases before the patients are taken to the hospital. The general rule in the past has been to investigate after entrance to the institution. Under the new plan, it is felt that the number of indigent patients will be materially cut down and the whole scheme will be more satisfactory for both the city and the hospitals.

Mr. Miller will have more work to do, and it is quite likely that he will receive an increase in salary.

Rev. Jas. Rollins, John Crane, W. H. Hill, and Wm. Madill, members of the board of management, waited on the committee of the whole Council last night, and Mr. Rollins explained the situation. The hospital was in need of money; the hospital belonged to the city, and by the charter taken over by the city, it was provided that the city must make good for any deficits. As Mr. Rollins explained, the hospital occupies a similar position to the Board of Education, and just as the School trustees are authorized to secure from council sufficient money to operate the schools which are owned by the city, so the hospital board can make the same demands.

Swap Accounts.

The Board also agreed to "swap" accounts with the city, which had an account for $1,500 for sewer work against the hospital. The hospital had a big account for indigent cases since September, 1912. Both items are cleaned off the slate, and the city starts paying for indigent cases from the first of this year.

Carranza's Cause in Mexico Hangs in the Balance

WASHINGTON, March 7. — High officials of the administration believe the fortunes of the constitutionalist movement in Mexico hang largely in the balance, and that only a clear explanation of the Benton incident and satisfactory reparation will regain for them the prestige they had acquired as persons desiring the restoration of constitutional government in their country.

Should the Benton case remain unsettled in the event the cause of the constitutionalists is triumphant, there are strong intimations heard in official circles that Great Britain would refuse to recognize Carranza, if he were elected. It is also taken for granted by officials that Great Britain might influence other European nations to withhold recognition until reparation is made for injury done foreigners. Administration officials here in discussing that phase of the situation yesterday pointed out that on the Benton case seemed to depend the political future of Gen. Carranza.

Rebels Defeated at Sea.

MEXICO CITY, March 7. — Despatches received by the Government yesterday said that in the naval engagement Wednesday at Topolobampo between the Federal gunboats Morelos and Guerrero and the rebel gunbot Tampico, the Tampico was forced to retire badly crippled. The rebel boat, according to the despatches, was attempting to escape when the Federal boats fired on her. No mention of the Tampico's defection has yet been published here.

COMMISSIONER IS ASSAILLED

Rowell Makes Attack on Work of License official.

The license administration of the province came in for criticism from Mr. Rowell. Men of the proper calibre, he said, were not encouraged to serve on local license commissions. The case of William Smuck, of East Elgin, was quoted by the leader of the Opposition. He had been informed by a Conservative, a former resident of the riding, that Smuck had been a hotelkeeper for thirteen years, and that although there were many applicants for the new position of license inspector Smuck had been chosen. There had been many prominent temperance Conservatives who would have acted and several had protested against the appointment.

The Minister, in replying, said that the work of the several commissions was thorough and creditable to the department. As far as he knew the case in question the appointment was merely one where rivalry had resulted in some ill-feeling. The department had kept in close touch with this riding and it had been found that Smuck was giving diligent attention to his duties such as had never before been experienced in the riding. The fact that he was a former licensee was no reason for his dismissal as long as his work was well done.

HOTEL NATIONAL LICENSE.

The application for a license for the Hotel National will likely be decided at the meeting of the Commissioners to-night. It is understood the Ministerial Association sent the evidence to the department at Toronto,

KILLED BY TRIBESMEN

British Officer Meets Death in the Soudan

LONDON, March 7. — News has just reached here of two exciting scrimmages by British troops and tribesmen in Africa. In the first of these Major James Lionel Joyce Conry of the Connaught Rangers, who was awarded the Distinguished Service Order medal in South Africa in 1900, was killed in a fight with outlaws near Wadai Hadi, in the Soudan. Major Coary was in charge of a contingent of an Arab battalion of the Egyptian army. The leaders of the outlaws and other members of the band were killed, and the remainder made prisoners. Besides Major Conry, the British troops lost three men killed and four wounded.

In the second affair Lieut. Jones was shot through both legs during an attack on a stockade by Abyssinian raiders in British East Africa. When Lieut. Jones was wounded all his native soldiers, except three orderlies, fled. [illegible] at Jones' command retook the stockade by assault.

Two of the soldiers bore the wounded officer [illegible] miles to [illegible] quarters. [illegible], however, [illegible] in, and a doctor was sent for. The doctor was absent, and a journey to Narobi was started. On the way the stretcher was charged by two rhinos, which the faithful orderlies killed. At Nyiri a doctor and nurse were found.

The muscles of one of Jones' legs was so shrunk that the leg will always be four inches shorter than the other, and Jones will be a cripple for life. The doctors regard Jones' arrival at the hospital alive as miraculous.

MOUSSEAU TO TRAVEL

Quebec M.P.P. to Gradually Regain His Health

MONTREAL, March 7.—J. Gustave Mousseau, the Quebec Provincial member found guilty of accepting bribes to pass legislation, is reported as gradually regaining his health. It was stated yesterday by Dr. [illegible] that Mr. Mousseau, with his family, had left for a mountain resort to recuperate, but the doctor refused to state where this was. It is understood that if Mr. Mousseau's health continues to improve he will leave early in April for an extended tour in Europe.

L. B. Berard, ex-Legislative Councillor, who also accepted bribes, is now on his way to the continent.

Sir George's Condition the Same.

TORONTO, March 7.—Sir George Ross still lingers in a state of stupor, although he is said to be resting quietly. It is now practically concluded that the distinguished patient will not recover from his present illness, but he may live for a few days longer, or, should a sudden relapse set in after yesterday's apparent slight improvement, death may result in a few hours.

Sir James Whitney, on the other hand, has so far improved that it is thought advisable to allow him to return to his home on St. George street Monday morning.

Eleven Months For Bigamy.

BRACEBRIDGE, March 7. — Dymaise Paquette, a young Frenchman charged with bigamy, was tried in Chambers by Judge Mahaffy here yesterday afternoon. He pleaded guilty and was sentenced to eleven months in the Central Prison. This is the same term as was given Millie Draper for bigamy a week ago. Paquette was married at Brule Lake four years ago, and to Miss Johnson of Huntsville last July.

PETERBOROUGH, SATURDAY, MARCH 7, 1914.

THE LATE HON. SIR GEORGE ROSS.

AFTER A LONG sickness, handicapped with age, Sir George Ross, Liberal leader of the Senate, has yielded to the call of death. He has occupied a prominent place in the public life of Canada, with what degree of achievement ,future historians will decide. Beginning life as a school teacher, and proceeding to Provincial politics, he became leader of the Liberal Party and Premier of Ontario. Following his defeat by the Conservatives, under the leadership of Sir James Whitney, he became a member of the Senate and leader of the Liberal side. His life was certainly not without its successes, and he was always a faithful advocate of the policy of the Liberal Party.

In his constant advocacy of Liberal policies, he fell short, however, of the standard of first rank public men. He lacked perspective. Had he shown more independence of the views of his immediate followers the Liberal party would not now be in so disorganized and discredited a condition. Thus he lacked the highest quality of leadership, that of dominating his followers with his own ideals and the necessity of making sacrifices for the public weal. Had he been a leader of the first rank he would have stemmed the abuses which characterized the closing days of his administration of Ontario politics. True, he had much to contend with; he had little in his own following on which he could rely and he was not entirely responsible for the fall of Liberalism in Ontario. Political parties come and go, "they have their exits and their entrances," such are the vicissitudes of time and fortune. But the Toronto Globe was once bold enough and singularly independent enough to state the right policy for the Liberal leader when it published its famous editorial on the necessity of cutting away the barnacles from the Liberal party. But Sir George Ross was never a surgeon and hence not the man to apply the knife when that was the only effective remedy, save a period in Opposition.

In the Senate, he exhibited the same gifts of forensic eloquence and the same inherant weakness that characterized his political life in the Ontario House. He spoke eloquently concerning the Empire and Canada's duty to share in its defence, yet when the time came for casting his vote, practically a deciding vote, for the government's emergency contribution, he lined up in support of the obstructionist policy of the Laurier Opposition. He was never above party. True, the Borden policy was a direct contradiction of the Liberal's imperial policy and we must be fair, and admit that the question of Canada's share in the defence of the Empire is capable of more than one viewpoint. But the Borden Government were not advocating a permanent policy, and Sir George, having spoken strongly on Canada's duty to share in the Empire's defence, refused to support the contribution. If for once he displayed inconsistency and a too faithful allegiance to his party, he never showed more openly his lack of the highest quality of a political leader to be above his party. Perhaps such an ideal is too high for Canadian politics. Let us hope that it is not so, and at the same time, that this man whose life was not without benefits to Canada, lived according to the light he had.

GOOD PROGRESS UNDER BORDEN GOVERNMENT.

THE REVIEW has just received the Annual Report of the Department of the Interior for 1913, and which contains some interesting details. Like most government reports its size is such as to take away one's appetite for reading and its attractiveness would not inspire enthusiasm save in the last few pages, which contain some fine half-tone illustrations of scenes in the Prairie Provinces and in British Columbia. However much the pictures may attract, the pages of solid type and figures contain the valuable information.

The total cash revenue has increased from $6,714,734 to $9,533,945, thus showing an advance of almost $3,000,000. The immigrant arrivals for the year established a high-water mark numbering over 400,000, which is almost 50,000 beyond the record of any preceding year. Of this large immigration 150,000 came from the British Isles and about 140,000 from the United States. The 34,000 homestead entries are considered to account for the settlement of over 80,000 people on the free lands of the West, and when there are added the large number who have purchased land in the Western Provinces and the thousands of farmers and farm labourers who have settled in other Provinces of the Dominion, it is evident that a considerable percentage of immigration continues to turn to agricultural pursuits.

The decrease in the number of homestead entries is partly due to the great demand for homestead lands and the consequent necessity of going farther from present transportation facilities, but due also to the increased capital brought to Canada by many settlers, particularly those from the United States, and which has enabled many to purchase land near railways and towns rather than homesteads in districts removed some distance from railways. Last year there were $337055 collected in homestead fees showing a decrease of $54,548.12. Some idea of the progress and settlement of Western Canada can be gained from the well arranged tables. Thus in the decade beginning with 1893, the total revenue was $10,924,636.66 while that of the decade ending with 1913 totalled $40,082,324.61. This money is raised from the sale of Dominion lands, school lands, seed grain, ordinance lands, fines and forfeitures, registration fees, casual revenue and Chinese immigration.

The report gives details of the progress made during the year in the exploration of the great, unexploited northland and the Peace River District. New surveys are being made together with maps of the new country. In the new territory added to the Province of Manitoba there is an estimated area of 18,000,000 acres of land fit for agriculture as yet untouched, while Northern Saskatchewan has 14,000,000 acres waiting for homesteader and railway. The work done in connection with the Forest Reserves is summarized, as well as that dealing with irrigation and stream measurements, dominion parks and water power and hydrographic surveys.

> "The reports from all sources show that contentment, optimism and progress prevail throughout the Dominion among old and new settlers alike, and this notwithstanding the period of financial depression during the latter months of the fiscal year."

Thus closes one of the most satisfactory reports ever presented to the Dominion House. It shows that the Borden administration is doing efficient work and is assisting in a very great measure the progress of Canada even in a time of liberal obstructionist methods and financial depression.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A REPORT states that the price of beef and mutton has risen so high in Montreal that horseflesh is being sold as such. There is nothing strange in that. We have never eaten horseflesh to our knowledge and have not therefore any a priori conception of its taste, but surely it is no worse than some of that strenuous beef we used to chew.

WE DO HOPE, when the Hydro matter is completed in Peterborough that some of the dark streets in the West end will be properly lighted.

THAT six by four white space in the Regina Daily Province entitled "King George at Opening of Parliament," may have been a futurist conception, but it was beyond us.

MONTREAL is too ambitious. They have tried to do everything that New Yorkers do; now they try to imitate Paris by eating horse flesh.

PEOPLE should not object to horse-flesh. It may be very good food. What we object to is "putting one over on us," by selling us mock steak off the nigh leg.

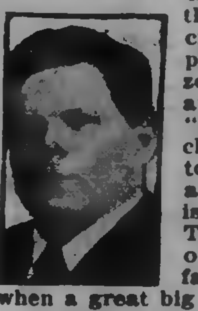
It is a significant admission for the Globe to make, that during the whole term of the Laurier regime, the alleged investigation of electoral corruption was merely a farce.

GOOD AND BAD BOOKS

By Walt Mason



The bookstores groan beneath the weight of books in jackets gay; they're mostly perishable freight that flourish for a day; they're mostly books by Oppenheim, or tales that treat of Sex, excursions in the world of crime, among the moral wrecks. And to the publishers we say: "Great Caesar and gadzooks! Why don't you get a hump on, pray, and publish decent books ?" They make reply: "We shall be glad when you yourselves have chased! We publish volumes, punk and bad, to suit the public taste. Just let the people show a wish for helpful books and fine, and we will issue tomes, ods fish, with truth in every line!" They'd have us think the people yearn for tales of bawds and thieves, for books so hot they fairly burn the hands that turn the leaves. But when a great big book arrives, a wholesome book and strong, booksellers have to draft their wives to wait upon the throng. Do people clamor for the muck and pass the good books up ? Let Winston Churchill tell what struck his "Inside of the Cup." There is a book that's clean and sane, a book with moral grand, and dealers rustled round in vain to meet the big demand. Folks buy the sloppy, trashy tales in carload lots, indeed, because (as many a buyer wails) there's little else to read.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

POLICE COMMISSIONERS.

Editor Review,—

Dear Sir,—I have not seen any comment on the recently published statement of the chairman of the Police Commissioners. Perhaps the letter sufficiently answers itself; it certainly reflects in no enviable manner on the author.

Apart from its absurd assumption and presumption that savor of the feudal period, its vituperative adjectives, its mixed metaphors, its profession of lofty disdain, its sudden fall to the literary level of questionable politics are things we may let pass with a smile of ridicule.

But when the author refers to our clergy as "yellow pulpiteers," he throws an insult in the face of a Christian community and it would be un-British to allow such a statement to go unchallenged. Had it been said by a bar-room politician, we could afford to let it pass, but coming from an official in the public service it is unpardonable.

Even were the clergy wrong on this subject, it is at least an ungentlemanly way of expressing a counter opinion.

I have not been one of the "yellow scribblers" nor am I criticising the conclusion of the police commissioners, but with thousands of Peterborough's truest and best citizens I criticize and censure the conduct of a public official who will use such language in the public press.

This matter should be reported to the Department of Justice, and is another strong indication that we need some better means than the party spoil system of filling important offices.

Yours truly,
BRITON.

Nietzsche Hated the Germans.

"Nietzsche's personal charm of manner," said Dr. Brandes, the Danish critic in a recent lecture, "was in strong contrast to the violence with which he attacked established institutions in his writings. His pet aversion was the Germans, and in his later books the word Teutonic stood for him for all that was evil. To dine with Germans, he said, gave him indigestion!

"This antipathy to his countrymen is closely paralleled in Byron's antipathy to Englishmen, Stendahl's to the French and Heine's to the Germans. It arose in Neitzsche's case from a disgust of humanity—a disgust which was best expressed by what the Greeks called misanthropy."—London Globe.

Birthdays of Note

SATURDAY, MARCH SEVENTH

The Hon. A. G. Mackay, Provincial Treasurer of Alberta and formerly leader of the Liberal party in Ontario, observes his fifty-fourth birthday to-day. He was for many years a prominent citizen of Owen Sound, where he practised law. Prior to that he was a schoolmaster. Always interested in politics and an officer of the local reform association, he entered the Ontario Legislature eleven years ago and just before the dissolution of the Ross Government had charge of the department of crown lands. Two years later he was selected to lead the opposition, resigning in 1911 in order to remove to Edmonton, where he now practises his profession. Soon after his arrival in the west he entered the Alberta Legislature and now holds cabinet rank under Premier Sifton.

SUNDAY, MARCH EIGHTH

Birthday congratulations are in order to-day to D'Arcy Scott, assistant chief commissioner of the Dominion Board of Railway Commissioners, who is now celebrating the completion of his forty-fourth year. Mr. Scott, as is generally known, is a son of the late Sir Richard W. Scott, former Secretary of State for Canada and was born in Ottawa County, Quebec. He was famous in his youth as a canoeist and twice was successful in winning the paddling championship of the Canadian Amateur Canoe Association. He was appointed to his present position while filling his second term as Mayor of Ottawa and has given six years of excellent service to the work of the Railway Board.

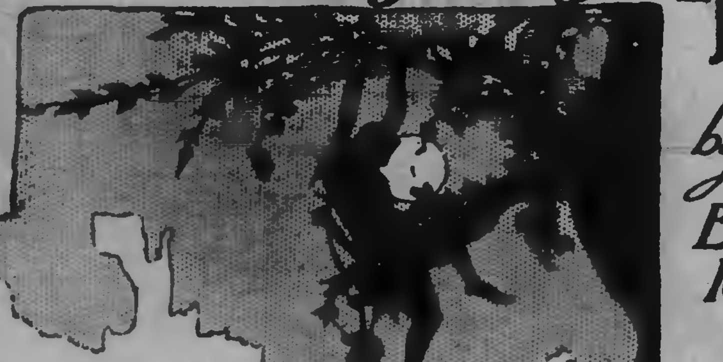
Tarzan of the Apes



by Edgar Rice Burroughs

Copyright, 1912, by the Frank A. Munsey company.

Professor Porter and Mr. Philander were deeply interested in examining the skeletons. The larger two they stated to have belonged to a male and female of one of the higher white races.

The smallest skeleton was given but passing attention, as its location in the crib left no doubt as to its having been the infant offspring of this unhappy couple.

As they were preparing the skeleton of the man for burial Clayton discovered a massive ring which had evidently encircled the man's finger at the time of his death, for one of the slender bones of the hand still lay within the golden bauble.

Picking it up to examine it, Clayton gave a cry of astonishment, for the ring bore the crest of the house of Greystoke.

At the same time Jane Porter discovered the books in the cupboard, and on opening to the fly leaf of one of them saw the name "John Clayton, London." In a second book, which she hurriedly examined, was the single name "Greystoke."

"Why, Mr. Clayton," she cried, "what does this mean? Here are the names of some of your own people in these books."

"And here," he replied gravely, "is the great ring of the house of Greystoke which has been lost since my uncle, John Clayton, the former Lord Greystoke, disappeared, presumably lost at sea."

"But how do you account for these things being here in this savage African jungle?" exclaimed the girl.

"There is but one way to account for it, Miss Porter," said Clayton. "The late Lord Greystoke was not drowned. He died here in this cabin, and this poor thing upon the floor is all that is mortal of him."

"Then this must have been Lady Greystoke," said Jane Porter reverently, indicating the mass of bones upon the bed.

"The beautiful Lady Alice," replied Clayton, "of whose many virtues and charms I often have heard my mother and father speak."

With reverence and solemnity the bodies of the late Lord and Lady Greystoke were buried beside their little African cabin, and between them was placed the tiny skeleton of the baby of Kala, the ape.

As Mr. Philander was placing the frail bones of the infant in a bit of sailcloth he examined the skull minutely. Then he called Professor Porter to his side, and the two argued in low tones for several minutes.

"Most remarkable, most remarkable," said Professor Porter.

"Bless me!" said Mr. Philander. "We must acquaint Mr. Clayton with our discovery at once."

"Tut, tut, Mr. Philander; tut, tut!" remonstrated Professor Archimedes Q. Porter. "Let the dead past bury its dead."

And so the white haired old man repeated the burial service over this strange grave, while his four companions stood with bowed and uncovered heads about him.

From the trees Tarzan of the apes watched this strange ceremony, but most of all he watched the sweet face and graceful figure of Jane Porter.

In his savage, untutored breast new emotions were stirring. He could not fathom them. He wondered why he felt so great an interest in these people—why he had gone to such pains to save the three men. But he did not wonder why he had torn Sabor from the tender flesh of the strange girl. He knew that she was created to be protected and that he was created to protect her.

When the grave had been filled with earth the little party turned back toward the cabin, and Esmeralda, still weeping copiously for the two she had never heard of before and who had been dead twenty years, chanced to glance toward the harbor. Instantly her tears ceased.

"Look at dem low down white trash out dere!" she shrilled, pointing toward the Arrow. "They all's a-desecratin' us right yere on dis yere perverted islan'."

Surely enough, the Arrow was being worked toward the open sea slowly through the harbor's entrance.

"They promised to leave us firearms and ammunition," said Clayton. "The merciless beasts!"

"It is the work of that fellow they call Snipes, I am sure," said Jane Porter. "King was a scoundrel, but he had a little sense of humanity. If they had not killed him I know that he would have seen that we were properly provided for before they left us to our fate."

"I regret that they did not visit us before sailing," said Professor Porter. "I had purposed requesting them to leave the treasure with us, as I shall be a ruined man if that is lost."

Jane looked at her father sadly.

"Never mind, dear," she said. "It wouldn't have done any good, because it is solely for the treasure that they killed their officers and landed us upon this awful shore."

Tarzan had seen the consternation depicted upon the faces of the little group as they witnessed the departure of the Arrow, so as the ship was a wonderful novelty to him in addition he determined to hasten out to the point of land at the north of the harbor's mouth and obtain a nearer view of the great boat, as well as to learn if possible the direction of its flight.

A very light land breeze was blowing, and the ship had been worked through the harbor's mouth under flying jib, fore and main royals and mizzen spanker, but now that they had cleared the point every available shred of canvas was being spread that she might stand out to sea as handily as possible.

Tarzan watched the graceful movements of the ship in rapt admiration and longed to be aboard her. Presently his keen eyes caught the faintest suspicion of smoke on the far northern horizon, and he wondered what the cause of it might be.

At about the same time the lookout on the Arrow must have discerned it, for in a few minutes Tarzan saw the sails being shifted. The ship came about, and presently he knew that she was coming back toward land.

At last the ship came up directly into the wind. The anchor was lowered; down came the sails. There was great scurrying about on deck.

A boat was lowered, and into the boat a great chest was placed. Then a dozen sailors bent to the oars and pulled rapidly toward the point where Tarzan crouched in the branches of a great tree.

In the stern of the boat, as it drew nearer, Tarzan saw the rat faced man.

It was but a few minutes later that the boat touched the beach. The men jumped out and lifted the great chest to the sand. They were on the north side of the point, so that their presence was concealed from those at the cabin.

The men argued angrily for a moment. Then the rat faced one, with several companions, ascended the low bluff on which stood the tree that concealed Tarzan. They looked about for several minutes.

"Here is a good place," said the rat faced sailor, indicating a spot beneath Tarzan's tree.

"It is as good as any," replied one of his companions. "If they catch us with the treasure aboard it will be confiscated anyway. We might as well bury it here on the chance that some of us will escape the gallows to enjoy it later."

The rat faced one now called to the men who had remained at the boat, and they came slowly up the bank carrying picks and shovels.

"Hurry—you!" cried Snipes.

"Stow it!" retorted one of the men in a surly tone. "You're no admiral, you shrimp!"

"I'm cap'n here, though, I'll have you to understand, you swab!" shrieked Snipes with a volley of oaths.

"Steady, boys," cautioned one of the men who had not spoken before. "It ain't goin' to get us nothin' by fightin' among ourselves."

"Right enough," replied the sailor who had resented Snipes' autocratic tones. "But by the same token it ain't a-goin' to get nobody nothin' to put on airs in this bloomin' company neither."

"You fellows dig here," said Snipes, indicating a spot beneath the tree. "And while you're diggin' Peter kin be a-makin' of a map of the location so's we kin find it again. You, Tom and Bill, take a couple more down and fetch up the chest."

"Wot are you a-goin' to do?" asked he of the previous altercation. "Just boss?"

"Git busy there!" growled Snipes. "You didn't think your cap'n was a-goin' to dig with a shovel, did you?"

The men all looked up angrily. None of them liked Snipes, and his disagreeable show of authority since he had murdered King, the real head and ringleader of the mutineers, had only added fuel to the flames of their hatred.

"Do you mean to say that you don't intend to take a shovel and lend a hand with this work?" asked Tarrant, the sailor who had before spoken.

"No," replied Snipes simply, fingering the butt of his revolver.

"Then," shouted Tarrant, "if you won't take a shovel you'll take a pickax!"

With the words he raised his pick above his head and with a mighty blow buried the point in Snipes' brain.

For a moment the men stood silently looking at the result of their fellow's grim humor. Then one of them spoke.

"Served the rat jolly well right," he said.

One of the others commenced to ply his pick to the ground. The soil was soft, and he threw aside the pick and grasped a shovel; then the others joined him. There was no further comment on the killing, but the men worked in a better frame of mind than they had since Snipes had assumed command.

When they had a trench of ample size to bury the chest Tarrant suggested that they enlarge it and inter Snipes' body on top of the chest.

"It might 'elp fool any as 'appened to be diggin' 'erabouts," he explained.

The others saw the cunning of the suggestion, and so the trench was lengthened to accommodate the corpse, and in the center a deeper hole was excavated for the box, which was first wrapped in sailcloth and then lowered to its place, which brought its top about a foot below the bottom of the grave. Earth was shoveled in and tamped down about the chest until the bottom of the grave showed level and uniform.

Two of the men then rolled the rat faced corpse unceremoniously into the grave after first stripping it of its weapons and various other articles which the several members of the party coveted.

They then filled the grave with earth and tramped upon it until it would hold no more.

The balance of the loose earth was thrown far and wide and a mass of dead undergrowth spread in as natural a manner as possible over the new made grave to obliterate all signs of the ground having been disturbed.

Their work done, the sailors returned to the small boat and pulled off rapidly toward the Arrow.

The breeze had increased considerably, and as the smoke upon the horizon was now plainly discernible in considerable volume the mutineers lost no time in getting under full sail and bearing away toward the southwest.

Tarzan wondered what the chest they had buried contained. If they did not wish it why did they not merely throw it into the water? That would have been much easier.

Ah, he thought, but they do wish it. They have hidden it here because they intend returning for it later.

He dropped to the ground and commenced to examine the earth about the excavation. He was looking to see if these creatures had dropped anything which he might like to own. Soon he discovered a spade hidden by the underbrush which they had laid upon the grave.

He seized it and attempted to use it as he had seen the sailors do. It was awkward work and hurt his bare feet, but he persevered until he had partially uncovered the body. This he dragged from the grave and laid to one side.

Then he continued digging until he had unearthed the chest. This also he dragged to the side of the corpse. Then he filled in the smaller hole below the grave, replaced the body and the earth around and above it, covered it over with underbrush and returned to the chest.

Lesson X.—First Quarter, For March 8, 1914.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Luke xii, 35-48. Memory Verses, 47, 48—Golden Text, Luke xii, 37—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

The secret of deliverance from the snares of this present evil age is the attitude of expecting the return of the Lord Jesus, according to the teaching of the epistles, "waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ;" "serving the Living and True God and waiting for His Son from heaven;" "looking for that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of the great God, even our Saviour Jesus Christ" (I Cor. i, 7; I Thess. i, 9, 10; Tit. ii, 13).

In the gospels, as in the Old Testament, the coming of Christ is generally, if not always, His coming in glory to set up His kingdom; His coming in vengeance upon His enemies and with redemption for Israel, as in Deut. xxxii, 39-43; Isa. xxxiv, 1; xxxv, 4; lxiii, 1; Matt. xxiv, 30; xxv, 31. His coming for His church, previous to His coming in glory to judge the nations was specially revealed to Paul, as we saw in our last lesson.

The reference to the return from the wedding in verse 36 makes us think of the order of events in Rev. xix, where the coming in glory with His saints follows the marriage of the Lamb; also in Matt. xxv, 1, in both the Syriac and Vulgate versions, the reading is that the ten virgins went forth to meet "the bridegroom and the bride," so that the virgins cannot represent the church nor can the "all nations" of Matt. xxv, 32, include the church. The church must be seen with Him as the Bridegroom and with Him when He shall come in His glory (Matt. xxv, 1, 31; Col. iii, 4). The coming of Christ as the Son of Man is His coming with His saints to begin His reign of righteousness and peace on earth (Matt. xxvi, 64; Dan. vii, 13, 14; Isa. xxxii, 1, 17).

Having considered the interpretation, we must not lose the application to our own hearts as set forth in such words in our lesson as loins girded, lights burning, watching, ready, doing (35, 37, 40, 42, 43). The loins girded takes us back to Ex. xii, 11, and the night of the first passover and on to Eph. vi, 14; I Pet. i, 13; "loins girt about with truth;" "gird up the loins of your mind, be sober and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ."

Watching reminds us of the thrice repeated "watch" of Mark xiii, 33, 35, 37; the reproof in Gethsemane: "Couldest not thou watch one hour? Watch ye and pray lest ye enter into temptation" (Mark xiv, 37, 38); the praying and watching of Eph. vi, 18; Col. iv, 2; the "Watch ye; stand fast in the faith" of I Cor. xvi, 13, and the watching to see what He will say (Hab ii, 1). The word "ready" reminds us that on His part "all things are now ready," but there is a fullness of "salvation ready to be revealed in the last time" (Luke xiv, 17; I Pet. i, 5).

Believers should always be ready to preach the gospel, ready to every good work, ready to be absent from the body or to be caught up to meet the Lord in the air (Rom. i, 15; Tit. iii, 1; Acts xxi, 13; Rev. xix, 7; I Thess. iv, 16-18). As to "doing" (verse 43), while there can be no doing on our part to obtain salvation (Rom. iv, 5; Eph. ii, 8, 9), we are saved in order to good works which God has prepared for us to walk in, works which are good and profitable unto men when they are God working in us both to will and to do of His good pleasure (Eph. ii, 10; Tit. iii, 8; Phil. ii, 13).

The coming of Christ will not be to His waiting ones as a thief, for we are not in darkness, but children of light and of the day (I Thess. v, 4, 5). We are stewards of the manifold grace of God and of the mysteries of God, and the one thing required of a steward is faithfulness (I Cor. iv, 1, 2; I Pet. iv, 10). All who handle the word of God must be careful to give meat in due season, not only milk for babes, but meat as people are able to bear it (I Cor. iii, 1-3; Heb. v, 12-14; John xvi, 12).

We are stewards in reference to all with which our Lord has intrusted us, whether talents or wealth or the gospel, and we must give an account of our stewardship. Every one of us shall give account of himself to God (Rom. xiv, 12). This will be at the judgment seat of Christ, where only saved ones shall be to be tried for their service since they became believers. We need for all our service such words as these: "That God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ." Not as pleasing men, but God, who trieth our hearts" (I Pet. iv, 11; I Thess. ii, 4; II Tim. ii, 15).

As Joseph shared the throne with Pharaoh, so we are to share the rule with Christ in His kingdom, but whether over few or many cities will depend upon our faithfulness as stewards now (Rev. iii, 21; v, 10; Luke xix, 17, 19). Joseph was ruler over all Egypt; Christ shall rule over all the world (Ps. lxxii, 11).

There are those called servants who are only outwardly servants, like the Pharisees. Such shall find their place with the unbelievers. However they may profess to have known Christ, He will say to them: "I never knew you Depart from Me ye that work iniquity" (Matt. vii, 21-23).

That there will be different degrees of punishment seems evident from verses 47, 48.

Some men who pose as high-fliers land with a dull, sickening ker-chug.

ANTICIPATION.

THE summer vacation!
  Oh, ain't it the goods
To pack your belongings
  And hike for the woods,
To bind up your tackle
  Secure in a strap
And make for the region
  Where fish are on tap?

A grand dissipation
  It seems in advance
To revel in nature
  Where butterflies dance,
Yourself on the greensward
  To carelessly fling
And dine on cold lunches
  Or any old thing.

With maidens of twenty
  To willfully flirt,
To faithfully follow
  The swish of a skirt
Or take them out boating
  At even and show
The way that a fellow
  With muscle can row—

Vacation is surely
  A vision most rare,
A dream of contentment
  When summer is fair,
And, though it may never
  Come up to the mark,
In sweet contemplation
  It's surely a lark.

The Crucial Moment.

"Would you mind telling me how you became a successful man?" asked the visitor.

"Why, I couldn't talk about that now," answered the man with a worried look. "It's too early in life."

"But you have made a fortune and engineered great enterprises and secured the confidence and applause of your people and"—

"Oh, yes, but that's all in my regular work. Haven't you heard about what we're doing now?"

"Why—er—I can't say that I have."

"We're going to give a party. It'll be one of the biggest ever given, and you'll have to wait till my wife sees how I behave before it's decided whether I'm a success or not."

A Predicament.

"Hoot mon!" shouted the Scotch contractor who is putting up a fine house in the suburbs. "I canna manage wi' ye! Gang home, mon."

"What for?"

"Dinna I tell ye to tak' the hurlbarra an' trun'le thae stanes doon there, an' ye stude an' glower't at me. I canna manage wi' ye when ye dinna understan' English."

Sustaining the Judicial Dignity.

Arizona Sam—Great doin's up ter the courthouse! The jedge sent Lawyer Limberjaw ter jail fur contempt jest bureause he drawed out a flask an' drinked while he was argyin' a case.

Deadshot Dave—Yer don't say! An' they call that contempt, eh?

Arizona Sam—Why, yes. Ye see, he never axed the court ter jine him.

Ancient Article.

"Waiter," shouted the irate guest, what kind of a steak do you call this?"

"That is a rare steak, sir," replied the waiter, with a polite bow. "In fact, a very rare steak."

"H'm! A rare antique, eh? Why don't you present it to some museum?"

Couldn't Be Both.

The Lady—The lady whose name you gave as reference, Delia, tells me you were not always truthful and obedient.

The Cook—No, ma'am; I couldn't be, wid her tellin' me all the time to say she wasn't at home.

A "Place of Learning."

Sydney Smith, once being asked why a certain college was called a place of learning, replied that, although a great many had been there to get learning, no one had ever taken learning away; hence it was quite appropriately named.

Blockhead.

Sapleigh—The barber wanted to singe my hair, but I said no. Smart—Your caution was commendable. He might have started a wood fire.—Boston Transcript.

Hard work is still the road to prosperity and there is no other.—Benjamin Franklin.

A GRAND MEDICINE FOR LITTLE ONES

Mrs. D. L. McIntyre, McIntyre's Mountain, N.S., says: "Baby's Own Tablets are a grand medicine for little ones and I am well satisfied with the results obtained from them." Mrs. McIntyre's testimony is the same as that of thousands of other mothers. Once a mother has used the Tablets she will use nothing else for the results are sure and the Tablets are guaranteed by a government analyst to be perfectly safe. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

WHERE ARE OUR WAISTS AND HIPS?

Bouffant draperies and loose girdles are giving a new line to waists and hips, in a softness, grace and quaintness that is most acceptable. The frills of this violet taffeta frock are a pronounced mode of this season which admits of many delightful interpretations. The wide girdle is held in place by snap-fasteners; a vest and collar of finest batiste embroidery give the touch of softness next the face. A violet colored hat and gray topped button boots add a harmonious chic.

Anna Held says the face, neck, bust and arms must be tinted to match the colored wigs.

NA-DRU-CO RUBY ROSE COLD CREAM

THE C.N.R. MAKES FORMAL APPLICATION FOR FEDERAL AID

Asks Guarantee of Bonds to the Amount of $35,000,000

OTTAWA, March 7.—A formal application for Federal assistance to complete the financing of the Canadian Northern's transcontinental system was placed in Premier Borden's hands yesterday by Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann. It was accompanied, it is understood, by a memorandum setting forth the company's plans, financial requirements, and the expenditures and obligations incurred to date, with a supplementary statement as to the amount of public aid which has already been given the road.

Sir William and Sir Donald Mann, Mr. Lash and others of the party have interviewed a number of Ministers and members, and Sir Donald yesterday morning called upon Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

No definite public announcement by the Government is anticipated until the return of Hon. Frank Cochrane after the Easter holidays.

Although no specific statement as to the exact character of the aid desired is said to be formally on file, it is understood that what the company seeks is a Federal guarantee of a bond issue to the par value of £7,000,000 sterling or $35,000,000. The detailed conditions, are it is said, still the subject of negotiations.

The House spent most of yesterday's sitting in Committee of Supply on the estimates of Hon. Bruno Nantel, Minister of Inland Revenue.

Hon. Mr. Foster gave notice of Government bill to amend inspection and sale act by providing that binder twine manufactured for export only need not be labeled with name of dealer or number of feet of twine per pound.

The House yesterday afternoon passed through committee the resolution offered by Hon. W. J. Roche, Minister of the Interior, extending until Dec. 31 the time in which the holders of warrants under the South African Volunteer Bounty Act can present the same for redemption and receive $500 in satisfaction therefor.

The Minister stated that 48 of these warrants were still unpresented. After a brief discussion the resolution and a bill founded upon the same was introduced and read a first time. The bill will probably meet with some opposition at its second reading, as it is charged that practically all the warrants outstanding are in the hands of speculators.

In October last 58,571 cattle found their way across the border from Canada as compared with 5,142 during the corresponding month of the preceding year, which shows the effect of the abolition of the United States duty, according to a return tabled yesterday.

In November last 76,087 cattle were exported as compared with 6,662 in November 1912. In December 22,333 were exported as against 4,126, and in January last 5,500 went across as compared with 4,211.

The falling off in the export during December and January is attributed to the rise in prices on this side of the line.

"WHITE CANADA" SOON.

Rev. T. Albert Moore Says 1914 Will See Last "Red Light."

OTTAWA, March 7. — That the end of 1914 would mark the passing of the last of Canada's "Red Light" districts, and that he thought the day would dawn when the Dominion would be known as the "white country," was the optimistic outlook of Rev. T. Albert Moore, Toronto, general secretary of temperance and moral reform of the Methodist Church, of the social situations, as he and Rev. Dr. Shearer, Toronto, left the final meeting yesterday afternoon, in connection with the memorable session of the Congress. Rev. Mr. Moore's work extends from coast to coast.

"All over the country," he said, "there is a rapidly increasing interest in social reform. The efforts already made by the church have produced exceptional results, and a great impetus will be given to our work by this greatest of all congresses. East of the Rockies there is not a city or town to-day where houses of ill-repute are under police protection, and by the end of this year the same conditions will exist west of the Rockies.

Cannot Find Mayoralty Candidate.

MONTREAL, March 7.—The situation in regard to the mayoralty of Montreal has become desperate for the English-speaking people. By the unwritten law, which has always governed this office, the next term should go to an English-speaking Protestant, but with the refusal yesterday of R. C. Smith, K.C., to run, the field is once more left to Mederic Martin, M.P., a French-speaking candidate.

Sir Thomas Tait, ex-commissioner of Australian state railways, is being pressed by friends to run, while Dr. Adami, the well-known McGill professor, is also mentioned as a candidate.

Appointments Delayed.

OTTAWA, March 7.—The successors to Hon. M. E. Bernier and Dr. Mills, railway commissioners, who have completed their ten years' term of office, will not be appointed until after the return of Hon. Frank Cochrane from Europe, two months hence. Messrs. Bernier and Mills will continue in office until the new commissioners are appointed.

The dreaded bustle has not the hideous lines of the unsightly affairs of the eighties, but is rather a much-draped pannier of soft folds.

NOT AIMED AT ADULTS.

Andrew Broder's Anti-Cigarette Movement Meant For Minors.

OTTAWA, March 7.—Andrew Broder's bill to prohibit the manufacture or importation of cigarettes, cigarette tobacco and cigarette papers should come before the House on Monday, says Mr. Broder. It will not go to a vote, but will be referred to a strong committee of non-members of Parliament, who will be asked to enquire into and report fully upon the subject.

Mr. Broder's object in introducing this bill is to focus attention upon the evil of cigarette smoking, particularly by boys. "I am not really after the grown-up cigarette smoker," he said yesterday, "but rather to strike at the evil of selling cigarettes to growing boys."

It is expected that the result of Mr. Broder's action upon the subject will be the strengthening of the criminal code in the direction of preventing the sale of cigarettes to minors.

TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL

Notes by Official Scribe.

There was a large attendance of delegates this week, at the usual meeting, and with an unmistakable smile of gratification at the good turn-out. President Hartley called the meeting to order shortly after 8 p. m.

A Plea for Clean Money.

Amongst the communications dealt with was one from the International Steel and Copper Plate Printers Union of North America, Ottawa Union, requesting that a demand for clean money be made. Old and much worn paper money meant probably the spreading of disease germs as it was passed around, and another and important consideration was that counterfeiters could the more easily carry on their nefarious traffic when much dirty currency was being used. The way suggested to create a demand for cleaner money was that employees ask for new bills in their pay envelopes, and the same request be made from those higher up from their bankers. This request looked good to the delegates and it was deemed advisable to comply with it.

Dancing Permitted.

Attention was drawn to the very successful dance lately held under the auspices of the Street Railway Employees Union. This came as a surprise to many present, because as one prominent official of the I.B.E.W. stated, they had been given to understand that no dancing was allowed in the Trades and Labor Hall and that they had been obliged to secure other quarters when entertaining their friends recently. Members of the Hall Trustee Board present refuted the charge and said that dancing never had been placed under their ban, and that as "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy" they were for the idea of more sociability during the winter, the recently installed piano being evidence sufficient for all. Another unfounded and silly rumor was about and that was declaring the hall unsafe. So many partitions on the flat below was ample proof of its stability.

The Assessment Roll.

Mention was made of the publication of the Assessment Roll by the city newspapers. This was filling a long-felt want, and delegates were urged to examine the lists and see that the assessment was fair and no favoritism displayed. The next few weeks will almost see the complete story, and probably the assessor would be willing to attend a meeting and answer questions.

A Minimum Rate of 25c.

The recent demands for increases by members of the city staff was used as a basis for a demand as to what the street laborers were being paid. $1.90 for a nine hour day is the figure at present and the idea seemed to be unanimous that 25c. per hour as a minimum was not in the least excessive. The Secretary was asked to inform the City Council that a resolution had been passed to that effect by the Trades and Labor Council, as the increased cost of living affected the humbler of the city's servants as well as the higher priced officials.

Labor Day Celebration.

The Labor Day Committee reported the securing of Riverside Park for the annual celebration, and the Municipal Committee was asked to wait on the City Council for the customary grant.

The Cigaret By-Law.

Discontent was displayed by delegates at the $40 license to be imposed on all cigaret vendors. It meant that many dealers, in fact nearly all, would have to drop the sale, making thereby a monopoly for two or three fortunate ones. The city dads did not seem to fully realize that boys with a preference for the sickly fumes emanating from a "coffin nail" could obtain the paper and tobacco necessary (there is no fine on these articles) and enjoy themselves after very little effort. The suggestion being thrown out that the parental boot rightly applied would be more efficacious than much grandmotherly legislation.

Strictly Union Show Houses.

Mr. Herbert Clayton of the Royal, Red Mill and Princess Theatres, reported through delegates that he had decided to and was employing from now on, union operators at his three houses. This proposition he had found exceeding difficult, as operators with union cards could hardly be induced to leave Toronto. A union operator was expected that same night and would commence his duties at the Princess, the other show places to be equipped in like manner as soon as possible. Delegates were ordered to report back to their union Mr. Clayton's decision, and notify organized labor in the city that they had now show houses they could conscientiously patronize.

"Good Morning!"

When we are at our best a flood of life pours itself out in the simple old words "Good morning!"—a flood of meaning which strains to express itself in a thousand ways, but has to be content with verbal symbols. Our physical and vital energies, our love, our playfulness, our stores of gratitude for the world's past gifts, all that is calling us toward the future, comes rushing out in the time mellowed greeting. The depths of us, the concentrated and imprisoned energy of our inmost life, calls across the distance to the unseen depths of our fellow.—Atlantic.

Schoolboy Aspiration.

A schoolboy wrote the following essay on soap: "Soap is a kind of stuff made in cakes what you can't eat. It smells good and tastes orfel. Soap always tastes worse when you get it in your eye. Father says Eskimose don't never use soap. I wish I was an Eskimose!"

THE MODEL CHURCH

A correspondent of Flaneur, in The Mail and Empire asked for the words of "The Model Church." These were furnished by the Rev. Rural Dean Wm. C. Allen, of Millbrook, from a collection entitled "Popular Poetic Pearls," but the name of the author is not given. The Review herewith reproduces this poetic gem.

THE MODEL CHURCH.

Well, wife, I've found the model church! I worshipped there today;
It made me think of good old times before my hairs were grey.
The meetin' house was finer built than they were years ago;
But then I found, when I went in, it wasn't built for show.

The sexton didn't seat me 'way back by the door;
He knew that I was old and deaf, as well as old and poor.
He must have been a Christian, for he led me boldly through
The long aisle of that pleasant church to find a pleasant pew.

I wish you'd heard the singin'—it had the old-time ring—
The preacher said with trumpet voice, "Let all the people sing."
The tune was "Coronation," and the music upward rolled
Till I thought I heard the angels striking all their harps of gold.

My deafness seemed to melt away, My spirit caught the fire;
I joined my feeble, trembling voice with that melodious choir,
And sang, as in my youthful day, "Let angels prostrate fall.
Bring forth the royal diadem and crown Him Lord of all."

I tell you, wife, it did me good to sing that hymn once more,
I felt like some wrecked mariner who gets a glimpse of shore;
I almost want to lay aside this weather-beaten form,
And anchor in the blessed port forever from the storm.

The preachin'! well, I can't just tell all that the preacher said;
I know it wasn't written, I know it wasn't read;
He hadn't time to read, for the lightnin' of his eye
Went passing 'long from pew to pew, nor passed a sinner by.

The sermon wasn't flowery; 'twas simple Gospel truth,
It fitted poor old men like me, it fitted hopeful youth;
'Twas full of consolation for weary hearts that bleed,
'Twas full of invitations to Christ—and not to creed.

The preacher made sin hideous in Gentiles and in Jews;
He shot the golden sentences straight at the finest pews,
And, though I can't see very well, I saw the falling tear
That told me hell was some way off, and heaven very near.

How swift the golden moments fled within that holy place!
How brightly beamed the light of heaven from every happy face!
Again I longed for that sweet time when friend shall meet with friend,
Where congregations ne'er break up and Sabbaths have no end.

I hope to meet that minister, the congregation too,
In the dear home beyond the skies, that shines from heaven's blue.
I doubt not I'll remember, beyond life's evening gray,
The face of God's dear servant who preached His Word to-day.

Dear wife, the fight will soon be fought, the victory be won,
The shining goal is just ahead, the race is nearly run.
O'er the river we are nearin', they are thronging to the shore
To shout our safe arrival where the weary weep no more.

"Certainly," said the real estate dealer calmly, "and you haven't, have you?"

PAIN NEARLY DROVE HIM MAD

Suffered Horribly Until He Turned To "Fruit-a-tives"

J. A. CORRIVEAU

DAVIDSALE, ONT., June 15th. 1913

"I am a general storekeeper at the above address, and on account of the great good I have experienced from using "Fruit-a-tives", I recommend them strongly to my customers. They were a great boon to me, I can tell you, for about two years ago, I was laid up in bed with vomiting and a terrific pain at the base of my skull. The pain nearly drove me mad. Doctors feared it would turn to inflammation of the brain but I took "Fruit-a-tives" steadily until I was cured. I have gained fifteen pounds since taking "Fruit-a-tives" and I verily believe they saved me from a disastrous illness."

J. A. CORRIVEAU.

For Headaches, Neuralgia, Rheumatism and other diseases arising from an impure condition of the blood, "Fruit-a-tives" is invaluable and infallible.

MANY OFFERS OF MONEY FOR ULSTER

Earl Grey Reports Promises of Funds.

LONDON, March 7. — Earl Grey, interviewed in New Zealand upon Home Rule for Ireland, was asked according to a London Telegraph cable, if the report about officers of the army resigning their commissions, is true. Earl Grey replied he believed Carson's pockets were stuffed with letters offering to resign, but he told them their duty was to obey the crown. "Ulstermen had a just cause and were prepared to make any legitimate sacrifice, but one sacrifice they were not prepared to make, namely, to encourage sedition to His Majesty's army."

Carson, added Earl Grey, had not made a single mistake. His influence had kept Ulstermen peaceful, although threatened with the withdrawal of their liberties, and his action would probably lead to a settlement which would bring contentment and prosperity to Ireland and increased strength to the Empire.

Big Subscription For Ulster.

LONDON, March 7. — Grey cables from New Zealand to Sir Edward Carson that a certain Australian will subscribe £25,000 to the Ulster fund.

Ornaments Outvote Marksmen.

LONDON, March 7. — Regarding the pending poll of ten members of the National Rifle Association council, some trenchant criticism is appearing concerning the alleged anomalous position of those who support the association by shooting at meetings. It is contended that under the existing conditions, marksmen who spend a total of twenty-five thousand pounds a year in competitors' fees, etc., are bound to be out-voted by ornamental members, who, through their riches are enabled to buy a permanent vote and membership. The shooting community, which finds the bulk of the expenses, it is said, only possess a fourth of the total voting powers.

Meat Strike Is Settled.

SYDNEY, Australia, March 7.—A settlement was reached yesterday in the dispute between the employers and employes in the meat trade, which had brought about a meat famine in this city, lasting from Feb. 16 till yesterday. The slaughtermen, butchers and meat salesmen who had asked for big increases in wages and shorter working hours, agreed to resume work at the old rates pending an adjustment through the intermediary of the Minister of Labor.

Smoking on Cars Demanded.

MONTREAL, March 7.—The local Labor Council has decided to support the petition asking that smoking be allowed again on street cars. Forty thousand signatures have been obtained for the petition, which will go before the City Council on Monday. As an election move, if for no other reason, it is believed that the council will approve the rescinding of the anti-smoking bylaw.

Will Bourassa Run?

OTTAWA, March 7.—Le Droit of this city announces that Mr. Henri Bourassa has been asked to contest the County of Prescott when the seat in the Ontario Legislature becomes vacant by the resignation of Mr. Evanturel.

The first annual meeting of the local branch of the Imperial Home Re-Union Association will be held in the Bank of Montreal Chambers this evening, at 8 o'clock.

COMMITTEE FAVORABLE TO REPORT OF TOLLS' CLAIM

Senate Arranges to Consider If It Will Stand By Repeal

WASHINGTON, March 7.—Initial steps to repeal the toll exemption clause of the Panama Canal Act as requested by President Wilson were taken in Congress yesterday when the House committee on interstate commerce reported favorably a bill to strike out the provision. In the Senate the committee on interoceanic canals decided to meet next week to consider the appeal of the President for a reversal of policy in the controversy which involves the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, and, in the opinion of those present, the general foreign relations policy of the administration.

While the House is debating the issue next week, the Senate committee will consider what course to pursue; whether to recommend a flat repeal bill or to urge the compromise bill offered by Senator Chilton of West Virginia, a member of the committee which would authorize the President to regulate tolls and assess charges at his discretion wherever exemption is provided in the Canal Act.

In the House there was quick response to the President's address, the committee voting 13 to 3 to favorably report the Sims repeal bill. Absent members who were recorded made the vote 17 to 4.

Chairman Adamson had ready a draft of the report when the committee met. It based the approval of the Sims bill on the same two broad grounds set forth in the President's message, general international comity and the immediate foreign situation confronting the country. Representative Knowland of California, who led the opposition in the committee, was given three days to file a minority report, and Chairman Adamson was authorized to urge the rules committee to report a special rule to hasten the bill through the House. The matter will be pressed at once, and it is expected a rule will be brought into the House probably by Thursday of next week.

In its report yesterday, the committee, which provided for uniform tolls in the Canal Act, as originally reported, reiterated its position.

ITALIAN SENTENCED TO DIE.

Shot Girl Who Rejected Him and Killed His Successful Rival.

MONTREAL, March 7.—Thomasso Bernardi, an Italian, was yesterday found guilty of murdering Luigi Sgrolli last August and sentenced to die on May 22.

Sgrolli had supplemented him in the affections of Angelina Rigiami, whom Bernardi had brought out from Italy. When she arrived in Canada Bernardi refused to marry her, and wanted to take her to Toronto to live upon her earnings. The girl refused, and he then had her arrested on a charge of stealing his watch. Sgrolli, with whom the girl had fallen in love, secured the girl's release, and as they were walking away from the Police Court Bernardi followed and shot and badly injured the girl. Sgrolli was killed when he placed himself in front of the girl.

Bernardi went on a hunger strike, and his trial was repeatedly postponed because of his weakness owing to starvation. More recently he feigned madness.

When he heard the sentence, Bernardi went into a fit and shouted: "Who's dead?" He had to be led from the dock. The Rigiami girl also lost her self-control and fainted.

No News of Karluk.

REGINA, Sask., March 7. — That Stefansson has no news of the Karluk, lost in the ice of the Arctic Ocean, was the word received yesterday by Commissioner Perry of the R.N.W.M.P. in a wire from Supt. Moody, in command of the Dawson station. The patrol, which came from Fort McPherson, arriving at Dawson Thursday under command of Corpl. Hocking, brought an exceptionally heavy mail, containing letters from the explorer and from whaling vessels and others in the north, but Stefansson still knows nothing of the whereabouts of his ship.

The silence with regard to it is considered ominous.

Escaped From Asylum.

CORNWALL, March 7. — Joseph Adelard Berthiaume, aged about 35, was arrested here yesterday on a charge of vagrancy. Berthiaume boarded at the St. Lawrence Hall, East Cornwall, for several days, and as he had no money or baggage he had to leave the hotel. He told Chief of Police Smythe that his home was in Sorel, Que., and that he was an inmate of Longue Point Asylum, Montreal, for eight years, but that he ran away from that institution two years ago.

Young Firebug Gets Off.

TRENTON, March 7.—Earl Henderson came up before his Honor Judge Deroche on a charge of arson. He was found guilty and allowed out on suspended sentence. Fifteen hundred dollars' bail was furnished for his good conduct for a year.

It is impossible to devise a set of pure food laws that will prevent careless or irresponsible people from swallowing bichloride of mercury tablets.

While sitting in an office chair a man may feel just as young as he used to be, but after running a block to catch a street car he changes his mind.

Postmaster General Burleson has taken a stand against "freak" addresses on mail matter. It will be generally agreed that they are a cheap form of humor.

FOUR COUNTIES INVOLVED.

Exclusion of Ulster From Home Rule Would Affect Less Than Half.

LONDON, March 7. — The Daily Chronicle declares that the decision to offer Ulster exclusion from the operation of the Home Rule bill on the basis of county option was arrived at only this week, and is expected to result in the exclusion of the Counties of Antrim, Londonderry, Down and Armagh. The other Ulster counties are Cvaan, Donegal, Fermanagh, Monaghan and Tyrone.

A special correspondent of The Westminster Gazette, a Government organ, who says he has toured the north and east of Ireland, writes his paper that "the picture of Ulster as an armed camp is a pure figment of the imagination conceived to impress the British elector." He does not deny the presence of volunteers, but says that some knowledge is necessary to find them, as otherwise a man might be in Ulster for a week and remain unaware of anything save the ordinary round of daily life.

"Tomb of Osiris" Found?

LONDON, March 7.—Professor E. Naville, in a letter published in The Times yesterday, on the excavations of the Egyptian exploration found at Abydos, expresses the belief that they have found "what Greek authors called the tomb of Osiris, where the head of the god is supposed to be preserved."

The excavations began at the door which Professor Petrie discovered two years ago. The doorway, Professor Naville thinks, was the entrance to a passage leading to a subterranean chapel under the temple of Seti I.

Another Railway Project.

NEW YORK, March 7.—D. A. Thomas, a Welsh coal operator, arrived on the Lusitania yesterday to spend three weeks in this country. His object is to meet several gentlemen from Seattle and Vancouver, and talk over with them the charter that they are expecting to get from the Canadian Government for the development of coal and mineral lands along the Peace River into Athabasca.

Foreigners Defrauded.

BELLEVILLE, March 7.—Twenty-three Bulgarians arrived in this city Thursday from Toronto. They were engaged by a fellow-countryman to work in a large paper mill establishment. No work was waiting, and their supposed employer secure $86 in cash from them and left on an early train yesterday morning for Montreal.

Committed For Bigamy.

BELLEVILLE, March 7. — J. L. Lindsay has been committed by Magistrate Casemen at Madoc to the county jail for trial by the county judge on a charge of bigamy. Lindsay was brought to jail on Wednesday afternoon. The alleged bigamous marriage took place in August last.

Evanturel To Address Meeting.

OTTAWA, March 7. — Gustave Evanturel, who entered into negotiations with the Hotelkeepers' Association of Ontario with a view to receiving a salary for protecting their interests on the floor of the Legislature will speak in Hawkesbury to-night.

Got the Best of Carlyle.

The Rev. Thomas Alexander, a Presbyterian minister, long resident in Chelsea and well known as a brother Scot, was most anxious to know Carlyle, but had no opportunity of getting an introduction to him. One day in the King's road he saw Carlyle coming in his direction and took advantage of the opportunity by going up to the sage and saying, "Thomas Carlyle, I believe?" Carlyle's reply was, "Tom Alexander, I know!" They became good friends, and later Mr. Alexander wrote to Carlyle for a subscription toward a school building fund, and Carlyle wrote back a refusal in doggerel, whereupon Mr. Alexander replied that if he did not send him £5 he would sell his poetry to a collector or publish it. The £5 was at once forthcoming.

Naming the Picture.

The artist was of the impressionist school. He had just given the last touches to a purple and blue canvas when his wife came into the studio.

"My dear," said he, "this is the landscape I wanted you to suggest a title for."

"Why not call it 'Home?'" she said after a long look.

"'Home?' Why?"

"Because there's no place like it," she replied meekly.—Glasgow Times.

A Solemn Critic.

A local band was one day playing at Dumferaline when an old weaver came up and asked the bandmaster what that was they were playing.

"That is the 'Death of Nelson,'" solemnly replied the bandmaster.

"Ay, man," remarked the weaver, "ye ha'e given him an awfu' death!"—Glasgow News.

She Makes Violins.

Working quietly in a sunny apartment in Brooklyn, the only woman maker of violins in this country, if not in the world, plies her trade. She came by her talent naturally, for her father was a famous maker of violins in Austria in his day, and he imparted the secret of his art to his daughter. The young woman fashions the delicate instruments with the master's touch and then, when all is completed, applies the coat of varnish, that process which makes or mars the finest instruments. The formula of the varnish is a secret given to her by her father.—New York Tribune.

WHERE DOROTHY LIVED.

Haddon Hall Was Home of Vernons For Four Hundred Years.

While King George was shooting on the Beeley moors, Queen Mary motored to Haddon Hall, the mansion where the Vernons held high festival for 400 years, and to which is attached the fascinating romance of the sixteenth century.

The panelling in the great hall, of an artistic character, was put in by George Vernon, known as "The King of the Peak," and the father of Dorothy Vernon, last of his race, in the year 1545.

Passing up the oaken stairs through "the Dog Gates" (used in the old days for keeping the domestic pets out of the upper apartments) the Queen entered the drawing-room, where her gaze rested upon the magnificent tapestries which have been hanging there for three centuries, and are now being restored under the personal direction of the heir of Belvoir, the young Marquis of Granby.

Thence the royal visitor went to the "Earl's Dressing Room," used in his day by the first Lord Rutland. Adjacent is the "Earl's Bedroom," hung with a tapestry depicting hunting scenes and possessing a fine oak ceiling plastered over for decades and recently rediscovered.

Queen Mary evinced a special interest in this particular corner of the mansion, because at the time of her former visit as Duchess of York the tapestry had been taken down for repair. Walking through the gallery over the Great Hall, the Queen went into the Great Nursery. The tapestry here depicts "Scenes from the Life of Diana." It had been villainously mutilated, and the Queen was told that five years were spent in searching for one portion of it which had been cut out. In all, forty-eight pieces were put together with great skill.

Through a suite of rooms, the way lay to the Lesser Nursery, and here attention was arrested by the initials "D.V., 1560," and "G.V., 1561," cut in the plaster over the mantleshelf and now protected by a glass covering. On an adjacent wall were seen the initials of Margaret Vernon, sister of Dorothy, cut prior to 1558. In "Dorothy's Bedroom," next visited, the Queen closely inspected a piece of tapestry reputed to have been woven by Mary Queen of Scots. There is no documentary evidence in proof, but the tradition is a strong one. The subject is "James the Fifth."

The next call was at Lord Granby's private suite of rooms, containing a small museum in which any article of interest found by the working staff is preserved. Here were coins, tobacco pipes, paintings on tortoiseshell, counters and dice. In the collection were also two enamelled rosettes taken from firedogs, and a child's shoe of the seventeenth century.

In the servants' quarters the Queen saw tapestry hung up for repairs, and the restoration of which has been going on for a period of at least seventeen years.

In the Long Gallery were seen fine old samples of panelling and flooring, the latter laid in 17 feet lengths 22 inches wide. The panelling here was all done after the marriage of Dorothy and Sir John Manners.

It was from a ball in this room that Dorothy is supposed to have eloped at the immature age of thirteen. The story is that she disappeared down a flight of steps on to the terrace, but the revised version is that where the steps now stand was a window through which the erring damsel passed to her waiting lover, leaving a dainty shoe behind her. The Queen made a point of traversing and re-traversing the steps, evidently loth that the early tradition should be discarded.

Falkirk Man's Invention.

An invention by means of which the locking of the doors of railway compartments will be under the control of the guards of trains has been patented by Mr. Robert Blackadder, of the firm of Messrs. Blackadder Brothers, engineers, Falkirk.

The invention consists of the fixing in each compartment of a cylinder having a piston or bolt therein, the cylinder communicating with an air-pipe running the whole length of the train to the guard's van. The guard is provided with means for opening and shutting the air pressure for the respective cylinders. When the guard turns on the pressure the piston shoots the bolts into their respective keepers, and thus the doors are locked, and cannot be opened again until the guard cuts off the air pressure. In the event of any collision taking place or a portion of a train becoming detached and any one of the air-pipes being detached or broken the doors would immediately become unlocked.

Voracious Fish.

At a meeting of the Kent and Essex Sea Fisheries Committee, held at Fishmongers' Hall, it was stated that the Thames is periodically visited by shoals of voracious fish, who devour the usual inhabitants of that calm estuary. Forty years ago a great raid was made on the Thames by fish called "Fenians." So voracious were they that they practically cleared out every other fish in the river. After a long period the "Fenians" were now paying another visit to the Thames Estuary, and were eating the whitebait.

Poetic Pauper Rebukes Guardians.

Willesden Guardians declined to allow one of their members to present a glass of beer to each of the inmates of the workhouse on Christmas Day. A pauper poet replied as follows:

It is Christmas, glad Christmas, good will and good cheer;
And the drink faddists common sense scout.
For on this day, the glad day in the year,
To the aged, for dinner, they veto "a beer,"
P'r'aps to save them developing gout.

Hyderabad.

The state of Hyderabad, located about midway between Madras and Bombay, in the south central part of India, with a population about equal to that of New York and Massachusetts combined and with an area of 82,698 square miles (just about the same area as Kansas) is, generally speaking, the most important native state in India in population, wealth and potential resources. It has many wild creatures, including tigers and leopards in abundance and occasionally bison and elephants. There are also wild hogs, antelope, hyenas, wolves, jackals and bears.

The Years.

They drop upon the shoulder
So surely one by one;
The timid year grows bolder
With each ensuing sun.

They heavy grow to carry,
So flags the strength and fails,
But still they do not tarry,
So little love avails.

But smile a bit, my dearie,
And cast away your fears.
Make full and bright and cheery
The measure of your years.

BRAIN WORKERS — Lawyers, Physicians, Bankers, professional gentlemen in general — need the most nourishing food. Because the active brain saps the energy and vitality of the whole body.

Unless the food be rich in wholesome nourishment, both brain and body will lose in power and strength.

O'KEEFE'S "PILSENER" LAGER is liquid food and force. Its gentle stimulation arouses the flagging energy. Its rich nutriment repairs the waste of work, and rebuilds flesh and good, red blood.

The King George school team defeated a picked team from the Central school, by 2-1, at the Brock Street rink this morning. King George's led at half time by 1-0. Hagerman, Gillespie and Scriber were prominent for the winners, and Lundy and Rishor played a strong game for the losers.

CRANKS AT SEA.

Some of the Things With Which Captains Have to Contend.

"Panic, more or less suppressed seizes many passengers on an ocean liner when anything out of the ordinary happens," said the ship's officer. "Often they are cranks who seem to be obsessed with the belief that their opinions will help navigate the ship, and who pursue the engineer or the captain with incessant advice.

"On our last trip, which was very rough, one old gentleman tried to reach the bridge where the captain was and had to be halted by force.

"'But I want to ask the captain about the crew,' he fumed. 'Is the crew trustworthy? What shall we do if we sink? What shall I tell my wife?'

"Two sailors were detailed to take him below with instructions to remain and answer his questions.

"When we reached port his first act was to call on the president of the steamship company for the purpose of giving notice that he would never travel on another ship of their line. Said he:

"'It was only by a miracle that any of your passengers reached port at all. In the midst of all that storm, with the sea threatening to swallow us all, your captain slunk away where not a soul could reach him.

"'I call that negligence!'"—New York Times.

Answered the Call.

Floors castle, home of the Duke of Roxburghe, was the scene of a curious psychical mystery over a century ago. Sir Walter Scott relates the incident. John, third Duke of Roxburghe, who died in 1804, the celebrated book collector, when arranging his library employed neither a secretary nor a librarian, but a footman called Archie, who knew every book as a shepherd does each sheep of his flock. There was a bell hung in the duke's room at Floors which was used on no occasion except to call Archie to his study. The duke died in St. James' square at a time when Archie was himself sinking under a mortal complaint. On the day of the funeral the library bell suddenly rang violently. The dying Archie sat up in bed and faltered, "Yes, my lord duke, yes, I will wait on your grace instantly." And with these words on his lips he fell back in bed and died.—St. James' Gazette.

BUSY TAIL OF A WHALE.

Legend of the Origin of the Idea of the Screw Propeller.

The following extraordinarily interesting story is printed by the Marine Journal with the express stipulation that it cannot guarantee its authenticity, but gives it for what it is worth:

"'Way back in 1858 the stout Dutch bark Groote Marie, Captain Van der Broeck, bound from Amsterdam to the East Indies, became dismantled in trying to round the Cape of Good Hope and, because of high seas, was in a generally bad plight. Just as things were looking particularly black an investigation of a terrific blow received by the vessel on her high, square stern revealed the fact that a large whale had crashed partly through the rear boards and had got caught in the timbers. Fortunately water which was pouring into the aft hold was promptly blown out through the open hatchway by the struggling animal, and in endeavoring to release itself the big mammal lashed the water with its tail so violently that it propelled the bark ahead at seven knots an hour into Cape Town harbor.

"It was in watching the mighty effect of the whale's tail that the good captain conceived the idea of a screw propeller, but neither the Dutch merchants of Cape Town nor his brother skippers of Amsterdam were sufficiently interested in his tale to unite with him in patenting the device."

THE KING IS KING.

No "Power Behind the Throne" in England, It is Said.

It is often asked who really inspires the king's attitude upon current questions of the day and, more particularly, who writes his speeches?

The king takes, it is possible to state, the closest interest in every leading question of the day, and, while he must of necessity take the advice of his responsible ministers, he has views of his own that he does not hesitate to pronounce whenever the occasion calls for it, while his speeches he "roughs out" entirely by himself.

This draft of what his majesty desires to say is then passed on to the officials of the private secretaries' office, who prepare the speech in set form and submit it to his majesty in formal language. This he goes through most carefully, and it often takes two or three rewritings before the king is thoroughly satisfied with it.

It may be said at once, however, that no words uttered by the king are approved until they have passed his most careful scrutiny. It is likewise possible to add that his majesty is an extremely good impromptu speaker and that some of his most notable utterances have been made without any previous preparation of any kind.—London Gentlewoman.

Didn't Stop.

A young man who was with a party of motor tourists making a trip through the mountains decided to stop over in an attractive place for a few days and went into the hotel to ascertain the rates.

"What are your rates?" he inquired.

"Seven dollars a day, sir," was the reply.

"If I stay," went on the man, "I shall want a room on the parlor floor."

"That will cost you $1 extra," said the clerk.

"I shall also want a room with a fireplace, where I can have a fire these chilly evenings."

"One dollar more, sir."

"And, of course," said the tourist, "I want one with a bath also."

"A dollar additional, sir."

"Well," said the man thoughtfully, "how much will you charge to let me leave the hotel just as I am?"—Pulitzer Magazine.

The man who gets the most of it seldom gets the best of it.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

THE man who wants something of you may have a high regard for your opinion for all that.

A bluff is never a luxury, but often a necessity.

It is hard for a woman to be a good cook and keep one.

Being a dead one is a slow way of getting a living.

There is one thing about dying—you never have to do it over again.

One of the joys of going away for the summer is coming back for the winter.

Don't nurse a desire for revenge. It is generally pretty healthy, and your effort is wasted.

When a man is hungry he growls. When a woman is hungry she goes and gets something to eat.

Most anything will pay. The only question to be decided is, Who?

Neglected Season.

The tuneful poets warble
  Of sweet and chilly spring.
At seasons unresponsive
  Their pretty fancies fling.
Let's sing a song of summer,
  For really don't you say
It ought to have a look in
  When poets tune their lay?

Perhaps the spring is useful,
  And in a modest way
It sort of gets things going
  To start the big display,
But were it not for summer
  To make the work complete,
Pray, where would be the harvest
  And all the things to eat?

Yes, summer is a charmer,
  Not knocking any one.
Its skies are fair and balmy,
  And friendly is its sun,
Perhaps at times too friendly,
  But still you don't suppose
We'd sing about the summer
  Were it to freeze our toes.

Then sing the balmy summer,
  And while its charms we scan,
For goodness' sake, dear brother,
  Start that electric fan,
And while in language classic,
  High sounding, but precise,
We chant its many virtues
  Put something fresh on ice.

Worn Out.

"He finds it very hard to tell a lie."

"Does he, indeed?"

"Yes."

"He must be very conscientious."

"Well, I would hardly call it that. You see, he has told so many that he has simply run out of material."

Where It Excelled.

"How is your new machine?"

"Fine."

"Is it fast?"

"Fast? I should say so. It can run up a bill quicker than anything I ever saw."

Slight Omission.

"I thought you said he was a man of means?"

"Excuse me. I left off the adjective."

"What adjective?"

"McLaughlin-Buick"
Synonym for "VALUE"

VALUE in a motor car—true value—should be two-fold.
Seek value in the purchase-price; and value in the cost of up-keep.
In both respects, McLaughlin-Buicks challenge comparison.

Ever since the first McLaughlin-Buick was built, there has been constant effort to improve—to refine—to perfect, both in mechanism and in design.

The culmination of McLaughlin-Buick success, as represented by the 1914 models, is worthy the serious attention of any intending purchaser.

Along with every time-tried feature that has distinguished the McLaughlin-Buick models of former years, will be found such new improvements as can be depended upon to increase the power efficiency and decrease the fuel consumption.

The new Six-Cylinder model, with its record of 19½ miles on one gallon of gasoline, bears striking testimony to the success of the McLaughlin-Buick motor. All the models amply prove our claim of "greater mileage per gallon of fuel."

From the Roadster, that sells at $1,250, to the 7-passenger "Six," that sells at $2,780, they are all destined to further establish the name "McLaughlin-Buick" as a synonym for "value."

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Miss Helen A. Kuhn, of Toronto, is a guest at the Oriental.

Mr. and Mrs. Tew, of Hamilton, are visiting in the city.

Mrs. W. J. Mather left for Wroxeter yesterday after spending three weeks at Mather's Corners and Peterboro.

Miss Mary Dickson, and her friend Miss Ferris, Campbellford, are spending the week-end with Mrs. J. H. Smith, East City.

Rev. Prof. Wallace, of Victoria University, who will occupy the pulpit of the Chorlotte street Methodist church to-morrow, will be the guest of Mr. W. G. Morrow, while in the city.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Spencer, of Lakefield, who have made their home in Peterborough, were presented with an address before leaving Lakefield. They were members of the Methodist Church choir.

Messrs. Harry and Fred Cressman have returned from New York City, where they spent the week on a special purchasing visit, in the interests of The Cressman Company, Limited.

Mr. R. J. Devey has returned from Toronto in connection with the production of "Judas Maccabeus" in April next. The Executive Committee of the St. George Choral Society deputed Mr. Devey to interview likely principals for the choral event of the year. Dr. Torrington voiced his earnest appreciation of the reception received when he unexpectedly visited this city to hear the "Messiah," and hopes to be present for the next production on April 29th. The best talent of Toronto will be available on that date, and the committee will meet at an early date to make the final arrangements.

THEATRICAL

One of the strongest athletic clubs in Toronto possesses a galaxy of amateur talent, which has found vent in studying the old Gilbert and Sullivan comic opera, "The Mikado." Mr. Earnest Dalton, who figured in the production of the same work in this city some years ago, is in his old part of "Koko," and the company wish to use the splendid dresses owned by Mrs. R. J. Devey.

The performances will put be put on at the Royal Alexandra heatre and Mr. R. J. Devey is asked to conduct the series, an honour not often extended to conductors outside of Toronto. The dates are very close, and Mr. Devey cannot possibly spend a week in Toronto before April 29th in view of the Oratorio to be performed here.

Should the arrangements prove to be possible this series will be the ninth series of the "Mikado" given under Mr. Devey's direction in England and Canada.

CHARLOTTA NILLSON IN LEAH KLESCHNA

The week-end attraction at the Royal this week is another feature film. This one is Leah Kleschna, introducing Charlotta Nillson and is a production of the Players' Company. The story of a woman's trials were never before so well depicted on canvas. Lovers of the highest standard of motion pictures should not fail to see this grand production. As the above and other feature films fill the bill at the Royal, the usual vaudeville is being played at the Princess.

TO PROBE THE MURRAY CASE

Five Unionist Peers Will Investigate Wireless Charges.

LONDON, March 7.—Lord Halsbury, the Earl of Loreburn, the Earl of Desart, Baron Charnwood and Baron Sanderson, have been appointed members of the committee of the House of Lords to investigate the allegations against Lord Murray of Elibank relating to his dealings in wireless shares. The announcement came as a surprise to the Earl of Crewe, leader of the Liberals in the House of Lords, who declared he had not expected it so soon, and had not yet prepared a statement which he had expected to make explaining the presence of Lords Loreburn and Charnwood, both Liberals, on the committee. This explanation, he said, would be made Monday.

Montreal Was Poor Stand.

MONTREAL, March 7.—The speculative element in the presentation of grand opera, even when it is given in English, is brought out by the announcement by Thomas Quinlan that his opera company will conclude its local engagement on Thursday evening, March 19, nearly two weeks earlier than arranged. A loss of between $1,000 and $1,500 has resulted from each performance so far, it is stated. The organization will sail from Halifax for England on March 21, to appear during Easter week at the new theatre in Manchester.

"I have been greatly disappointed here," said Mr. Quinlan. "Our company has not met with such treatment during the whole of its Empire tour."

LOST HIS OWN CASE.

An Unfortunate Contradiction That Queered Him in Court.

A Cleveland lawyer tells a story about a woman from the country who wanted a divorce. When the case got into court the judge, disregarding for the moment the technical grounds, tried to find out the real reason for the lady's desire to be separated from the man she had lived with for so many years. The man himself was in court with a lawyer, and it looked as if he was going to fight the case.

"Mrs. Dash," said the judge, "tell me what fault you have to find with your husband."

"He is a liar, a brute, a thief and a brainless fool!" answered the lady promptly.

"Tut, tut!" exclaimed his honor. "You could hardly prove all that."

"Prove it? Why, everybody knows it!"

"If you knew it, why did you marry him?"

"I didn't know it before I married him."

Then the husband spoke for the first time.

"She did, too!" he shouted.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

No Joke at All.

Reginald came into the club in a highly excited state one afternoon and drew an acquaintance aside into a corner of the lounge.

"What do you think?" said he. "I went to see that broker fellow Rosenwasser and asked for a loan of $1,000 to tide me over. If you'll believe me the bounder said all he could spare was 50 cents."

"Never mind, Reggie," replied the acquaintance soothingly, "that was just Rosenwasser's little joke."

"Joke! You call it a joke, do you? Look here! Here's the 50 cents."—New York Post.

Rough on Ellen.

Among the quaint scrapbooks of the late Clyde Fitch there was one devoted entirely to typographical errors.

One of these errors appeared in a criticism of Ellen Terry. The reviewer wrote, "Her love of Portia made acting easy." The sentence appeared in the paper as 'Her love of port made acting easy.'"—Florida Times-Union.

Milady's Mirror

Home Care of the Nails.

A home manicuring outfit is a great convenience. It should contain two or three smooth, nicely polished sticks, a pair of small, curved, sharp pointed scissors, a couple of emery boards, a nailbrush (not too stiff), a slender, flexible file of hard steel; a box of any guaranteed nail polish, a soft buffer and a small bottle of peroxide of hydrogen, with a bit of lemon and a fine toilet pumice stone. A soap with olive oil in it will be found the best, and a jar of plain cold cream should be provided.

If the nails have been neglected and seem clogged with dirt and grime fill them with cold cream, rubbing it in well; then with a piece of fine old linen remove the dirt from one set with the nails of the other hand, never with an instrument of steel.

A little white vaseline should be on hand also, as it heals and helps to prevent brittleness. After the soaking rub in the vaseline well, then use the brush and clean suds, warm, but not hot. The nails are then ready for the careful looking over to rid them of any ragged bits of flesh clinging to the sides and base. The stick should be dipped into the peroxide and passed around the nails as well as under. This helps to whiten and cleanse them. If there are callous places use the toilet pumice with the soapy water, rinsing well afterward.

Stains may require the juice of a lemon, but cold cream should be applied after to prevent the roughness that would otherwise be caused by the acid, and great care must be taken not to cut the skin around the base, or it will remain ragged, as it is really a "selvage."

Filing Finger Nails.

Before beginning the home manicuring the file, which should be a thin, flexible one, should be used. The nails are then in a condition to stand this, as after the soaking they will be too soft.

They should never be allowed to grow too far beyond the tip of the finger. Long, pointed nails are entirely out of style, if they were ever in, as a woman does not want the talons of the Chinaman at the ends of her pretty fingers.

So, in the filing, rub them down to pass just a trifle beyond the finger itself, rounding them nicely, and do not file the sides down too closely, as the natural support is then withdrawn, and this causes hangnails.

Often a nail will persistently break or show a flaw in the same place for years. As the new nail grows the split or crack seems to come naturally, and the only cure is to watch that nail, using the emery board to smooth off the first sign of the flaw.

STRICKLAND HOMESTEAD AT LAKEFIELD

The accompanying reproductions are from photographs showing the home of the late Lt. Col. Strickland at Lakefield as it appeared before being destroyed by fire and as the ruins are seen today. The third depicts a winter scene in Lakefield as viewed from the residence.

It was an historic homestead and there are many people in this city who have been entertained within its walls.

Ninety years ago, Lt. Col. Strickland built a log shanty and commenced to clear the land. Then he built a log house and as progress was met, a frame was erected. In 1854, the homestead was constructed, variegated granite taken from the lands, being used.

A BEAUTIFUL OLD HOME.

This historic homestead was built in 1854 by the late Lt.-Col. Strickland, founder of Lakefield, Ontario, where a log shanty was originally erected ninety years ago. Colonel Strickland himself and his three sisters—Mrs. Moodie, Mrs. Traill and Miss Agnes Strickland—were all writers of ability.

The Ruins of the Strickland Homestead as Seen To-day.

Lt. Col. Strickland resided in Huron County, a number of years before deciding to transfer his fortunes to the township of Douro. In Huron, he plowed the first sod that was turned and he planted the first grain. He was fond of the water, he was a splendid swimmer and on one occasion when wrecked he saved his life because of his ability as a swimmer. In 1837, he served with the seventh incorporated Batallion in Peterboro.

He was also a member of the township and county councils. Lt. Col. Strickland was thrice married and he died on the 11th of January, 1867. One hundred and sixty relatives attended the funeral.

THE TIME TO CURTAIL STUDY

When the Child is Growing Rapidly.

As soon as a child begins to grow rapidly all intellectual exertion should be checked. Such is the theory which Dr. C. Mercier, the famous English authority on children, expresses in an article in the London Lancet. Especially when there is any family tendency to nervous or mental disorder, rapidly growing children should be withdrawn from school altogether until the period of rapid growth is over.

Mercier does not think that intellectual work at high pressure is harmful to either boys or girls as long as food, sleep and bodily exercise are sufficient. But he is sure that pressure of intellectual work in those who are growing rapidly should never be permitted, and if growth be proceeding very rapidly all intellectual work should be put aside.

Dr. Mercier insists that it is scarcely possible to give growing children too much to eat, and it should always be borne in mind that the carbohydrates—starch, sugar and fat—are mainly fuel that is burned up in producing muscular movement and that the proteins are the main elements in the formation of tissue. Consequently it is a mistake to restrict the meat ration of children.

KEPT HIS SECRET WELL.

Even Scott's Son Didn't Know Who Wrote the Waverley Novels.

A Scotch newspaper having referred to the old story that Walter Scott, son of the great novelist, had never read his father's novels, the Dunfermline Court Journal reprints a letter that first appeared in its columns on Sept. 17, 1859. It was signed "Veritas," and the writer says: "From 1810 to 1833 I resided in Edinburgh and was on intimate terms with Walter Scott. Sitting together one winter evening several years before his father made the famous declaration at the theatrical fund dinner held in the assembly rooms of Edinburgh that he was the author of the Waverley novels, I put the following questions to my friend: 'Do you not really and truly believe your father to be the author of the Waverley novels, or who do you suppose the author to be?'

"His answer was: 'I have really no idea who the author is. If my father is the author he keeps the secret to himself, for none of the family knows.' And then he added, 'The moment a new novel (by the author of "Waverley") is announced my father orders a copy from his bookseller, and the whole family assembles in the parlor in the evening to hear the novel read by myself and my sisters, each taking a turn.'

"He further added, 'When anything very droll or funny occurs in the reading of the novel my father joins most heartily in the laugh, perhaps more so than any of the family.'"

RECKLESS RAILROADING

They Kicked on the Speed and Baggage Smashing in 1846.

A correspondent, Professor Edward L. Morse of Salem, sends the following extract from a letter written by Louis Agassiz to his mother. The letter is dated Boston, December, 1846:

"Leaving Boston the 10th of October, I went by railroad to New Haven, passing through Springfield. The rapidity of the locomotive is frightful to those who are unused to it, but you adapt yourself to the speed and soon become, like all the rest of the world, impatient of the slightest delay. I well understand that an antipathy for this mode of travel is possible. There is something infernal in the irresistible power of steam, carrying such heavy masses along with the swiftness of lightning.

"The habits growing out of continued contact with railroads and the influence they exert on a portion of the community are far from agreeable until one is familiar with them. You would cry out in dismay did you see your baggage flung pell mell like logs of wood—trunks, chests, traveling bags, hat boxes—all in the same mill, and if here and there something goes to pieces no one is astonished. Never mind! We go fast—we gain time. That is the essential thing."

And this was on the Boston and Albany! And there was baggage smashing in 1846!—Boston Herald.

DOCTORS ADVISE OPERATIONS

Saved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Swarthmore, Penn. — "For fifteen years I suffered untold agony, and for one period of nearly two years I had hemorrhages and the doctors told me I would have to undergo an operation, but I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and am in good health now. I am all over the Change of Life and cannot praise your Vegetable Compound too highly. Every woman should take it at that time. I recommend it to both old and young for female troubles." — Mrs. EMILY SUMMERSGILL, Swarthmore, Pa.

Canadian Woman's Experience:

Fort William, Ont. — "I feel as if I could not tell others enough about the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I was weak and tired and I could not rest nights. A friend recommended your Compound and I soon gained health and strength and could not wish to sleep better. I know other women who have taken it for the same purpose and they join me in praising it." — Mrs. WM. A. BUFFY, 631 South Vickar Street, Fort Williams, Ontario.

Since we guarantee that all testimonials which we publish are genuine, is it not fair to suppose that if Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has the virtue to help these women it will help any other woman who is suffering in a like manner?

WHERE HISTORY IS LAME.

Benefactors of the Human Race Who Get Too Little Credit.

History as it is written and as it is taught is one great panorama of wars and dynasties. It bristles with the names of doughty warriors and rulers, describes at length their struggles and achievements and dismisses the inventors and promoters of the great agencies which have made modern civilization possible, with scanty, if any, mention.

The invention of printing has had more influence upon the development of the race than any act of any ruler that the world has ever known, and more than half of those who read this will not know the inventor's name.

The men who invented and developed the steam engine did more to lighten human toil and to make possible to each of the dwellers upon earth a larger mead of comfort and enjoyment than all the generals who ever pitted men against their fellows. Hunt for their names in the indexes of your histories.

Art and literature have been broad highways to fame. The high school scholar can tell you who wrote what and when he wrote it, but ask him who built the first railroad in America and when and where it was. The magnificent Albert memorial is covered with the names of authors and painters and sculptors, but Michelangelo is there because he was an artist, not because he was an architect, and Leonardo Da Vinci because he was a painter and not because he was an engineer.—Power.

LA GRIPPE'S VICTIMS

You Can Only Recover From Its After Effects by Enriching the Blood.

Few diseases so shatter the health as la grippe, or influenza. Its victims all tell the same story. They are left despondent, tired, weak and wretched in every way. They have no appetite, ambition or strength; cannot sleep and suffer from headaches, backaches and nervousness. In this weakened condition lies the real danger. The body falls and easy prey to bronchitis, pneumonia, and even to consumption. Nearly every form of nervous trouble has been known to follow an attack of la grippe. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills give the quickest and most thorough relief from the after effects of this trouble. They build up and purify the blood, drive the poisons out of the system and give strength and tone to the whole body. The following is an example of their power in cases of this kind. Mrs. R. A. McLean, Wentworth Station, N. S., says: "Two years ago Herbert E. Freeman, a young boy living with us, was attacked with la grippe. At the time he did not have a strong constitution, and we feared the trouble was settling on his lungs. He was not able to walk fifty yards without being out of breath, and his general vitality was very low. For months he continued in this position, notwithstanding all we did for him, and it was at this crisis that we got Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for him. By the time he had used three boxes there was a noticeable improvement, and this was followed by his being able to do light work, and later he had all the strength of a growing boy. His cure was looked upon as remarkable by all who knew him, and I am giving the result in the hope that it may be of benefit to someone else."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all medicine dealers or sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

WHISTLER STORIES

Audacity and Sarcasm of the Eccentric Genius.

THE FAMOUS PEACOCK ROOM

"Jimmie's" Offhand Hospitality, at His Patron's Expense, While Decorating It, the Clash It Led to and the Way the Artist Squared Accounts.

In Mrs. Alec Tweedie's "Thirteen Years of a Busy Woman's Life" she tells this story of Whistler, which she heard at first hand:

"The famous peacock room at Prince's Gate was a wonderful scheme of decoration, peacock's eyes on a gold ground being its principal motif. About the year 1880 the late Mr. Leyland, a wealthy shipowner and patron of the arts, had taken this grand new mansion and asked Whistler to decorate a room. Jimmy, poor and out at elbows as usual, jumped at the idea, but no terms were fixed upon. The work began. It was a prodigious undertaking, and the extraordinary and erratic little man gave it his whole time.

"Being at Prince's Gate all day and having the run of Leyland's house, Whistler had a hospitable way of inviting his friends to come and see the room and then he would ask them to stop to luncheon. This sort of thing, which began occasionally, ended in being an almost daily occurrence, and Jimmy used to hold a little levee every morning, when three, four or five people remained to luncheon. This became too much for Mr. Leyland, and his plan for putting an end to the campaign was a somewhat ingenious one.

"Jimmy one day entertained four friends. The meal not being announced, he rang the bell for the butler. 'When is lunch?' he asked.

"'I have no orders for lunch,' replied the man, with a stately air.

"'Oh, no, of course,' replied Jimmy, not in the least disconcerted. 'We'll go along to such and such a hotel. Stupid of me to forget it.'

"But it was enough, and, though he pretended not to mind and with that delightful impudence for which he was famous turned it off, he never forgave the incident and determined to pay Leyland out. From that day he took his own lunch in a little paper parcel and sat and devoured it when so inclined. On the next occasion Leyland came in to admire the peacock decorations about the usual luncheon hour.

"'You will have some lunch, won't you?' Whistler said. Leyland looked surprised.

"Up jumped Jimmy, fetched his bag and proceeded to untie his parcels, saying: 'It's all right, old chap; have no anxiety. It is my lunch, not yours, and you are heartily welcome to it.'

"When the work was accomplished which had taken so long Leyland wished to pay the bill and asked the artist what was his figure. 'I have worked a whole year and more,' Whistler said. 'I consider my services are worth £2,000 a year, therefore the figure is £2,500, from which you can deduct the few hundreds you have given me on account.'

"Leyland was horrified. 'Preposterous,' he said, 'perfectly preposterous!'

"Jimmy looked at him and drew himself up to his full height, which was not great. 'I beg, Mr. Leyland, that you will accept as a gift the entire work of my life for the last year and a quarter. I can compromise nothing.'

"Once again Whistler scored and Leyland paid. Whistler's thanks to his patron afterward took the form of painting a life size portrait of him as a devil with horns and hoofs."

Sir E. J. Poynter, P. R. A., says the New York Sun, told in an interview how when he was studying in Paris for three or four years there was one little artistic group called "Trilby." He says:

"My companions were Whistler, Du Maurier, Val Prinsep, Lamont, Thomas and Armstrong. Of course Du Maurier altered the thing a good deal, but his picture of studio life was in the main a truthful representation of our life at that time. Trilby herself, I believe, was a pure product of the author's brain.

"In many ways the most remarkable man among us was Whistler. If he had only had energy there is no knowing to what height he might have soared, but he was incorrigibly lazy. I remember visiting him once at a nursing home in Paris. He had been working a little on a study in pink carnations. It was exquisite from the extraordinary sense of color it displayed. This was his great gift. He excelled every painter ever known in purity and delicacy of coloring. He rarely finished any work, but he loved to pretend, just for fun, that his unfinished studies were perfect works of genius. Then he would chuckle when people took him at his word and declared that the very incompleteness of the sketches constituted their great artistic merit."

Two Sided Paper.

One of the most extraordinary newspapers on record is a weekly published in the little German town of Gruningen. As the place is too small to support more than one paper the Wochenblatt is the official organ of the two local political parties, the Liberals and the Socialists. Half the pages are written by members of each party, an arrangement that seems to satisfy both sides.

A CLEVER DEVICE

A Story Showing How a Fortune Hung in the Balance.

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

"John," said Mary MacKnight to her husband when he came home from business, "what do you suppose?"

"What do I suppose? Why, I suppose I'm to have a good dinner. I'm certainly hungry."

"Aunt Cynthia is coming to live with us. You know she was at our house till father died. Then she went to live with Ellen Stone."

"What's the matter with Ellen Stone?"

"Aunt Cynthia thinks she doesn't care for her except for what she can get out of her. Miss Stone is very extravagant—runs up bills and has them sent to Aunt Cynthia. You know Aunt Cynthia is very well off."

"I didn't till you told me. How do you know which is at fault, your aunt or her niece?"

"I don't. I have never seen Ellen Stone."

"What are you going to do about taking your aunt in?"

"That depends upon you."

"No, it doesn't; decide it for yourself."

Mrs. MacKnight was one of those women with whom any one could get on. She was kind hearted and would like very much to give her aunt a home. Mrs. Cynthia Withers, a widow, would pay a good round sum for her board, and that would be a benefit to Mrs. MacKnight, who, on her husband's salary, found it difficult to make ends meet. John MacKnight would rather have had Old Nick come to reside in his house, but he knew that pecuniarily it would relieve the strain on his wife, and he consented for her sake.

Mrs. Withers came and seemed much relieved to get out of Miss Stone's clutches. The old lady was a good deal broken down, and Mary MacKnight devoted herself to building her up. In this she succeeded, so far as any one could succeed, having a soothing effect upon her and taking great pains to minister to her comfort. The aunt had been much attached to Mary while the latter was a child, and it seemed now that she could not get on with any one else.

Mrs. Withers had a son who was of a roving disposition. He was not fitted to take care of his mother nor would she have been able to live with him, owing to her nervous condition. A year after she came to the MacKnights, she received news that her son had died abroad. After his death she said to Mary:

"I'm going to make a new will. While I was living with Ellen Stone I think she must have hypnotized me, for one day when I was ill she asked me to sign a paper, and I did as she bid me. She had provided two witnesses, and this makes me think that the paper I signed was a will. If so I have no doubt that it cut off my own son, to whom I had left all my property except a legacy to you. When I got better I asked Ellen to let me see the paper I had signed, and she said that, since my recovery, it was of no consequence; fearing that I was going to die, she had simply had me sign instructions with regard to my funeral and giving her authority to draw the necessary funds. When I insisted on seeing what I had signed she said she had burned it."

The new will executed by Mrs. Withers left Mary MacKnight all her property. The aunt showed the document to her heir and told her that in case of her death she would find it in an antique writing desk in her room in which she kept all her papers.

Not long after the execution of this will Mrs. Withers was advised by her physician to go to a sanitarium, where she would escape the noises of a city and have such trained attendance as she required. She did not wish to go, nor did her niece wish her to go. Though she was a great care, Mary had become accustomed to minister to her wants, and since she was Mary's only living near blood relative Mary had grown every year more attached to her. Mary went with her to the sanitarium and regretfully left her there.

It was hoped that the invalid would after a rest be so restored as to warrant her return, but she gradually became more dependent on doctors and nurses and remained in the sanitarium as long as she lived.

One day in February John MacKnight put his wife on a steamer and sent her to the Bermuda islands. The winter had been long, and Mary had not stood up under it very well. While she was away John slept at home, taking his meals outside.

It happened that the day Mary returned, her husband was unable to meet her at the dock, being detained at his place of business by a matter of importance. Mary arrived at home about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and, having a duplicate key with her, let herself into the house. Going at once upstairs she was about to enter her room when she heard something that sounded like the rustle of skirts in another chamber formerly occupied by her aunt and which had been kept just as the old lady had left it in expectation that she would return to it.

Mary entered the room and there, endeavoring to conceal herself behind the window curtains, was a woman. Seeing that she was discovered the intruder came forth and stood the picture of misery.

"What are you doing in my house?" asked Mrs. MacKnight, with severity.

"Let me go; please let me go! I have stolen nothing!"

The woman was about thirty years old, comely and handsomely dressed.

"What are you doing here, I say?" repeated Mary. "You are not a thief, you are a lady."

There were quick flashings in the eyes of the stranger indicating that she was looking for some method of extricating herself. Finally rising from her cowering attitude she said defiantly:

"I will not attempt to deceive you. I am no thief. I did not come here to steal. I came to meet the man I love, who is mine by right, yours by law."

"My husband! You come here to—Oh, heavens!"

"I know not who you are, but I do know that I am the only woman he loves."

Striding past Mrs. MacKnight defiantly, she left the room and hurried down the staircase. Mary, on the verge of collapse, fell on the bed. She heard the front door open, then the voice of her husband.

"I beg your pardon, madam; but I should like to know what you have been doing in my house."

"Let me go," came the voice of the woman who had just gone downstairs.

"Not until I have received a satisfactory explanation as to the cause of your presence here."

Mary sprang from the bed. The woman must be a thief after all and had made her believe that she had come to meet John in order to get away with the valuables she had taken and escape arrest. The thought was mingled by a delightful feeling of relief that her husband was innocent. Rushing to the landing, she cried:

"Don't let her go, John; she's a thief."

John closed the front door, shutting the intruder in. Mary ran down and confronted the woman with her husband. Both were too intent on the matter of preventing the thief from getting away with whatever she had stolen to think of saluting each other after their long separation.

"Turn over the plunder," said John. "You may as well give it up to me as to the police."

"I have no plunder," said the woman drawing quick breaths in her excitement.

"Very well, you have been caught in my house, and that is trespass. Mary, go to the 'phone and call for the police."

"Hold!" said the woman.

"Well?"

She darted her eyes about her. One thing alone might have saved her—a fire, but there was no fire in the house except in the furnace in the basement. In her desperation the woman took from under her outer coat a paper and tried to tear it, but it was folded, and she was not successful. John snatched it from her and, looking at an indorsement on the outside, read, "Last Will and Testament of Cynthia Withers."

"Who are you and what do you want with this?" asked John.

The woman made no reply for a few minutes; then she said:

"Since I have not succeeded there is no harm done and you can well afford to let me go away quietly. I am Ellen Stone."

"Ellen Stone!" gasped Mary.

"Go on," said John.

"Mrs. Withers died this morning in the sanitarium. If I could have got out with that paper I would have inherited all her property, for I have a will dated long before that one, drawn in my favor."

"But how did you know where this will was kept?" asked Mary.

"When Mrs. Withers lived with me she kept all her papers in her antique desk. I knew she must have made a second will, and there was a chance that it was in the desk. Learning that there was no one in the house during the day, I came here and, bringing a tool to raise a sash, got in. I found the desk and the will, as I hoped, and had you, Mrs. MacKnight, been a minute later I would have made good my escape. I made pretense of having come here to meet your husband, hoping that it would prevent your detaining me for a thief. Had you, Mr. MacKnight, been a minute later I would have succeeded in passing the second danger."

She paused a few moments, then continued:

"You have nothing to gain by prosecuting me for this attempt to get possession of Mrs. Withers' will, and I see no reason why you should not suffer me to depart."

"I can forgive you," said Mary, "for endeavoring to deprive me of a fortune even by a criminal ruse, but it is not so easy to forgive you for pretending that you had won him from me. Suppose, as you have said, he had not arrived till you had gone. You would not only have stolen the fortune my aunt intended for me, but it is quite possible that you might have made an irreparable breach between him and me. No; I cannot permit you to go free."

The woman cowered at this. She had committed an offense that if pressed would send her to prison for many years. John MacKnight interposed:

"Mary," he said, "you must remember that where one is cornered and must decide quickly the consequences of an act are not carefully considered. I recommend mercy."

The wife, who had so nearly been separated from her husband as well as losing a fortune, considered a moment, then said:

"Do as you like, John."

MacKnight opened the door and said to the woman one word—

"Go!"

Blunders of Authors.

The late Guy Boothby, in his novel "Bride of the Sea," makes a curious blunder. The period of the story is the year 1670, and the scene is laid in Devonshire. The novelist makes one of his characters grow quite lyrical about the splendid race of men which the famous western country has produced.

He speaks very fittingly of Drake and Hawkins and Raleigh and all the other Devonshire worthies, but he comes a dreadful cropper when he makes his hero talk of Sir John Franklin, who did not appear on the globe until more than a century had elapsed, and even then it was in the fens of Lincolnshire.

Rider Haggard has a good deal of trouble with the moon. In one case he causes that satellite to be full at a time when it could not possibly have been more than a crescent, and in "King Solomon's Mines" he introduces an eclipse of the same luminary, very convenient for his plot and for the impression of awe which his heroes wish to produce upon the natives, but quite unknown to any astronomical textbook.—Stray Stories.

Steel Pens.

The great objection to the steel pen when it first came into general use was its stiffness. There was not that "give" and spring in the metal pen which characterized the old fashioned goose quill pen.

This was remedied, however, by the side splits which we see in pens today, and for many years the method of slitting the pens by means of a press was kept secret by those famous penmakers, Gillott and Mason.

Briefly, the method of manufacture of a steel pen today may be described as follows: The blanks are pierced and the slits cut, after which the pen requires to be softened by annealing. Then they are raised and hardened, scoured with acid, colored, varnished and dried, girls afterward looking over the pens, throwing aside the faulty ones and packing the good ones into boxes ready for sale.

Carved by Nature.

A curious effect of the wear and tear to which the earth's crust is continually being subjected is shown in the Devil's slide in Utah and other peculiar formations all over the west. There exist on the South river, in the Wasatch mountains (a part of the Rockies), singularly capped pinnacles or slender pillars rising from 40 to 400 feet high and most of them crowned or capped by huge stones. These pillars are not the work of man, but are memorial monuments of huge hills from which they are cut out by the action of the air and water and the lone remains of many square miles of solid rocks which have been washed away to a depth of some 400 feet. The greater hardness of the surface has caused it to resist corrosion more than the underlying rock, thus leaving huge caps of stone perched high in the air on points of their columns. Here and there can be found a double column capped by a single stone, thus forming a natural bridge both unique and picturesque.—Health.

Beginnings In Authorship.

The first appearance in print of that successful author, Mr. Arthur Pendennis, was a poem written to match an engraving which the proprietor of a magazine found unexpectedly thrown on his hands. M. Jules Claretie's first novel was composed under somewhat similar circumstances. Edmond Dentu, a prominent publisher under the Second Empire, had widely advertised a novel entitled "Une Drolesse," by a writer who signed herself Comtesse Dash. On the eve of publication the lady wanted the title altered. The publisher refused to make any change, and in order not to waste money, hunted around for an author capable of furnishing within four weeks a novel which the title would fit. M. Claretie undertook the task, and finished it well within the stipulated time.—London Chronicle.

A SPELL BROKEN

It Enthralled a Man to His Discomfort

By MARJORIE CLOUGH

When I was a boy of seven my mother took me away from our home with her to live elsewhere. I did not know what it meant at the time, but as I grew older I learned that my parents had had a misunderstanding and had separated. When I was sixteen my mother drew me down beside her and, with her arms about me and her cheek against mine, said to me:

"Frank, dear, I am going to make a great sacrifice for you. Your father, who is very rich, has made me a proposition that if I will give you up to him he will make you his heir. But our family misfortune—our separation—has made him very bitter against women. I shall not enter into the cause of our living apart, since I don't wish to prejudice you against him. I would rather have you think that the fault was all mine.

"However this may be, your father's repugnance for my sex has taken a singular form. I sometimes think that in this respect his brain has been affected. If you go to him and he makes a will in your favor your inheritance will depend upon your living a single life."

"My dear mother," I replied, clinging to her, "I prefer to remain with you and let father leave his money to some one else. As for marrying, I only ask to be with you as long as you live. After that I care not whether I marry or remain single."

But my mother, who knew better than I the value of money, persuaded me to go, though I consented only on condition that I be permitted to visit her whenever I chose.

My father said to me never a word about our family trouble or the conditions under which I came to him, but he sent me to a lawyer, who showed me a copy of the will he had just made. In this I was made his sole heir on condition of my not being married at the time of his death, but in the event of my being afterward married I was required to turn over the property to a charitable institution which he had already endowed and which bore his name.

My father did not mention my mother except when it became necessary to refer to her in the ordinary course of conversation and then not in the least disrespectfully. Indeed, he said to me one day, "Your mother is one of the best of her sex."

So long as I lived with my mother I associated with girls as other boys did, but while with my father I was not thrown in with them, and, knowing his prejudice against them, I naturally chose my associates from my own sex. But while during my stay with my mother I cared very little about girls I had not been long deprived of their society before I began to look upon the forbidden fruit as sweet.

We lived in a city, and my room, which was in the rear of the house, looked out upon the rear of the dwellings facing on another street. Fate, who is always interfering in our affairs, must needs place at a window of the house directly back of ours a very pretty girl, just budding. When I first went to live with my father she sat there with her doll. But that was only for a brief period, and it was not long before one day when she caught sight of me looking at her she appeared thoroughly conscious of my admiration.

It did not occur to me that my looking at a girl through a back window was fraught with danger. The fact that I expected never to marry was no reason why I should not look at a girl, and this girl was especially fair to see. Besides, I sometimes saw her with others on a rear porch or in the little yard below, and all her motions were singularly graceful. As she chased her friends about or was chased by them, playing tag or some other game, she seemed to me a veritable fairy, and I spent much time looking at her through the slats of the shutters of my window.

But one day there came a break in the situation. While my charmer was playing with another little girl in the back yard, I was concealed behind the blinds, looking at them. The friend made a motion or gave a look or something toward my window that called forth a reproof from her playmate. Alas, the fatal knowledge that my little lady had something to confide and that something pertained to me had been imparted to me! That which my father doubtless considered an infection had entered my system.

Then followed a boyish way of scraping an acquaintance, really of making love, though I had no idea that I was doing anything of the kind. I procured a bow and one day, when I saw my charmer in the back yard, sent an arrow thrust through a scrap of paper, on which I had expressed a desire to make her acquaintance. She saw the arrow fall, glanced up at my window and, seeing whence the missive had come, without touching it, went into the house. This was in the evening, just before dark. Early in the morning I looked for my missive, and there was no sign of it. I felt assured that she had taken it when it was too dark for me to see her.

What use to tell what every boy and every girl has been through? I waylaid her on the street when she was going to school, but I was then too old to address her, too young to properly arrange for an introduction. The coyness of woman was in her, and she gave me no opportunity. I have forgotten now how the barrier between us was broken down—whether she dropped her schoolbooks (purposely), whether I was with a boy friend who knew her and joined in the conversation when he spoke to her or whether she gave me a smile in passing and I made bold to offer her a posy. At any rate, the first thing I knew I was floating down a very pleasant stream and in time got into the rapids.

How for three years I made love to Agatha without my father's suspecting it I don't know. Perhaps he did suspect it. It may be he knew it. If he did, he didn't trouble himself about it. He had named the conditions under which I might inherit his wealth, but he made no effort to impress me with the importance of my fulfilling them. Doubtless he argued: "I have settled the matter so far as I am concerned. If the boy chooses to throw away a fortune and at the same time take a serpent to his bosom, he is welcome to do so."

Agatha was well born and well bred, but she was at the wrong end of a period of prosperity in her family. When she became old enough to choose a career for herself she decided upon being a trained nurse. She knew the conditions of my father's will and would not for the world stand between me and a fortune. Her action in the matter alone saved me from giving it up, for I begged her to marry me. Yet, looking backward, I don't see how I would have supported her, for, being brought up as I was to inherit great wealth, I was not practical.

A strange coincidence happened. I frequently visited my mother and stayed as long as I pleased. When I went my father never asked me how long I intended to remain away, and when I returned never complained that I had been gone too long, though I am quite sure he missed me. While I was away he never communicated with me. The house might have fallen on his head and I would never have known it unless by report.

On one of my visits to my mother I stayed two weeks. I wrote to my father every few days, though I did not expect him to write to me. When I returned I was informed that he had been taken ill a few days after my departure and had been under the care of several doctors ever since. I ran upstairs and was met on the landing by a woman in a nurse's uniform.

"Agatha!" I exclaimed. "What are you doing here?"

"Nursing your father. A nurse was called suddenly; I responded and did not know where I was coming till I arrived."

"What a dispensation!"

I went in to see my father and found him still quite ill, though his doctors had pronounced him improving. He seemed much relieved at my return, but said that he had had every care, having been fortunate in his nurse. He had asked for a man, but his doctors had dissuaded him. "My nurse is a treasure," he said. "That's one thing women can do well; they can take care of sick persons."

"And persons sick at heart, too," I added. But he did not seem to heed the remark, for he closed his eyes, and, knowing how weak he was, I left him.

He was ill for several months, months as full of bliss mingled with bitterness for me as of suffering to him. Agatha remained at her post all this while, and when he became convalescent and she wished to be relieved, that she might get a rest, he begged her to rest where she was, turning over his care temporarily to me. It is needless to say she consented.

One morning she came out of the sickroom with a joyous look on her face.

"What is it?" I asked eagerly.

"What do you suppose I have succeeded in doing?"

"What?"

"I am the bearer to you of your father's request that you go to your mother and ask her to return to her home."

I was thunderstruck.

"But"— I gasped.

"But the conditions? There are no conditions except that the past, or rather, its cause, is not to be mentioned."

"And you have accomplished this?"

"Not I alone. Invalids are noncombatants. Your father has been impressed with what I have done for him, though I have been paid for doing it. This morning he asked me what he could do for me besides paying me, and I replied that if he would take steps for a reconciliation with his wife I would feel amply repaid. I have done my part. It is now for you to do yours. Persuade your mother to come back."

I clasped Agatha in my arms, then ran downstairs three steps at a time, hastened into the street, called a passing cab and bid him drive as fast as his horse could go to my mother's home. It was some time before I persuaded her to return with me, but when I pictured how near father had been to death she decided to go to him and, having once decided, could not go quickly enough to satisfy her impatience.

The spell which hung over my father had been broken by the kindly feminine attentions of a good woman, and it never returned to him.

"Frank," he said to me on the day of our reunion, "if you don't marry Agatha I'll disinherit you."

"That's pleasant," I replied. "For years I've been living under the expectation that you would disinherit me if I did."

Right to Order.

"What is your defense?" asked the lawyer.

"What would you suggest?" demanded the accused.

"Have you an alibi?"

"No, but I can get one. My wife is mighty handy about making those things."

OLD TIME PORTRAITS.

Does There Exist a Reliable Painting of the Poet Burns?

Was this the face that launched a thousand ships
And burnt the topless towers of Ilium?

asks Marlowe, writing of the vision of golden Helen. A similar question has been asked in regard to the diverging portraits of Mary Stuart. Was this the face that turned so many heads some 350 years ago? The queen of Scots was assuredly bewitching. Knox admits it; Knollys asserts it; Ruthven lost his heart to her in Lochleven castle; whoever saw her desired her. Yet not one of Mary's portraits represents her as beautiful. Romney has sufficiently explained the fascination of Lady Hamilton for Nelson. But Mary Stuart's charm remains unexplained by her portraits.

And what about Burns? The point I wish to make is that old portrait painters are not to be depended on for strict fidelity to their originals. The mere fact that they differ so much in their representations of the same subject is enough to prove it. In regard to Burns, the question bears a twofold aspect. Not only do the portraits of the poet disagree with one another, but even that which by its frequent reproduction has tacitly been accepted as the truest representation cannot have been exactly like him when it was done. I refer, of course, to the familiar Nasmyth head and bust, painted in 1787, when Burns was carrying all before him on his first visit to Edinburgh.—J. Cuthbert Hadden in Scribner's.

REAL ESTATE LEASES.

Origin of the Custom of Making Rentals For 99 or 999 Years.

Whence originated the use of the odd term in leases, 99 or 999 years?

In other days lessees and mortgagees in possession of real estate for 100 or 1,000 years demised the same at an annual rental, retaining a reversion for the last year of the original term. The object of this proceeding was to be found in the unwillingness of the under tenant to become bound to the performance of the covenant contained in the original grant and also in the importance to the lessor of a reversionary interest, without which, under the old English practice, he could not recover his rent by distraint.

Sometimes this reversion was for only three days or even for only one day, but usually in long terms the last year was retained. Out of this came the popular notion that the law provided this distraint, and hence leases were made for 99 or 900 years, when there was no reason whatever for any such odd period of time.

In England there was in special cases a restraint on corporations or ecclesiastical persons prohibiting the demise of lands belonging to them to the impoverishment of their successors for a term beyond 100 years and such leases were accordingly made for 99 years.—Harper's Weekly.

Boosting a Stock.

"Stocks are valuable in keeping with the demand for them," said a Wall street man, "and the 'demand' is often created by queer methods. A few years ago a man who is well known in the street was overloaded with a certain stock. He told his wife there was money in it and that it would soon have a big rise. Next day the good woman gave the tip to the woman who came daily to massage her. The latter had many wealthy clients, to whom she gave the get-rich-quick tip. The stock became popular, the man sold out, and the masseuse who set the ball in motion never knew why she received a present of extraordinary value at Christmas time from her client."

"From which one?"

"Why, from the one who said it was a 'good thing,' of course. The others probably discharged her."—New York Tribune.

Twenty years ago on the First of March next, a well-known resident of this city took out at age 28 a 10 pay 20 year endowment policy for $1,000, No. 43860, in the Sun Life of Canada.

The premium he paid on the participating plan was $69.30
The premium he would have on the non-par plan is 62.25

Extra paid for profits yearly for ten years. $7.05

He received in cash at the end of 20 years, $1,279.25, that is, the $70.50 extra that he paid for profits yielded him $279.25, almost 400 per cent.

Would you not like something like that?

Or, he could draw out $736.45 in cash, which is $43.45 more than all he paid in, and receive a fully paid-up participating policy for life.

You can never obtain such results as these on the non-participating plan unless you die and die early, so that the price will not become too high.

HUSTLE! THE REVIEW'S CLUB VOTE OFFER NEARS FINISH

Now is the Time to Get Subscriptions Candidates, Never Again Will There be so Many Votes Given During the Remainder of the Contest— Let Hustle be Your Motto and Act Accordingly

The great club vote offer ends Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock. Are you satisfied with your work the past few days? Do you think you will have enough votes to win the prize that you are aspiring to? Now is the time to think of these things, contestants—don't wait for two or three weeks and then, when the contest is over, say, "I wish I had done so and so," or I wish I had worked that day I spent talking to friends about how many votes I had.,' This offer, rightly improved, will put you in the great prize class. This is a chance of a life time, should you improve your time properly.

The race is running very close and the contestants that put forth the best efforts on this offer are the ones that will find themselves in the lead when the votes are counted. Bear in mind that if you want a prize, this offer gives you the chance to get it.

No one knows who will win. Many readers think they can select at least one of the winners. Some pick the candidates that are now in the lead, some are confident that others will be the fortunate ones. It cannot be ascertained how many votes any one candidate will be able to cast the closing day.—It is not wise for any contestant to estimate just how many other competitors will accumulate. Over-confidence often has lost contests of this kind and relaxation at this stage means certain ruin to the strongest candidate in the contest.

Don't think because you have a few thousand votes stored up that some of the other candidates haven't the same thing. Don't get tripped up on the little enemy that is bound to creep into your being, for if you do it is very likely that you will not get close enough to hear the car as it goes by with the winner. Good rich prizes cannot be won for a song, and the sooner the candidates find this out the better it will be for them. Make this your banner week and success will be yours.

MILLION DOLLAR BLAZE MAY HAVE HEAVY DEATH LIST

Three Bodies Are Recovered and Many Are Missing

FORTY INJURED

Canadian Press Despatch.

St. Louis, March 9. — A seven-storey building containing the Missouri Athletic Club and the Boatmens'Bank was damaged by fire to the extent of one million dollars, between midnight and six o'clock.

Three bodies have been recovered; forty were seriously injured, and an uncertain number of others who are missing are supposed to have been trapped in the building and burned to death. The manager of the club says 135 registered last night, while the clerk says only fifty were in the house and therefore the estimate of dead at present ranges all the way from fifty to one hundred.

The fire is believed to have started in the dining room on the third floor, although safe blowers in the Boatmen's Bank are also suspected.

LECTURES FOR THE BOYS' DEPARTMENT

Banquet in Y.M.C.A. Gymnisium Friday, March 27th.

Kenner will give an illustrated lecture on Rome, and on Friday, March 27th, the boys will enjoy a banquet in the gymnasium. The lectures commence at 7.30 o'clock.

EARLY METHODISM

At the regular meeting of the Fidelis Mission Band of George street Methodist church, last Friday afternoon, Mr. Peever gave a very interesting and beneficial address on "Early Methodism in Canada."

He told of how Barbara Heck and her husband, and other families among whom were the Laurences, the Emburys and the Ruckles, came across from Ireland in the Mayflower in 1760. They landed at New York, where every thing was in a turmoil about the Revolutionary War and they refusing to take up arms against the "Grand Old British Flag," left there as true U.E. Loyalists and settled near the then little town of Montreal. Here many of them wandered away from God and Barbara Heck from her good work among them, became known as the "Mother of Methodism in Canada."

Mr. Peever also spoke of the Rev. William Losee, who preached the first sermon on Methodism in the "Heck Settlement," at the home of Barbara Heck, about 1790. His text was "Repent ye therefore and be converted."

The "Old Blue Church," supposed to be the first Methodist church in Canada, is the burial place of both Paul and Barbara Heck. It stands near Prescott, Ontario.

Mr. Peever's very helpful address was much enjoyed by all.

J. W. BEATTY R.C.A. TO LECTURE ON ART

Lovers of art in Peterborough are to have the pleasure of hearing Mr. J. W. Beatty deliver a lecture on "The Progress of Art in Canada." Mr. Beatty, who is a member of the Royal Canadian Academy of Art, will give his address under the auspices of the Womens' Art Association, in the studio, in the Public Library Building, on Thursday evening, March 12th, at 8.15 o'clock. This lecture is spoken of with much enthusiasm by the Toronto branch of the W. A. A., and it is hoped that all members and their friends will be present.

THINKING LESS OF FUTURE HEAVEN AND MORE OF HEAVEN AMONG MEN

"There never was a time when the church thought less of a heaven for the future and thought more of a heaven among men."

So said Rev. R. G. Peever, to his Sunday morning congregation, when he told of the Social Service Congress, held in Ottawa last week.

He said the object was to rouse interest in social righteousness, for better conditions of men, to establish God's kingdom on earth. Mr. Peever referred briefly to the questions considered at the Congress. He said the industrial worker had a large place in the Congress. Dr. Herridge said Jesus Christ was the Son of Man and not the Son of any particular class.

The speaker said the heart of the laboring man was not irreligious, as had een claimed, but it was intensely religious. Strip socialism and anarchism of political aspects and these are religious movements.

That Canada was drinking more liquor per head, he said, was due to the fact that the saloon was centralizing in the cities.

REV. ROLLINS WONDERS THAT HE IS NOT IN JAIL

Fight for Betterment of Conditions He Says is Not All Plain Sailing

St. Andrew's Church sent Rev. Jas. Rollins as a delegate to the Social Service Congress at Ottawa, and last evening Mr. Rollins gave his impressions on that great gathering. The subject was the "New Call to the Old Church."

During the course of his remarks, the preacher said it was not all plain sailing when fighting for the betterment of conditions. He narrated the history of the petition for a policewoman in this city, and told of what had followed. He wondered, he said, that he was not in jail.

If as it had been said, they had done an illegal act, it was the duty of the Commissioners to arrest them.

He also referred to the application for the transfer of a liquor licence which had been before the License Commissioners. He had been in the witness box. Two of the members has refused to allow him to give character evidence as to the applicant for the transfer. The members who so voted were Mr. Jas. Kendry and Mr. R. Sheehy, he said.

Mr. Rollins held that the giving of character evidence was provided for in the Act.

Then he continued, on Saturday night, the transfer had been granted, the only dissenting voice being that of the chairman.

Rev. Mr. Rollins announced that on next Sunday evening he would deal with the subject "Peterboro, to-day and to-morrow."

AFTER VOTERS WHO NEGLECTED TO PAY $10 FOR RIGHT TO VOTE

An echo of the last local option campaign is resounding through the office of the Tax Collector and also the office of the Police Chief.

Quite a number of would-be voters declared that they were blessed with property valued at $400, and accordingly they were placed on the voters' list.

Some paid their account of $10, but many did not. Now the Tax Collector has presented the Police Chief with the names of the delinquents and they will be asked to meet their obligations.

Some time ago the temperance workers asked the City Council to pass a by-law making it necessary for the candidate for the ballot to pay up before being allowed to vote.

SUFFRAGETTES GAVE POLICE HARD BATTLE

When Women Discovered That Their Leader Had Been Abducted They Threw Themselves Upon the Police

LONDON, March 9.—Militant suffragettes again engaged in a battle with the police yesterday on their favorite field, Trafalgar Square, and in a pouring rain. The arrest of Sylvia Pankhurst for the sixth time under the "Cat and Mouse" law, precipitated the conflict. In addition to Miss Pankhurst, seven women and three men were arrested.

Several hundred women and men had marched in procession to the square to attend a meeting of the Men's Federation for Woman Suffrage. Sylvia Pankhurst, who for some weeks had been hiding from the police, arrived in the square in a taxicab to deliver a speech, but detectives surrounded the cab and started it for Holloway Jail before the militants realized what was happening.

When it was discovered that Miss Pankhurst had been abducted the chairwoman of the meeting, Miss Patterson, who later was among those arrested, shouted to her supporters from the base of the Nelson column, "Follow the flag and see if we can't find something to do."

The militants then surged toward the Government buildings in Whitehall with the suffrage banner borne aloft, but a cordon of mounted police barred their way.

Some of the women assailed the police with short sticks, but the marchers were soon dispersed.

Having received a refusal of an audience of King George, in which it was proposed that a deputation from the Women's Social and Political Union shall lay before him their claim for the vote, and their complaint against forcible feeding, Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the militant suffragette leader, has addressed another letter to the monarch. In the letter she declares her intention to lead a delegation to Buckingham Palace to see the King.

REPORT ON INVESTIGATION CANAL ADMINISTRATION

Report of G. H. Ferguson M.L.A. as Laid on the Table of the House This Afternoon

In justice to the suspended Trent Valley officials and their friends, The Review publishes the report of Mr. G. H. Ferguson, who investigated the affairs at the local department. The report was laid on the table of the House at Ottawa this afternoon.

Honourable Frank Cochrane,
Minister of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, Canada.

Under authority of the commissions issued to me in that behalf I proceeded to investigate the general administration of the Trent Valley Canal and the conduct of the employees and now beg to report as follows:

Alexander J. Grant is styled Superintending Engineer and has under his jurisdiction all new construction work on the Canal.

Joseph H. McClellan is known as Superintendent and is in charge of the maintenance of the Canal.

I found it convenient to deal with the two branches separately and first proceeded to investigate the complaints referred to me in connection with Mr. McClellan's branch.

It is charged that grave irregularities occurred during the season of 1912 in connection with the purchase of certain explosives for use on the Canal.

For some years previous to 1912 Superintendent McClellan had purchased the explosives he required from the Kingan Hardware Company, of Peterborough. In 1912 he shifted his patronage to Daniel Cinnamon, a hardware merchant of Lindsay The particular explosive in question here is known as "Blaster's Friend," and is manufactured by Dominion Explosives, Limited. This is put up in sticks or cartridges of different strengths 1 1-4 and 1 1-2 inches thick and 8 and 12 inches in length. A case of the eight inch sticks weighs fifty pounds, which from the eivdence, appears to be the usual weight of a box of explosives. The same sized case of twelve inch goods seems to average only about 35 to 37 pounds.

Robert G. Kingan, the President and Manager of the Kingan Hardware Company, who seems to be a very close friend of McClellan's, persuaded the latter to use a special make of Blasters Friend, known as the "Submarine Special," which is put up in sizes 1 1-2 x 12.

During 1912 three purchases were made, as follows:

May, 1912—1 ton.
July, 1912—2 tons.
Sept., 1912—1 ton.

In the May shipment only forty cases went forward, the balance of the ton being retained in Kingan's magazine at Peterorough.

In the July order 112 cases should have been delivered, but only eighty cases were sent the Department. The remaining thirty-two were taken to the Hardware Company's magazine.

All these explosives were for use at Lindsay and were checked on arriving there by Robert Hamilton, the foreman, who had charge of the storehouse. Hamilton had weighed some sticks from a box of the May shipment and by counting the sticks had satisfied himself that there was a shortage in the order. He reported this to Overseer Samuel Clegg, who was his superior officer, but the latter apparently did nothing about it.

When the eighty cases reached him on August 5th, he weighed some of the boxes and checked up some of the boxes and checked up some of the weights and found a shortage of upwards of one thousand pounds. He reported this to Overseer Clegg and to Cinnamon and the folowing Saturday, August 10th, told Accountant Bartlett about it.

The result of this discovery was that Kingan Hardware Company delivered up forty-two cases more to cover the ten cases short in May and thirty-two cases short in July. All dealings with the Kingan people were conducted in a remarkable manner and are shrouded in a most suspicious atmosphere.

Kingan accounts for the shortage in both lost bys aying he believed there was fifty pounds in each case. His evidence is that every time anything was added to or taken from the stock in the magazine it is noted in the magazine stock book, so that the stock book constantly shows a complete inventory of all explosives on hand. I file with this report this stock book, marked exhibit 20. The entry of May 6th, 1912, shows that he had just put in stock fifty cases (presumably a ton) of special submarine. He knew that was all he had purchased. He purchased it purposely to sell to the Canal office, because he says, they were his only customers for it. Notwithstanding this, when a ton is ordered he ships out only forty cases and the ten cases improperly retained appear in his book at each stock taking thereafter.

Moreover, when the forty-two cases are turned over to the Canal authorities the stock book shows that Kinggan did not follow his rule of taking stock of the balance on that date, but simply crosses out the entry of forty-two cases where it appears under date of August 8th. He gives no reason for adopting this unusual method. The only reason I can conceive ofi s a desire to conceal the date of delivery.

Kingan secured an order from McClellan in the latter part of July for two tons of Submarine Special. It was shipped from the factory at Sand Point on July 29th as part of a car lot. On August 1st Kingan wrote Cinnamon enclosing invoice dated July 30th for 4018 pounds and requested Cinnamon to bill the Department at once dating his invoice 30th July and he intimated that an arrangement had been made to have the account certified and put through in theoffi ce at Peterborough. The bill dated July 30th is certified by Hamilton and Clegg and McClellan and sent to Ottawa by the latter with his monthly return. As a fact the goods were not shipped from Peterorough until August 2nd and were received by Hamilton on August 5th.

When the car of explosive reached Peterboro, Kingan gave his man orders to unload everything but eighty cases of Special Submarine, which were to go to Lindsay, and that was done. Thirty-two cases belonging to the two tone lot ordered by McClellan were put into Kingan's magazine and remained there until August 28th, when as a result of Hamilton's report of the shortage, McClellan spoke to Kingan and the latter turned these thirty-two cases along with the ten cases short in May, over to Farein, the Department storeman, and the Government subsequently paid seventeen dollars ($17) to have it hauled to Lindsay, where the vendor should have delivered it.

A cheque for 4018 pounds, the full amount of the purchase, was delivered to Cinnamon, but, at the instance of Hamilton and Bartlett, he refused to pay Kingan until the matter of the shortage was straightened out. Cinnamon was absent from home for a time, but on his return he took the matter up with Kingan. On Aug. 26th the latter wrote Cinnamon stating that the shortage on the order was in the Government warehouse. This statement he knew to be untrue, as it was only turned over to Farein on Aug. 28th. He further states in that letter that the officials at Peterboro knew all about the shortage before they certified to the invoice for the full amount. Despite this assurance Cinnamon refused to pay until he knew the proper quantity had been delivered and my finding is that it was only on account of this refusal that the balance of the explosive was delivered. McClellan writes Cinnamon under date of Aug. 29th advising him that "the balance of Blasters' Friend was received here and placed in our magazine." The letter is worded to give the impression that the shortage had been made good immediately it had been discovered. Kingan's letter of Aug. 29th to Cinnamon stating that the Department officials purposely retained the balance of the order in Peterboro is contradicted by his own evidence under oath, and is undoubtedly false. It was obviously written with the purpose of allaying suspicion against himself and heading off any investigation that might be serious in its consequences to him. McClellan's statement under oath that a part of the explosive had been taken off at Peterboro to be used at Balsover is in the same category. There was no work being done at Balsover and none in contemplation.

Sept. 13th Cinnamon called upon Superintendent and solicited a further order for Blaster's Friend. McClellan refused him the order upon the ground that he didn't need any more. My conclusion is that at this very time he had an understanding with Kingan to take another ton which was afterwards delivered and billed through Cinnamon.

From a careful perusal of the correspondence filed herewith the evidence taken under oath and the demeanor of the witnesses, I am forced to the conclusion that there was a collusion between McClellan and Kingan. I am convinced that if McClellan was not actively a party to it he at least knew of it and acquiesced to it. There can be no question but that an attempt was made to defraud the Government which would have succeeded except for the discovery made by Hamilton.

One is at a loss to understand why the Department should pay such a high price for explosives. Kingan buys it for nineteen cents at the mill. The freight rate is eighty-eight cents. He sells to Cinnamon for twenty-two cents and he in turn charges the Department twenty-seven cents. Either some ulterior motive or gross incompetency is responsible for business methods.

Moreover, Cinnamon avers that the goods were ordered and sent forward as a rule without his knowledge. His part in the transaction merely consisted in making out an invoice; adding five cents to Kingan's price and taking this rake-off as a profit for himself.

When undertaking to widen my field of inquiry into the general affairs of the maintenance department I found on every hand insurmountable difficulties due to lack of complete records and confusion of those in existence. Until the present accountant, Mr. E. H. Bartlett, took charge, there was absolutely no office system in existence; practically no pretense made of scrutinizing accounts, time slips, or pay sheets; no proper cash account and a woeful lack of records of any kind in connection with the office.

This chaotic condition rendered it impossible to make anything like a full and complete examination of the affairs of the department.

This report sets forth a comparatively few of the irregularities and fraudulent practices in vogue in the offices under Suprintendent McClellan's supervision. He has not only practiced deception and dishonesty himself, but has condoned it and winked at others and has proven himself hopelessly incompetent for the position he holds.

At the outset of the inquiry he expresses surprise when I point out to him that W. F. Nelson, who conducts a typewriting office in Peterboro, has been carried on the pay list as a laborer, and he says that it is an exceptional case and he knew of no others.

As the inquiry proceeds and these deceptions are unearthed, and it is shown that bankers, lawyers, doctors, dentists, undertakers, barbers, merchants and almost every class of business and profession is represented on his pay sheets in a similar way, he confessed to such methods being an ordinary practice in the office over which he nominally presides. So far as superintending the Canal and safeguarding the public interests is concerned it is amply proven that there has been no serious attempt to do so. McClellan seems to have engaged himself largely with matters of political patronage and pleasure seeking jaunts at the public expense, and the bills for liquor and other refreshments and meals on the boat eloquently testify to his popularity as an entertainer. The evidence shows that these entertainments have ceased since since the fall of 1911. The last bill for liquors and cigars to regale the guests of the Superintendent oboard the Bessie Butler is paid in ctober, 1911. The grocers and confectioners accounts have ceased since that date. The carnival of corrupt padding of pay lists came to an end. But so far as control and management is concerned, there is no improvement and cannot be under the present incumbent.

Mr. E. H. Bartlett the present accountant has done a great deal to systematize the business of the office during the short time he has been there. He has inaugurated many reforms and evidently has a high sense of his responsibility as an officer of the Department and had he more latitude could do much more to improve the efficiency of the work of oce.

It is impossible in this report to give a resume of all the eight hundred pages of evidence. The following however, are a few cases of the deception continually practiced upon the Government and these are charteristic of the business methods followed and the reckless disregard of public interests displayed by the officials of the department and particularly by Overseer Gordon and Accountant Clarry, former officials of this Department, and Superintendent McClellan and Overseer Clegg.

W. BURGOYNE, who is a grocer at Fenelon Falls, had his accounts for goods supplied the cookeries, paid by being put on the time sheet as a laborer.

E. YOUNG, a grocer, at Young's Point, apears as a laborer on the time sheet for the amount of his grocery bill.

D. MCKERCHER, a veterinary surgeon and livery man, of Peterborough, figures on the pay sheet several times as a laborer.

A. B. SPILLMAN drew a number of cheques as a laorer for work in and about Peterborough. Mr. Spillman is a hotel keeper, at Hastings, and never did a day's work on the Canal. He was put on the pay roll to secure payment for board bills.

A. G. LAWLESS, the proprietor of hotels at Lakefield and Bobcaygeon, received the cheques in a similar way as a laborer to meet his accounts for board against the department.

W. W. DARCY, a Burleigh hotel keeper figures on the pay roll for a amount of his board bill.

HECTOR CAMPBELL, a hotelman of Kirkfield, has a bill paid in a similar way

MR. BLADE, a florist, of Peterboro, furnished flowers for decorative purposes about the locks. He furnished a wreath for the funeral of a deceased employee, and he furnished also a rather expensive bouquet presented to the Superintendent's daughter at the christening of the Bessie Butler. To pay for these flowers Mr. Blade is put on the pay roll at a laborer.

W. H. HAMILTON, a Peterboro grocer, had an account which was paid by putting him down as a laborer at Gull River.

T. LANE. The Superintendent bought some pillows for one of the boats from Mr. T. Lane, a furniture dealer, of Peterboro, in 1910. These were paid for by putting down Mr. Lance as a laborer on pay roll.

C. R. NIXON boared Mr. Chas. Calcutt, the captain of a government tug in 1910. The accounts are sent in to the department and Mr. Nixon is put down as a laborer on the pay roll for sufficient time to cover the amount of the account.

A. GIBSON, a jeweller in Peterboro, figures as a laborer. The Superintendtn says that this was to pay for badges for the lockmen, alarm clocks on the boats, and such things as that.

G. N. GRAHAM, proprietor of the Oriental Hotel, Peterboro, according to the pay sheet for Oct., 1907, is paid $9.50 for six day's labor. This was to pay for meals at the hotel.

W. H. ROBINSON, proprietor of the Times newspaper, Peterborough, had an account of $3.60 in March, 1909. He is put on as a laborer, and his account is paid in that way.

TO RAISE "MYSTERY SHIP."

Effort Will Be Made to Pump Air Into Charles S. Price.

TORONTO, March 9.—Detroit and Toronto steamboat men are planning to raise the steamer Charles S. Price, which lies in sixty feet of water in Lake Huron. The Price was one of the five-hundred-footers that was lost in the great storm on Nov. 9 last.

For several days after the storm the floating upturned hull of the Price, which was dubbed "the Mystery Ship," baffled steamboat men. The vessel for a time was thought to be the steamer James Carruthers of Toronto, a boat of similar dimensions, which was also lost.

The experiment of raising the boat will be watched with interest. The idea is to send a diver down to bore holes in the bottom of the upturned craft and pump air into her water tanks for the purpose of driving the water out. If this proves successful, and the hull rises to the surface, it is the intention to beach her in shallow water and pump the water out of her side tanks.

When the name of the "Mystery Ship" was discovered she was abandoned by her owners, the Mahoning Steamship Co. of Cleveland, to the underwriters.

The Charles S. Price, which was built at Lorain in 1910, was a vessel of exceptionally high power, and fitted with all the modern improvements in shipbuilding. She was 504 feet long, with a 54-foot beam and a draught of 30 feet.

Leaves $300,000 To Church.

HALIFAX, N.S., March 9. — The will of the late Hon. James Pitts was probated Saturday. The estate is valued at $850,000. The Methodist Church of Newfoundland benefits to the extent of $300,000 now and $70,000 more at the death of his widow. He also left the Methodist, Anglican, Catholic Orphanages $2,000 apiece, and Mount Allison University $5,000.

At his widow's death seventeen nephews and nieces will divide the whole estate, getting about $30,000 each.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, March 9.—An English expert, after considerable prospecting here, declares he has discovered a large deposit of radium-bearing ore, and that a sample of the ore sent to the United States has been pronounced satisfactory.

Duke Can't Visit the Yukon.

OTTAWA, March 9. — Mr. Alfred Thompson, M.P. for the Yukon, waited upon the Duke of Connaught and presented an invitation from the Arctic Brotherhood to visit the Yukon next summer. Accompanying the invitation was a beautiful lamp of unique design, with a shade in caribou skin and gold nuggets, made by Miss Ogburn, a talented artist of Dawson. The duke regrets his inability to accept the invitation.

SLAIN WITH HAMMER

Halifax Widow Is Victim of Murderous Assault by Young Man.

HALIFAX, N.S., March 9. — Mrs. Margaret Brown, a widow, aged 50 years, was murderously attacked with a sledge hammer in her home in this city early yesterday morning, and died of her injuries at the Victoria General Hospital last night. James Murphy, a young Scotchman, was arrested by the police, and to-day he will have to face a charge of murder in the police court.

Family troubles are alleged to be the cause of the crime. Murphy is said to have been marired to a daughter of the dead woman.

This is the first murder in this city since 1903.

The prisoner is about 26 years of age, a machinist, and came here from Glasgow. It is said that he had been drinking on Saturday night.

A SAMPLE OF GRIT CRITICISM.

THE LINDSAY POST, like many Liberal papers, having nothing for which they can critise the Borden Government, resorts to a misstatement, due, we hope, to ignorance. It says:

> "Notwithstanding that the Civil Service Act requires that all appointments of certain classes to the Civil Service shall be as the result of competitive examination, the Government has admitted in the Commons that since November 10th, 1911, no less than 361 civil servants have been appointed to permanent positions in two devisions of the service coming within these provisions of the Act, without passing the semi-annual examinations. If the figures for the first division had been given this number would no doubt be greatly increased. Not only has the Borden Government been ruthless in its dismissals of civil servants, but it has been equally indifferent to all obligations of honor and decency in the matter of appointments it has made."

In the first place the Act does not require all appointments to be by competitive examinations. The Act was passed by the late Laurier administration and is a very good sample of their weak-kneed legislation. The Civil Service would no doubt be greatly improved if all servants had to pass proper examinations, but the Liberals felt that some of their friends might have difficulty in passing the examinations set, so they inserted a clause permitting appointments without the formality of an examination for "special qualifications," a most elastic and convenient clause. Will our friend the Lindsay Post please take note of this, and also of the fact that the number of dismissals under the Borden Government is much smaller than that under Laurier for the same time.

WHY PENSIONS MUST WAIT.

THE HON. W. T. WHITE in the House of Commons, referred to the question of Old Age Pensions thus:—

> "Whether the amount would be seven, ten or fifteen millions, we can be assured that a very substantial sum indeed, and an increasing amount from year to year, would have to be provided from the revenues of the Dominion. Having regard to the programme that confronts this Government and will confront governments in Canada for many years to come, I can forecast that our expenditures upon public works of all character will be very large, probably sufficiently so not only to exhaust our revenue, but to compel us—and there could be no serious criticism of the wisdom of that—to borrow abroad, especially for a part, if not the whole of our capital expenditure. Under these conditions, the financial side of the matter does become important."

The above speech, taken from Hansard, of the Finance Minister, explains why he declared in course of the discussion of the motion by Mr. Kyte, M.P., that it was necessary for the Old Age Pensions scheme, of which he fully approved, to wait.

IS A BANQUET APPROPRIATE ?

THERE IS a proposal to "dine" Sir Mackenzie Bowell at Ottawa in recognition of his having passed the ninety mark. The Montreal Star gives the following editorial notice concerning Canada's Grand Old Man:

> "Practically all his life long, he has been in the public service. He came into the House of Commons at Confederation—nearly a half-century ago. He was a member of the Administration which Sir John Macdonald formed when he came back to power in 1878—an occasion which is only just remembered to-day by men of fifty. He sat steadily beside his great leader until his death in 1891; and those who were in the Chamber when that death was announced, recall vividly the touching spectacle of Mackenzie Bowell openly wiping his eyes.
>
> After the death of Sir John, Conservative Premiers appeared in rapid succession; and Sir Mackenzie Bowell was the third. By that time, he had been translated to the Senate, where he led the Conservative party with courtesy and vigor until his retirement in 1906. Eight years have passed since then; and Sir Mackenzie is still in his place, inspiring his colleagues and maintaining a cheery outlook on life. He has seen his party come back to power again, having lived and fought with it through its two terms of Opposition under Mackenzie and Laurier, and yet he has not an enemy on the Liberal benches. Many thousands of his friends and admirers in Canada will sit down, in spirit, with the banqueters who are to honor him in Ottawa."

In view of the character of the man and his long life of useful public service, the proposal does not seem to harmonize with its object, however good intentioned it may be. Do they want to kill the old man with a big feed or merely try out his already thoroughly tested digestive apparatus ? There seems to be too much banquetting of public men in Canada, as though that were the best way of recognizing public service. A big dinner was a splendid way to get into the good graces of a ferocious North American savage if one is to apply the teaching of Parkman, and, while a good meal is never to be despised, yet we think there are more fitting ways of honouring a man of Sir Mackenzie Bowell's calibre. The moving spirit, whoever he is, of this proposed banquet may have something else in addition to offer concerning which he maintains a discreet silence. We hope it is so, but of course just now it is only a hope.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE HAMILTON SPECTATOR contained the following paragraph:—

> "The trouble with Monsieur Evanturel, Liberal M.L.A., for Prescott, is that he seems very shy of moral propinquity."

Evanturel bore a heavy accusation in the Assembly, but we never expected him to be charged with such a heinous crime as this.

AT THE banquet and conference of Liberal newspaper men held in Toronto, we noticed that our old friend Hal. Donly, who severely scored the Rowell policy a little while ago, was one of the loudest supporters of the Liberal leader. Does Hal merely talk or does he not ?

THE REVIEW is in receipt of a criticism of an editorial signed by "Conservative," who was apparently ashamed to place his name to what he wrote. It appears to be the underhand work of a dyed-in-the-wool Grit, or of a disgruntled Conservative, who is never satisfied with anything. If he feels any injustice has been done, let him sign his name, or come to the office and discuss the matter. Otherwise we would advise him to buy a newspaper of his own and edit it to his own satisfaction.

Protestant View of Divorce.

The Presbyterian, Toronto.

We believe we interpret the general Christian sentiment of this country in saying that divorce in the strict sense of the word, carrying with it the right of an innocent party to marry again, should be granted only in a case where the marriage vows of fidelity have been broken. In such a case, Protestant opinion at least has always recognized the legitimacy of divorce. This position seems to be in accordance with sound reason. The marriage relation has already been destroyed, the tie has been violently ruptured, and the decree of divorce is but an outward recognition of what has taken place. Again—and this is most important from the Christian point of view—the admission of this one exception to the indissolubility of the marriage bond is in harmony with the recorded teaching of Jesus Christ.

BARLEYCORN

By Walt Mason

The man who trains with Barleycorn is loaded down with sorrow; to-day he's seedy and forlorn, he'll be the same to-morrow. There is no sympathy for him, however great his troubles; his nose is red his eyes are dim, from drinking stuff that bubbles. He may of his misfortune sob, but little boots or shoes it; he is the last to get a job, he is the first to lose it. The sober boys save up the stamps, their money in a jar keep, while Boozer, with his bloodshot lamps, is cringing to the barkeep. His head is full of racking aches, his thirst demands an ocean, and when he sleeps he dreams of snakes that reach from here to Goshen. He has no use for wholesome grub, the kind that warms and tickles; he'd rather stand around a tub and reach for slaw and pickles. He loafs with other red-nosed boys and thinks a flagon bliss is, and all the sane and wholesome joys the poor old boozer misses. An armchair in the inglenook, the fireside's satisfaction, a quiet evening with a book, for him have no attraction. A place among the guzzling crowd to him is bliss and bounty; and finally a pauper's shroud, and planting by the county.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

THE ENGINEERING DEPARTMENT.

Editor, Review:

Dear Sir,—With your kind permission I would like to say a few words to warn our very worthy Mayor and the good citizens of Peterborough what they are up against in connection with the manoeuvres and intrigues now going on at the City Hall under the misnamed title, "Reorganization of the Engineering Department." I see by the evening edition that it is now proposed to eliminate the services of Mr. T. A. S. Hay from the position of Assistant City Engineer, and to substitute a "standard in Engineering.

The citizens of Peterborough are at the present time face to face with most important undertakings involving the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars. The execution of these undertakings and the expenditure of this money wise or otherwise, will depend almost solely upon the Engineering Department and the men who man it. Eliminate the services of Mr. T. A. S. Hay from Peterborough Engineering Department and who is left—have you a "civil engineer" properly so-called—if you have I would like to know where he obtained his diploma. I have searched in vain through the registers of both Canadian and American institutions which are authorized to grant the Diploma, but I have failed to find the name of anyone now in the employ of the City of Peterborough.

I will be much surprised indeed if any such experienced and practical business man as our worthy Mayor is, will allow himself to be cajoled or flim-flammed at this important epoch in Peterborough's history into dispensing with the services of Mr. T. A. S. Hay, who has to his credit at least a thorough knowledge of the Engineering profession, and a practical experience of forty years to back it up.

Yours truly,
PETERBOROUGHONIAN.

EAST CITY GARBAGE.

Editor, Review:

Sir,—For the past few days I have noticed in your paper that some of our noted aldermen in East City are knocking the "Garbage Collection."

Regarding this I wish you would spare me a small space in this, your paper.

Why does Mr. McIntyre object to it? Does he do this just because he has his own house and a big yard where he can bury his garbage, or does he and some more of his friends who own quite a little property in this section think that it costs too much money to keep the houses sanitary?

It shows the real Scotch of it. Grab all you can and hold on to it.

Does Mr. McIntyre expect the support of the East End house renter? I guess he does. But if they should die from unsanitary conditions where would he get his support?

I never thought Mr. McIntyre was so narrow-minded that he could not stand the uplifting of the East End.

I am proud to see that the City Council has voted this down on Ald. McIntyre, Anderson, and Green, and trust that they will see the good and sanitary results this summer and make them feel ashamed for trying to do this kind of dirty act.

Great credit belongs to our most progressive Health Inspector, Mr. Spence.

Mr. Spence, look in some of those three aldermanic yards and see how the garbage is disposed there, perhaps you will have an eye-opener.

Thanking you for your kindness in giving this space in your paper,

Yours,
J. C. K.

THE FIRST VOICE.

Editor, Review:

Dear Sir,—In your issue of Saturday, the 7th inst., a writer signing himself Briton, makes a vicious onslaught upon our worthy and honored judge for his report to the Board of Police Commissioners.

I do not believe him when he says thousands of Peterborough's best citizens censure the conduct of the judge. Since the address, Briton is the first voice I have heard against it, on the other hand I have heard many speak in the highest terms of it.

Sincerely yours,
CITIZEN.

Warren Y. Soper, the millionaire manufacturer of electrical apparatus, who began life as a telegraph messenger boy, and is now one of the wealthiest citizens of Ottawa, is sixty years of age to-day. He tells of meeting a former resident of the capital not long ago, who evinced considerable curiosity as to the extent of his fortune. "They tell me you are worth half a million," hazarded the man. To this Mr. Soper replied by relating the story of a sea captain, who left a sailor at the wheel one night, directing him to sail by a certain star. Coming on deck some hours afterwards he found the man asleep. Roughly awaking him, he asked for an explanation of his conduct. "Didn't I tell you to hold her course by that star?" he demanded. "Of course you did," replied the man, "but we got past the glimmering thing long ago."

The Danger of Imitations.

An Ohio druggist writes to "The Practical Druggist," a prominent New York Drug Journal, as follows: "Please furnish formula for Castoria. All the formulas I have worked with are either ineffective or disagreeable to administer."

To this "The Practical Druggist" replies: "We do not supply formulas for proprietary articles. We couldn't if we wanted to. His experience with imitative formulas is not surprising, but just what is to be expected. When Castoria is wanted, why not supply the genuine. If you make a substitute, it is not fair or right to label it Castoria. We can give you all sorts of laxative preparations for Children, but not Castoria, and we think a mother who asks for Castoria would not feel kindly toward you if you gave her your own product under such a name."

Tarzan of the Apes

by Edgar Rice Burroughs

Copyright, 1912, by the Frank A. Munsey company.

Four sailors had sweated beneath the burden of its weight. Tarzan of the apes picked it up as though it had been empty and, with the spade slung to his back by a piece of rope, carried it off into the densest part of the jungle.

He could not well negotiate the trees with his awkward burden, but he kept to the trails and so made fairly good time.

For several hours he traveled until he came to an impenetrable wall of matted and tangled vegetation. Then he took to the lower branches, and in another fifteen minutes he emerged into the amphitheater of the apes, where they met in council or to celebrate the rites of the dumdum.

Near the center of the clearing and not far from the drum, or altar, he commenced to dig. This was harder work than turning up the freshly excavated earth at the grave, but Tarzan of the apes was persevering, and so he kept at his labor until he was rewarded by seeing a hole sufficiently deep to receive the chest and effectually hide it from view.

Now the natural curiosity, which is as common to men as to apes, prompted Tarzan to open the chest and examine its contents, but the heavy lock and massive iron bands baffled both his cunning and his immense strength, so that he was compelled to bury the chest without having his curiosity satisfied.

By the time Tarzan had hunted his way back to the vicinity of the cabin, feeding as he went, it was quite dark.

Within the little building a light was burning, for Clayton had found an unopened tin of oil which had stood intact for twenty years. The lamps also were still usable.

As Tarzan approached the window nearest the door he saw that the cabin had been divided into two rooms by a rough partition of boughs and sailcloth.

In the front room were the three men, the two older deep in argument, while the younger, tilted back against the wall on an improvised stool, was deeply engrossed in reading one of Tarzan's books.

Tarzan was not particularly interested in the men, however, so he sought the other window. There was the girl. How beautiful her features! How delicate her snowy skin!

She was writing at Tarzan's own table beneath the window. Upon a pile of grasses at the far side of the room lay the negress, asleep.

For an hour Tarzan feasted his eyes upon her while she wrote. He longed to speak to her, but dared not attempt, for he was convinced that she would not understand him, and he feared, too, that he might frighten her away.

At length she arose, leaving her manuscript upon the table. She went to the bed upon which had been spread several layers of soft grasses. These she rearranged. Then she extinguished the lamp, and all within the cabin was wrapped in Cimmerian darkness.

Cautiously Tarzan intruded his hand between the meshes of the lattice until his whole arm was within the cabin. Carefully he felt upon the desk. At last he grasped the paper upon which Jane Porter had been writing and withdrew his hand, holding the precious treasure.

Tarzan folded the sheets into a small parcel, which he tucked into the quiver with his arrows. Then he sped away into the jungle as softly and as noiselessly as a shadow.

CHAPTER XIII.

The Jungle Toll.

EARLY the following morning Tarzan awoke, and the first thought of the new day, as the last of yesterday, was of the wonderful writing which lay hidden in his quiver.

Hurriedly he brought it forth, hoping against hope that he could read what the beautiful white girl had written there the preceding evening.

At the first glace he suffered the bitterest disappointment of his whole life. He was baffled by strange, uncouth characters the like of which he had never seen before! Why, they even tipped in the opposite direction from all that he had ever examined either in printed books or the difficult script of the few letters he had found.

For twenty minutes he pored over them, when suddenly they commenced to take familiar though distorted shapes. Ah, they were his old friends, but badly crippled!

Then he began to make out a word here and a word there. His heart leaped for joy. He could read it, and he would.

In another half hour he was progressing rapidly, and, but for an exceptional word now and again he found it very plain sailing.

Here is what he read:

West coast of Africa, about 10 degrees south latitude. (So Mr. Clayton says.)
Febuary 3(?), 1909.

Dearest Hazel—It seems foolish to write you a letter that you may never see, but I simply must tell somebody of our awful experiences since we sailed from Europe on the ill fated Arrow.

If we never return to civilization, as now seems only too likely, this will at least prove a brief record of the events which led up to our fate, whatever it may be.

As you know, we were supposed to have set out upon a scientific expedition to the Kongo. Papa was presumed to entertain some wondrous theory of an unthinkable ancient civilization, the remains of which lay buried somewhere in the Kongo valley. But after we were well under sail the truth came out.

It seems that an old bookworm who has a book and curio shop in Baltimore discovered between the leaves of a very old Spanish manuscript a letter written in 1550, detailing the adventures of a crew of mutineers of a Spanish galleon bound from Spain to South America with a vast treasure of "doubloons" and "pieces of eight," I suppose, for they certainly sound weird and piraty.

The writer had been one of the crew, and the letter was to his son, who was at the time the letter was written master of a Spanish merchantman.

Many years had elapsed since the events the letter narrated had transpired, and the old man had become a respected citizen of an obscure Spanish town, but the love of gold was still so strong upon him that he risked all to acquaint his son with the means of attaining fabulous wealth for them both.

The writer told how when but a week out from Spain the crew had mutinied and murdered every officer and man who opposed them. They defeated their own ends by this very act, for there was none left competent to navigate a ship at sea.

They were blown hither and thither for two months until, sick and dying of scurvy, starvation and thirst, they had been wrecked on a small islet.

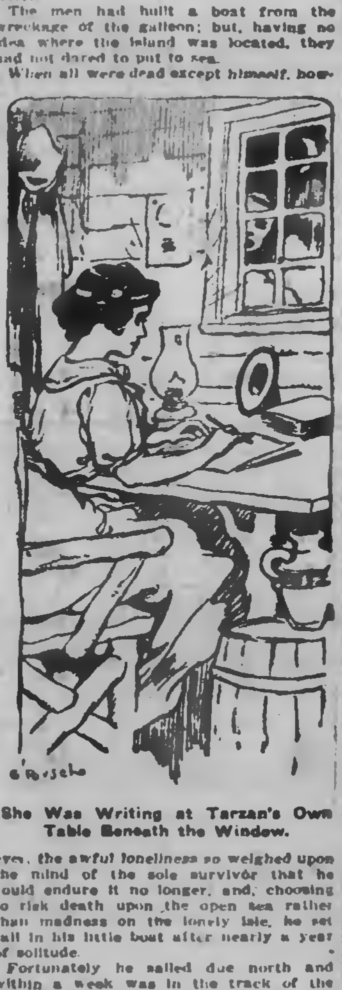
The galleon was washed high upon the beach, where she went to pieces, but not before the survivors, who numbered but ten souls, had rescued one of the great chests of treasure.

This they buried well upon the island, and for three years they lived there in constant hope of being rescued.

One by one they sickened and died until only one man was left, the writer of the letter.

The men had built a boat from the wreckage of the galleon; but, having no idea where the island was located, they had not dared to put to sea.

When all were dead except himself, however, the awful loneliness so weighed upon the mind of the sole survivor that he could endure it no longer, and, choosing to risk death upon the open sea rather than madness on the lonely isle, he set sail in his little boat after nearly a year of solitude.



She Was Writing at Tarzan's Own Table Beneath the Window.

Fortunately he sailed due north and within a week was in the track of the Spanish merchantmen plying between the West Indies and Spain and was picked up by one of these vessels homeward bound.

The story he told was merely one of shipwreck in which all but a few had perished, the balance, except himself, dying after they reached the island. He did not mention the mutiny or the chest of buried treasure.

The master of the merchantman assured him that from the position at which they picked him up and the prevailing winds for the past week he could have been on no other island than one of the Cape Verde group, which lie off the west coast of Africa in about 16 degrees or 17 degrees north latitude.

His letter described the island minutely, as well as the location of the treasure, and was accompanied by the crudest, funniest little old map you ever saw, with trees and rocks all marked by scrawly X's to show the exact spot where the treasure had been buried.

When papa explained the real nature of the expedition my heart sank, for I know so well how visionary and impractical the poor dear has always been that I feared that he had again been duped, especially when he told me that he had paid a thousand dollars for the letter and map.

To add to my distress I learned that he had borrowed $10,000 more from Robert Canler and had given his notes for the amount.

Mr. Canler had asked for no security, and you know, dearie, what that will mean for me if papa cannot meet them. Oh, how I detest that man!

We all tried to look on the bright side of things, but Mr. Philander and Mr. Clayton—he joined us in London just for the adventure—both felt as skeptical as I.

To make a long story short, we found the island and the treasure—a great iron bound oak chest wrapped in many layers of oiled sailcloth and as strong and firm as when it had been buried nearly 200 years ago.

It was simply filled with gold coin and was so heavy that four men bent beneath its weight.

The horrid thing seems to bring nothing but murder and misfortune to those who have to do with it, for three days after we sailed from the Cape Verde islands our own crew mutinied and killed every one of their officers.

It was the most terrifying experience one could imagine. I cannot even write of it.

They were going to kill us, too, but one of them, the leader, a man named King, would not let them, and so they sailed south along the coast to a lonely spot where they found a good harbor, and here they have landed and left us.

They sailed away with the treasure today, but Mr. Clayton says they will meet with a fate similar to the mutineers of the ancient galleon, because King, the only man aboard who knew aught of navigation, was murdered on the beach by one of the men the day we landed.

I wish you could know Mr. Clayton. He is the dearest fellow imaginable, and, unless I am mistaken, he has fallen very much in love with poor little me.

He is the only son of Lord Greystoke and some day will inherit the title and estates. In addition, he is wealthy in his own right. But the fact that he is going to be an English lord makes me very sad. You know what my sentiments have always been relative to American girls who married titled foreigners. Oh, if he were only a plain American gentleman!

But it isn't his fault, poor fellow, and in everything except birth he would do credit to my darling old country, and that is the greatest compliment I know how to pay any man.

We have had the most weird experiences since we were landed here—papa and Mr. Philander lost in the jungle and chased by a real lion; Mr. Clayton lost and attacked twice by wild beasts; Esmeralda and I cornered in an old cabin by a perfectly awful man eating tiger! Oh, it was simply "terrifical," as Esmeralda would say!

But the strangest part of it all is the wonderful creature who rescued us all. I have not seen him, but Mr. Clayton and papa and Mr. Philander have, and they say that he is a perfectly godlike white man tanned to a dusky brown, with the strength of a wild elephant, the agility of a monkey and the bravery of a lion.

He speaks no English and vanishes as quickly and as mysteriously after he has performed some valorous deed as though he were a disembodied spirit.

Then we have another weird neighbor, who printed a beautiful sign in English and tacked it on the door of his cabin, which we have pre-empted, warning us to destroy none of his belongings and signing himself "Tarzan of the Apes."

We have never seen him, though we think he is about, for one of the sailors who was going to shoot Mr. Clayton in the back received a spear in his shoulder from some unseen hand in the jungle.

The sailors left us but a meager supply of food, so, as we have only a single revolver with but three cartridges left in it, we do not know how we can procure meat, though Mr. Philander says that we can exist indefinitely on the wild fruit and nuts which abound in the jungle.

I am very tired now, so I shall go to my funny bed of grasses which Mr. Clayton gathered for me, but will add to this from day to day as things happen. Lovingly,
JANE PORTER.

To Hazel Strong, Baltimore, Maryland.

Tarzan sat in a brown study for a long time after he finished reading the letter. It was filled with so many new and wonderful things that his brain was in a whirl as he attempted to digest them all.

So they did not know that he was Tarzan of the apes. He would tell them.

To be Continued.

DRIVEN FROM RANCH.

British Subject Is In Trouble In the State of Chihuahua.

WASHINGTON, March 9. — Another British subject has gotten into trouble in the State of Chihuahua, and the State Department has again been called on to extend his protection. Sir Cecil Spring-Rice called at the State Department yesterday to inform Secretary Bryan that an Englishman named Synman had been driven away from his ranch and his property at least was in danger of destruction. Secretary Bryan immediately telegraphed to U. S. Consul Letcher at Chihuahua to make an enquiry and report the facts. If necessary, a protest will be made to Carranza or Villa.

Gen. Snyman Driven Out.

EL PASO, Texas, March 9.—Great interest was manifested yesterday in the case of Gen. M. B. Synman, the former Boer general, who has been ordered from his 3,000-acre ranch, La Reina, 45 miles south of Chihuahua, and the estate itself confiscated.

Synman is well-known here. He was one of the leaders in forming a Boer colony in Mexico after the British triumph in South Africa. He was born a Boer, but became naturalized as a Briton, and before the war was elected to the Cape Assembly. He turned [illegible] against [illegible] country, however, but was restored to citizenship several years ago by King Edward's proclamation of amnesty.

CIVIC CAR HITS POLE.

Montreal Firemen and a Chauffeur Are Hurt; Machine Wrecked.

MONTREAL, March 9.—What the participants say was merely a test of one of the civic automobiles, resulted in disaster yesterday morning to two members of the city fire brigade, the chauffeur of the city paymaster and the car. Another fireman and two companions were lucky to escape the serious injury that befell the others when the automobile going down hill on Upper Lachine road, swerved and crashed into a telephone pole. The chauffeur, A. Martin, has a broken leg and internal injuries. E. Dessauliers, all ribs on right side crushed in, and F. Hubert, a broken arm and internal injuries. They are in the Western Hospital.

A. Mercier, pinned down by the overturned car, got off with bruises.

City Paymaster A. Carpentier said the men had no authority from him to take out the car. An investigation will be held.

SIX HOURS IN TREE.

Two Women Took Fright at Noises In Woods at Night.

FORT WILLIAM, Ont., March 9.—Spending six hours at night in the deep dark pine woods at Kaministiquia, a station on the C. N. R. about twenty miles from this city, two ladies are suffering from shock and exposure.

They left their home about 5.30 p.m. to visit a neighbor's house about a mile distant. They did not return and a search party found them shortly before 11 o'clock.

They had lost their way, and frightened by owls hooting and the howl of wolves, and the small mysterious voices of the woods, they climbed into the branches of a big tree. They were almost unconscious from cold and fear.

One of Siamese Twins Dead.

PARIS, March 9.—Madeleine, the "Siamese twin," who was separated on Wednesday from her sister Suzanne by means of a delicate surgical operation, died yesterday of convulsions. Suzanne is recovering rapidly from the effects of the operation, and the physicians say there is every prospect of her living.

The Duchess' Philosophy.

The old Duchess of Cleveland invited a relative to her husband's funeral and told him to bring his gun with him when he came, adding, "We are old, we must die, but the pheasants must be shot."—Sir Algernon West's Reminiscences.

"As I recall things, you once had a future before you," said the old friend.

"Yes," replied the fate tossed man, "but, you see, I lived so fast that I got ahead of it."

ART DEALER A SUICIDE

Sits Before Ruebens' Masterpiece and Shoots Himself

NEW YORK, March 9.—The costliest gems of his one-million-dollar stock of paintings surrounded Theron J. Blakeslee, the noted American art dealer, when he shot himself through the head in the exhibition room of his galleries in the Francis Building, No. 665 Fifth avenue, at 5.30 o'clock on Saturday evening. He was taken unconscious in an ambulance to Flower Hospital, where he died at 7 o'clock.

Financial difficulties, which evidently prompted Mr. Blakeslee's act, had served to disclose the confidence of his creditors and the affectionate loyalty of his clients and friends rather than to threaten ruin to the business he had been building up for forty-three of his sixty-one years.

Dealers of London and Paris, of whom he bought heavily last summer, had all hastened to offer extensions of credit. Financial institutions had offered advances of additional capital, needed for reorganization of the liabilities, so that their burden might be distributed over a protracted period.

Paul Mersch, son-in-law and representative of Charles Sedelmeyer, art dealer of Paris, was a horrified witness of Mr. Blakeslee's self-destruction. With Theron Davis, personal friend of the art dealer, Mr. Mersch had spent several hours in the Blakeslee galleries, which occupy the north side of the second floor of the new building at Fifth avenue and Fifty-second street. Inventory of the Blakeslee stock has been in progress for two weeks and is practically completed. It shows a valuation of close to $1,000,000 upon more than eight hundred important canvases which hang in these galleries.

Reclining on the cushions in one corner of a bench, Mr. Blakslee faced the most valuable canvases of his entire collection when he shot himself. "The Adoration of the Magi," a Reubens, valued at $100,000, hung on the wall opposite to him.

Shackleton Has Funds.

NEW YORK, March 9. — A London cable to The World says: Sir Ernest Shackleton has now secured $250,000 which was needed to carry out his exploring trip across the Antarctic continent in the south. He wants $50,000 more to have a margin for the supporting parties. The Government has given $50,000, while anonymous persons have offered $100,000 as a free gift; another person offered $175,000 for the cinematograph rights, but the explorer said this remains to be decided.

Sir Ernest Shackleton is working fifteen hours a day at the preparations.

Jury Drank Whisky.

HARRISBURG, Ark., March 9.—One of the reasons given for reversing the conviction of Charles Myers, sentenced to electrocution for murder, was that the trial jury drank nine quarters of whisky while deliberating. The Supreme Court also says there is additional evidence justifying a new trial.

Myers was convicted last October of killing John Bass, a neighbor, in a quarrel over property lines. Myers is now in jail at Jonesboro and will seek a change of venue.

Mrs. Brown had been left alone since Tuesday, when her two sons, Walter and John, were arrested as members of a gang which during the past two months have been engaged in wholesale looting in Otterville district. Brooding over this trouble is thought to have been the cause of the suicide. John and Walter Brown, now awaiting sentence in the jail here, were released under heavy bond in order to attend their mother's funeral.

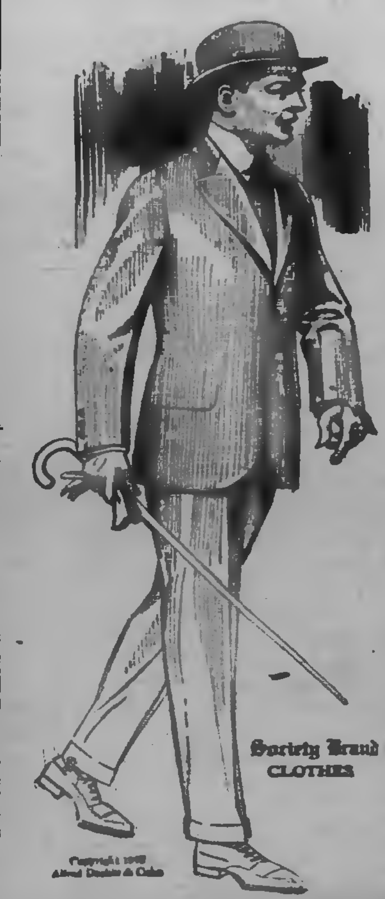
Clothes Are For Young Men



FEATURES—
English Woollens
American Styles
Made in Canada - Saving Duty Charges

Last season we inspected all the leading clothing Houses of Canada, also Society Brand of Chicago, in search of new clothing that would interest our customers. We were particularly impressed with Society Brand Clothing for young men. We introduced Society Brand Clothing to the young men of Peterboro, and its merits were speedily recognized. This season we again present Society Brand Clothing, but under more favorable circumstances. A contingent of American Society Brand designers and tailors arrived in Canada; huge bales of English woollens were here in readiness, and Society Brand Clothing, with all its style, splendid tailoring and beautiful finish, improved by the use of English materials, and the price, less the cost of duty, is here for the fitting out of the particular, well-groomed young man. The preference this season is grey and brown, leaning towards the rougher weaves, and these are shown in splendid variety. Come in and see them. Whether you buy now or later, matters not to us. But we are anxious to have you know the character and quality of these Society Brand Clothes.

FUNERAL OF SIR GEORGE ROSS TUESDAY MORNING

Body Will Be Interred at Prospect Cemetery

TORONTO, March 9.—Sir George W. Ross, ex-Premier of Ontario, former leader of the Opposition in the Dominion Senate, died Saturday morning at the General Hospital at 8 o'clock. His illness extended over a period dating from Saturday, Jan. 24, when he was suddenly stricken at Ottawa, while attending the Senate, and had to be conveyed to his bed in the hotel. No member of the family was present when Sir George passed away. Dr. Garnet Greer and a nurse attended him in his last moments. Dr. Goldie, chief physician, came just too late. He could have done nothing, anyway. The end was inevitable. Lady Ross arrived at the General Hospital doors as the clock struck the hour of eight. At the same moment Sir George closed his eyes in a final sleep.

Sir George lay in a stupor during the early hours of the morning, and Dr. Goldie went home to get some much-needed rest. Dr. Greer remained at the bedside with a nurse. Just after 7 o'clock Lady Ross was summoned. Dr. Goldie arrived shortly after Sir George died. During the whole night Sir George had a physician by his side, and although Dr. Greer made a last desperate effort to save the patient it proved in vain. Lady Ross sped to the hospital and reached there at 8 o'clock. About this time Sir George opened his eyes and closed them again. He died without experiencing any noticeable pain.

SIR GEORGE W. ROSS.

Sir George was born near Nairn, County Middlesex, Oct., in 1841, and received his early education in the public schools. He took a course at the Normal school, Toronto, and left it with a first-class provincial certificate. At a later period he matriculated in law at Albert University, graduated LL.B., 1883, and was called to the Bar in 1887.

In 1871 he was appointed inspector of public schools for the County of Lambton.

A Liberal in politics, he was elected in that interest to the House of Commons for West Middlesex at the general election in 1872, and continued the representative of that riding at Ottawa up to November, 1883, when he entered the administration of Sir Oliver Mowat in Ontario as Minister of Education. This office he retained under the late Hon. A. S. Hardy, and was also a member for West Middlesex in the Legislature. He devoted some years to journalistic work, being at one time editor of The Strathroy Age, and at another time part proprietor of The Huron Expositor. He was also the conductor of The Ontario Teacher.

For many years he was prominently identified with the temperance cause. He was elected most worthy patriarch of the Sons of Temperance of North America in 1879; founded the Temperance Colonization Company in 1882; attended the British and Colonial Temperance Congress, held in London in 1886; was elected president of the Temperance & General Life Assurance Co., 1885, and was elected a vice-president of the Ontario Prohibition Alliance in 1896.

As a legislator and administrator, his record was one of no little activity. In 1882 he introduced a resolution in the House of Commons asking for the opening of negotiations for reciprocity in trade between Canada and the United States, which resolution subsequently gave rise to a Liberal campaign in favor of reciprocity.

Sir George was a member of the Government of Sir Oliver Mowat, as Minister of Education from 1883 to 1896, and also served his province in the same capacity in the Hardy administration from July 25, 1896, to Oct. 18, 1899. On the resignation of Mr. Hardy, Sir George took up the reins of Government on Oct. 21, 1899, and continued as Premier with a working majority until the dissolution of the House on April 19, 1902. On going to the country on May 29, 1902, Sir George was sustained by a small majority. On June 26, 1903, the Government, on a motion of censuring R. R. Gamey, M.P.P., was sustained by a majority of 4. In the election following he was defeated by forty seats.

He also enjoyed a reputation as a writer. In conjunction with Mr. Wm. Buckingham, he wrote in 1892 a biography of the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie. Among his other books may be mentioned "History of the School System of Ontario, "A Report of the Schools of England and Germany" and "Patriotic Recitations for the Use of Schools and Colleges." In 1893 he was appointed chairman of the committee having for its object the preparation of a history of Canada for the use of the schools of this country, and, in 1897, served as a vice-president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science. He was also president for some years of the Dominion Educational Association, and held many honors from universities and learned societies.

Sir George was for nearly two years leader of the party in the Opposition benches. He was made a Senator of Canada on Jan. 15, 1907, and finally was made Liberal leader in the Senate. As a public speaker Sir George took high rank, both as a lecturer and as a debater. He was a Presbyterian and a Freemason.

The body will be interred in Mount Pleasant Cemetery to-morrow morning, following a ceremony at 10.30 at the Senator's late residence, 3 Elmsley place. Rev. Dr. Milligan will conduct the service, assisted by Rev. S. H. Grey of Old St. Andrew's.

The honorary pallbearers chosen are: Sir John Gibson, Senator Jaffray, P. C. Larkin, Mr. Belden, Hon. George P. Graham and Justice Latchford.

A Huge Profit.

Sir James Yoxall tells, in his new book about collecting, another story of a collector's handsome profit:—

"A bookseller purchased for £200 the MS. of one of Dickens' best works. For a long time that interesting manuscript had lain neglected. I am told that it had been left on the mantelpiece of an empty house formerly inhabited by a person connected with Charles Dickens in business. The bookseller tried to sell it for £500, and failed; £400, and failed; £300, and failed.

"A few years later, having to meet a sudden demand for cash, he parted with the MS. for the sum he gave for it, £200. The purchaser at that price kept the MS. for some years, until one morning a bookseller, the agent of a now famous but at that time unknown collector of rarities, came to the owner of the MS. and offered to buy it.

"'My price is £2,000,' said the owner. A check was written on the spot."

In spite of the complaints of American extravagance, the reports of the savings institutions indicate a pretty general preparation for "rainy day" possibilities.

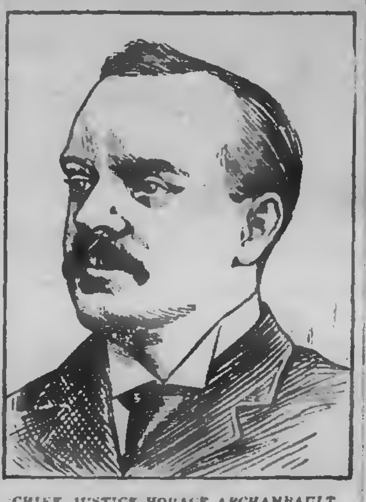
HONORED BY THE KING

CHIEF JUSTICE ARCHAMBAULT NOW A KNIGHT BACHELOR.

Quebec Jurist Was Born In L'Assumption, Que., and Received His Degree of Doctor of Law at Laval, Where He Later Became a Professor—Has Also Been Active In the World of Politics.

Among the distinguished Canadians who received New Year's honors from King George is Hon. Horace Archambault, Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench of the Province of Quebec. He was created a knight bachelor.

Sir Horace is an uncommonly able speaker and a painstaking judge. He was born in L'Assumption, Quebec, and received his early education in the college of that place. Later he attended Laval University, where he received the degree of doctor of law. In 1881 he became professor of commercial and maritime law in Laval and was batonnier general of the Quebec Bar in 1900. In 1906 he declined the Superior Court judgeship, and two years later was appointed puisine judge of the King's Bench of Quebec. From 1897 to 1905 he was Attorney-General and Speaker of the Legislative Council. While in political life he was a strict autonomist in Quebec affairs.



CHIEF JUSTICE HORACE ARCHAMBAULT.

Sir Horace is in his 57th year, and is a brother of Rt. Rev. Joseph Alfred Archambault.

Monarch of Arran.

One of the most interesting of little kingdoms, within other kingdoms is an island off the coast of Scotland, not always suspected of having a monarch of its own

Arran, this interesting island kingdom, is ruled over by a lady, the beautiful marchioness of Graham, wife of the eldest son and heir of the Duke of Montrose. It was as Lady Mary Hamilton that the marchioness inherited this little monarchy from the late Duke of Hamilton, whose only child she was. As sole owner of this sea-girt kingdom, the marchioness rules wisely and well over loyal subjects, numbering in all nearly 5,000. The island, which is some 19 miles long and 10 1-2 broad, with an area of 168 square miles, has had a romantic history.

Along the cliffs of the south coast there are several large caverns, one being known as the King's cave. Here Robert the Bruce is said to have hidden himself for some time, while it was from Brodick bay that Bruce sailed to Carrick on his expedition for the recovery of the crown. There are many interesting ruins, too, such as Lochranza, once the residence of the Scots kings. Then there are cairns, standing stones and stone circles.

Gun-Runners Busy.

British Indian troops have just left Bombay for the Persian Gulf. From all accounts, the gun-runners in the Gulf are once more at their game, and they seem to have entered the field with greater zest than in the past. What is more alarming is the wide range of action of the smugglers. The whole of the Gulf littoral now seems to have become the hunting-field of the smugglers. In spite of the preventive measures adopted by the Sultan of Muscat, the smuggling of arms continues merrily and there seems no immediate prospect of its coming to an end. The Royal Indian Marine ships in the Gulf are fully occupied in blockading the arms traffic, and the mixed population of Arabs and Persians along the Gulf now openly resents interference on the part of Britain with what they regard as trade. Only the other day, a British ship was looted by the Arabs on the Tigris and the Mohammedan captain of the ship killed. If the Arabs and the Persians continue in as aggressive a mood as at present, there will be no other alternative left for Great Britain but to increase the number of her troops in places on the Gulf.

No Owner for $2,500.

The town clerk of Carmarthen made a statement to the council regarding a sum of $2,500 of which he is the trustee. The money had been raised by a fete in 1897 to help to provide a Volunteer drill-hall to commemorate the Diamond Jubilee. No hall had been built, and the Volunteer force was extinct. Several attempts had been made to get the money released; claims had been put in by the National Reserve, the Territorials, and by the local infirmary, but so far the money was still locked up, and income-tax was paid regularly on it every year.

EVANTUREL ADMITS HIS GUILT; HE WILL RESIGN

Says He Can Prove That He Is Not the Only One Guilty of Wrong-doing.

VANKLEEK HILL, March 9.—Condemned by the leaders of the Liberal party in his native County of Prescott, in a strongly worded resolution, and received coldly by the rank and file, on account of his action in writing to the liquor interests, asking for $10,000 to use his influence in their behalf, Gustave Evanturel accepted the inevitable here Saturday afternoon and announced that he would resign his seat in the Ontario Legislature on Tuesday, and in doing so would present a full statement of the situation to the House.

There are 30 members on the Liberal Association executive of Prescott County, and there were 22 of them present at the meeting which sat in judgment on their provincial representative, and unanimously endorsed the action of the ruling powers at Toronto in ostracizing him.

Prior to adopting the resolution the executive held a conference in private with Mr. Evanturel in the Vankleek town hall, when the M.P.P. announced his intention to resign. The conference lasted a long time, and a large crowd waited impatiently in the street well on to two hours to gain admittance to the public meeting that naturally was expected to receive the announcement as to what had transpired.

As soon as the doors were open the crowd rushed madly in. President J. N. LaPointe, of Plantagenet, was in the chair, and one of the secretaries read the resolution that had been adopted. It came as no surprise to the crowd, and there was no demonstration one way or the other. The condemned member sat in the audience quiet and alone, while the judgment passed upon him was being read.

The resolution deplored Evanturel's action and declared that he had no justification whatever for writing the letter. It expressed condemnation of the proposal contained therein and approval of Evanturel's decision to resign his seat. The resolution further endorsed Mr. Rowell's prompt action in barring Evanturel from the Liberal causus.

It was suggested that Mr. Evanturel might desire to make some public statement and he at once went to the platform. His face was drawn and tense but he spoke without hesitation and once or twice was applauded by some of his friends.

"I think," he said, "that the Liberals of Prescott will give me credit for having made an honest statement of the situation. I did not come here to excuse myself after having condemned myself on the floor of the House and throughout the province."

The letter he had written, he continued, had been addressed to the directors of the Allied License Association of Ontario.

"I think, although I am guilty, that Mr. Ferguson's action was a very weak defence to my attack on the bad administration of the Liquor Act in my county," he went on. "The letter certainly was written on a very unhappy day for me and that day was Dec. 4, 1913."

He stated that he had received a reply from Secretary Allen of the Hotelmen's Association saying that the position he had applied for had already been filled.

He then explained that he would delay the reading of his resignation in the House until Tuesday, as there was usually only a sparse attendance on Monday. He was sure that while the executive was censuring him, he still had their sympathy. He was a poor man, and he thought that licensed interests could give him some financial aid, for he would "stand forever against the abolition of the bar."

Mr. Evanturel intimated that if he were guilty of wrong-doing he was not the only member of the House, and said he might ask the Provincial Secretary if it were not a fact that he was retained by the Standard Oil Company.

Some of the men in the audience objected to "a slur being cast on the whole Legislature," and wanted Mr. Evanturel to give names and particulars, but officers of the association said that if he had any charges to make the proper place to make them would be in the Legislature, when he was resigning on Tuesday.

Later Mr. Evanturel addressed a meeting at Hawkesbury, and yesterday spoke to the residents of Alfred, his own town, many of whom had come in from the surrounding country to hear him.

BERRY, THE HANGMAN.

How He Got His Gruesome Office and Why He Resigned It.

Berry, the famous English hangman, had an extraordinary career. He worked as a carpenter, engineer and printer before joining the police force. He knew his predecessors, Marwood and Calcroft, and secured the post of hangman out of 1,400 applicants. It is said that Berry was chosen as hangman by the sheriffs of London through an answer he gave to a question about hanging a man he knew to be innocent. "Would you hang that gentleman over there?" he was asked. After looking at the councilor, a venerable, gray bearded figure, Berry is alleged to have replied: "I would hang the lot of you. The crime would not be mine, but the law's."

And yet Berry finally gave up his office as hangman because the execution by him of two innocent persons got on his nerves.

The first case was that of a farm lad, aged about eighteen, accused of shooting a policeman. The boy protested his innocence to Berry up to the last moment, but was duly executed. Some time after this Berry hanged the Netherby hall murderers, one of whom just before he died told Berry that it was he who had shot the policeman for which crime the boy had been executed.

The second case was that of Mary Leffley of Lincolnshire, who was accused of poisoning her husband with arsenic. She, too, protested her innocence, but was hanged. Some years later a farmer dying of cancer confessed the crime. He said he had had a quarrel with John Leffley, and when both John and Mary were out he had entered their cottage and put arsenic in a milk pudding which had been prepared for John Leffley's dinner.

It was on account of these two grave miscarriages of justice that Berry ultimately turned evangelist. He was persuaded to go to a mission meeting at Bradford and there announced his conversion.—London Tit-Bits.

GEMS IN A VACUUM.

They Take on an Added Brilliance and Fairly Glow.

The jewelers of ancient Egypt knew more than modern craftsmen about treating gems so that they would shine and sparkle. Such gems as the emerald, garnet and jacinth were livelier and more luminous in the days of the Ptolemies than they can be made today. It is known that the diamond, ruby, emerald and kunzite become more phosphorescent or fluorescent under certain circumstances.

Gems exhibit the liveliest phosphorescence in vacuum tubes. Even in rarefied air some diamonds give out a blue light, which is not present in a denser atmosphere. In a vacuum a diamond of four or five karats gives as much light as a candle. The color of the light differs not only with the origin of the diamond, but with the facets of the same diamond. Maskelyne made a collection of diamonds which glowed in a vacuum with nearly all the colors of the spectrum. An uncut stone which was roughly cube shape, with truncated corners and edges, emitted orange yellow light from the faces of the cube, pale yellow from the corners, and lemon yellow from the flat edges.

Next to the diamond stands the ruby as highly phosphorescent in a vacuum. The ruby emits a beautiful red light, as though it were incandescent. Kunzite shines with a golden yellow or yellow tinged with rose. The emerald shines with a crimson light. The same gems become phosphorescent under the influence of radium. The ultraviolet rays also produce luminosity in gems.

It is well known that rubies from the mines of Burma are more valuable than those from neighboring Siam. Externally they look much alike, but under the ultraviolet rays the Burmese stones which are called oriental rubies glow like red embers, while the Siamese rubies look almost black.—Independent.

Pathans Held Up Train.

Pathan outlaws held up the mail train from Peshawar to Calcutta at Jehangira station, near Nowshera, a few nights ago. The European driver and guard, and an Indian fireman, were shot dead, and the outlaws started to loot the cars, but, finding themselves faced by four British officers and also by some British native soldiers, many of whom were armed with swords, they gave up their attempt, and disappeared. The officers commandeered the engine of a goods train, and with it took the mail train to Campbellpur. Troops from Nowshera have gone in pursuit of the gang, who are believed to be Jiwarki outlaws. Jehangira and neighboring stations have been several times raided in the last ten years.

NOT GOOD AFTER MAR. 11.

A Cincinnati man's malady, of which the most striking symptom is a growth of hair at the rate of one inch an hour, may put the doctors on the track of a cure for baldness.

Another angle in the proverb about the early bird and the worm is found in the story of the two Boston boys who were struck by a meteor at 3 o'clock in the morning.

CANUCK CLUBS TO PLAY IN ERIE ON ALL U.S. HOLIDAYS

Erie will have games every Sunday during the coming season, according to Owner O'Neil.

Besides the Sunday games the invaders will play on the Erie lot on every U.S. holiday. This is one great advantage of being in the Canuck circuit, as the holidays there do not fall on the same dates with the Canadian holidays. The gate receipts will be much larger. Labor Day, Fourth of July and Decoration Day will see two battles on Perry Field, as the ball lot is called.

It will be a big job to arrange a schedule containing 112 games especially taking care of the lowest possible mileage. The schedule will be so arranged that there will be no conflicting dates at Toronto.

Ford

On six continents — the Ford is the favorite car. And it's gaining constantly in world-wide popularity. It's the one car built for all countries —all climates—all conditions. And its light weight and unequalled strength make it most economical.

Six hundred dollars is the price of the Ford run-about; the touring car is six fifty; the town car nine hundred—f.o.b. Ford, Ont., complete with equipment. Get catalog and particulars from Duffus' Garage, 195 Simcoe St., Peterborough. Phone 253.

RED SOX AND PETES OPEN LEAGUE SEASON HERE

According to the draft of a schedule to be presented to the meeting of Canadian League Clubs at Toronto on Wednesday, the Peterborough White Caps are billed to open the season at Riverside Park on Thursday, May 14th, with Brantford as the visiting club.

The Red Sox will remain at the ball lot for the remainder of the week, and Ottawa will be entertained for the first three days of the following week.

The White Caps open the season at Erie on May 7th, remaining for Sunday games. Then they travel to St. Thomas for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday and home.

Erie is here for holiday games on May 25th.

Chapdelaine, who was one of the most popular of the Petes last season has sent in his signed contract. Local fans would be more than pleased to see Chap. land a permanent job.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE PETERBORO CRICKET CLUB

J. H. Thompson, honorary secretary-treasurer of the Peterborough Cricket Club, has called the annual meeting for next Friday evening, at the Y. M. C. A. It is hoped that there will be a large representation of members and others who will join the club this season.

The report for last season gives considerable satisfaction to the members, and it is expected that greater success will be met this season. Probably a league will be formed with entries from Lakefield, Port Hope, Campbellford, and other places.

Thanks to the support given by the honorary members and the playing members, 24 in all, the Club closed the books without a deficit.

The officers are:

Hon. President, Judge Huycke; Hon. Vice-President, Major Cooper, J. H. Burnham, Esq., M.P., C. H. Pennefather, J. R. Stratton, E. G. Patterson, R. R. Hall, E. A. Peck, M.L.A.; Captain, F. Ireland's Coney Island.

Coney Island is a good old Irish name, which will be news to a vast majority of people who visit that part of the greater city. Brooklyn newspapers have asserted the name was adopted from small animals which made their homes in the sand. But the will of Viscount Charlemont, who died last summer, aged eighty-three, directs that he shall be buried at Coney Island, Lough Neagh, Ireland, and provides an annuity for the upkeep of the "old tower," which had been in the possession of his family many generations.—New York Post.

Crusty Customer—Gimme a pound of sulphur. How much is it? Druggist—Fifteen cents a pound. Crusty Customer—What! Hang it, man, I can get it across the street for 10 cents. Druggist (in disgust)—Yes, and there's a place where you can get it for nothing.—Kansas City Star.

Kleine's Greatest Achievement in Photoplay at "The Grand" Next Week.

By far the most interesting and best acted photo drama yet seen in this country is George Kleine's production of the Cines photo drama, "Antony and Cleopatra," announced for Tuesday, Wednesday and Saturday, March 10, 11, and 14, at The Grand.

The dramatic power invested in this subject by the players is nothing short of marvellous, and goes to prove once more that the Italian artists are the masters of expression and pantomime before the camera. The story of Antony and Cleopatra is so comprehensively presented that the spectator feels almost impelled to furnish the dialogue as the pictures pass before his eye. Dramatically it is the strongest yet offered in photo drama, and affords magnificent opportunities to the players. The Marc Antony of Signor Antony Novelli is a virile masterpiece, even surpassing his interpretation of Vinitius in "Quo Vadis." Signora Teribili Gonzales is a realization of all ideals as Cleopatra, the voluptuous beauty of the Nile, whose charms almost destroyed an Empire. Signor Ignazio Lupi, who played a minor role in "Quo Vadis," is cast for Octavius in "Cleopatra," and gives a remarkable performance. The acting of Signora Elsa Lenard as Octavia, wife of Antony, and Signorina Matilde di Marzo as the Egyptian maiden, Charmian, is fully in keeping with the other principals. Many other prominent players from "Quo Vadis" cast are also recognized in the minor characters of the story, all of whom contribute to the glorious artistic finish of the whole. As a scenic spectacle it is the most wonderful achievement of the age.

SCENE FROM "ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

The greatest photo-play ever produced, which comes to "The Grand" for one matinee and one evening performance daily on Tuesday, Wednesday and Saturday next. March 10th, 11th and 14th.

ALICE LLOYD'S BIG ENTERTAINMENT

William Morris, who is presenting Alice Lloyd and her company of seventy entertainers at "The Grand" next Thursday, March 2th, has arranged an attraction that is something out of the ordinary to local theatregoers. In fact it is an exact reproduction of an English music hall, such as offered at the Empire Theatre, London, and the "Follies Marigny," Paris.

Always ready to present an innovation so far as the theatre is concerned, Mr. Morris has arranged to place on the program one of the biggest features of the twentieth century. This feature will take place immediately after the intermission of the first half of this monster entertainment, and is entitled "Dance Mad." Every form of dancing, including the sensational X-Ray Dance, will be illustrated by artists who have the greatest respect for the terpsichorean art, and no doubt this will prove the sensation of the Lloyd Company entertainment.

Mr. Morris has surrounded this twinkling little star of two continents, on her third American tour, with the largest aggregation of nationally famous entertainers ever assembled in a single program. Frank Fogarty, "the Dublin Minstrel," who has a world-wide reputation as a fun-maker, will support Miss Lloyd in this wonderful entertainment, and these two stars will take part in the big feature "Dance Mad."

A MOST IMPORTANT PRODUCTION

"Anthony and Cleopatra," the Biggest Play Yet Produced.

Words fail to express the justice the manifold beauties of George Kleine's latest photo drama success, "ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA." It is one of these rare achievements that occur once in a lifetime, where every attribute meets the requirement of public fancy. Historically it is the most important production that has yet been presented in this country, and the story has an equally powerful attraction to all readers and students. In point of spectacular beauty it has never been aproached. Made by the Cines Company, who made "Last Days of Pompeii," it has all the bigness that characterized that wonderful subject, coupled with the realization of dramatic romanticism afforded by Egypt and the famous love tragedy of Antony and Cleopatra. It is superbly acted, with many of the original "Pompeii" players in the cast. Sig. Antony Novelli, who will be remembered in the earlier production, appears as the soldier-lover, Marc Antony. Sig. Ignazio Lupi is cast for Augustus Caesar Octavius; Signora Giovanna Teribili Gonzales is the beautiful Cleoparta, while Signora Elsa Lenard appears as Octavia, wife of Antony and Signorina Matilde di Marzio as chairman, the handsome maid who paid her life as a penalty for daring to fall in love with Antony. Many of the original "Pompeii" players can be recognized among the minor characters in Cleopatra, particularly in the great Senate scene. This is only another proof of the perfection to be found in all the Cines pictures. Mr. George Kleine's production will be seen in this city at "The Grand" for 3 days only, Tuesday, Wednesday and Saturday. As this mammoth production is in 8 reels and takes 2 1-4 hours to run, there will be one matinee daily commencing at .230 and one evening performance, commencing at 8 p.m.

COULTHURST SENT FOR TRIAL.

Bridgeburg Deputy Returning Officer To Go Before a Jury.

BRIDGEBURG, March 9. — Coulthurst, the D. R. O. accused in connection with the recent Scott Act vote, was yesterday sent for trial on three charges.

The new charge is that of altering or changing seven ballots, and was made Saturday morning by W. D. Christian, the "dry" scrutineer who laid the other two charges. These are uttering a false document in making the return of the election, and forgery.

Much to the disappointment of the large crowd in the hall, no verbal evidence was taken, as both sides had consented to the evidence taken at the investigation before Judge Livingstone last week at Welland being submitted for the hearing.

Coulthurst is now out on $4,000 bail, $1,000 more than previously.

NOT ENOUGH TO HAVE VISIONS

There Must be Action Says Rev. Dr. F. H. Wallace.

At Charlotte Street Methodist Church the Rev. F. H. Wallace, D.D., of Victoria College, preached to a large audience yesterday at the evening service. He preached from the text, "Whereupon, O King Agrippa, I was not disturbed at the Heavenly vision"—Acts 26-19. The speaker discussed Paul as being first a persecutor, Rabbi, learned man and then receiving the vision of the truth that Christ was the Messiah for whom he was looking. Thus, Paul had the privilege of sharing the suffering and carrying the message of Christ to kings and peoples, he had the new outlook on life, a new spirit.

To all men come visions. Visions in the subjective sense, that is, some great truth. Men are ennobled in proportion as they keep their minds open for such visions. The terrible Nemisis is the time when they are unable to follow the visions they see. Dr. Wallace illustrated his point from Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress and story of Jacob and Esau. God saw in Jacob what was lacking in Esau, who was a man who did not long for higher things. One had the power of vision, the other had not. Men must obey them. Surely the truth is obtainable, it cannot be that our highest conceptions are unattainable. Duty must be followed. It is so in the ordinary affairs of life. The farmer has a vision of harvest when he sows. George McDougal saw a vision of great fields and towns and railways on the prairie and experience proved his vision. The world is what it is because of the vision of that little Jew. It is only as men have visions that they are ennobled and made strong and great. The need of action is imperative. There must be free acceptance. It is not enough to have our visions; there must be action. The history of Switzerland and Holland was used by speaker to show how a vision of liberty that was held to be impossible, was realized. "Do not be afraid of great truths that dawn upon you —the great truths that are revealed to you. If you shut out your visions you will be lost. Heaven is the consummation of the effort to do right and to do good. Whatever is your duty is not impossible. The vision that comes to some may be that of preaching or of foreign missions, but whatever it is obey it. Be true to the vision and duty.

A solo was sung by Miss Richardson, and a splendid anthem was rendered by the choir. Next Sunday will be Educational Sunday, when one of the preachers will be the Rev. Dr. Rose.

IMPROVE CONDITIONS AT MARKET BUILDING

Keep Out the Dogs; Scrub the Floor; Stop Spitting and Bring About Other Reforms

Some radical changes will be effected if suggestions, regarding the market, made by Sanitary Inspector Spence to the Board of Health this morning, come into effect after the consideration of the Property Committee to which they were referred:

The several suggestions are:—

The market hall scrubbed at least once a month.

Better and more thorough ventilation.

Notices placed prohibiting spitting, smoking, dogs running at large and other nuisances in the market building.

The market square cleaned each day.

Horses removed from vehicles on reaching market on market days.

Fowl dressed and sold by weight.

The names of the vendor shown on the purchased article.

All meats exposed to be covered with a clean white cloth.

Prohibit distribution of circulars.

"Mr. Spence remarked that our market was a delusion," said the chairman, Dr. Amys. "I think it's like the canal."

"Why, it was just the other day I found a liver in a local butcher shop badly affected with tuberculosis germs," remarked Mr. Spence.

Mr. McMurty expressed himself that he was in favor of doing without a market. He claimed prices were better in Lindsay without a market. He gave a comparison of prices.

"The bigger the market the better," announced the chairman.

"I would like to ask the M.H.O. his opinion on the dressing of fowl," said the Mayor.

In response to the Mayor's query, Dr. McPherson said he was greatly in favor of the dressed fowl question and that it was a great necessity to the general public that dressed fowl should be sold.

Services Wanted.

Other matters considered by the Board were the communications from C. Brisbois, who asked for a sewer from Sophia street to James street to Mark street, and to outfall of sewer.

S. Hugginson asked for a service to 275 Lake street. The City Engineer will report on the matter of both.

TWO STRANGERS HELD BY POLICE

James Maloney and George Brickley, two strangers were remanded for one week by Magistrate Dumble at this morning's Police Court on the charge of vagrancy. Brickley expostulated against the remand and said he came from Belleville last night, and that he had sufficient money to keep himself.

"What's the idea?" demanded Brickley, when he was informed of his remand.

The Police Chief and the City Engineer will report on the claim of Joseph Hickey, who asks for $150 because of an accident at the corner of George and Murray streets.

BARRIE, March 10.—Jas. O'Neill, of Allandale, the one-armed switchman, who was arrested two weeks ago by P. C. Sweeney for issuing four bogus $10 bills of the Bank of Montreal, appeared in the police court yesterday for sentence. In recognition of his having pleaded guilty and given the crown the information which led to the conviction of Charles Burk and John Burkholder, of Lindsay, both of whom were sentenced to five years, the magistrate sentenced him to two and a half years.

The proceeds will go to St. Vincent's Orphanage.

The Ladies' Aid of both St. Peter's and Sacred Heart parishes have charge of the event, and their members as well as many younger ladies will be out next Saturday with the shamrocks. These shamrocks were made by the orphans in the St. Vincent's Orphanage of Dublin, Ireland.

KILLED BY FALL WITH AEROPLANE

Canadian Press Despatch.

Salisbury, Eng., March 10.—Captain Cyril Downer, of the Northamptonshire Infantry Regiment, was killed by a fall with his aeroplane on Salisbury Plain to-day.

TWO WITNESSES AGAINST CONSTABLE

Officer Said Italian Was Drunk, and Others Said No.

Thomas Romeloa, an Italian, faced Magistrate Dumble yesterday morning on the charge of being drunk. Mr. D. M. Minnicola, who was present as a witness and interpreter, testified that he saw the defendant on Saturday evening, a few minutes previous to his arrest and he was sober. He saw him when in charge of the constable and Romeloa was walking straighter than the constable (Hayward) who arrested him. Romeloa, by the assistance of Mr. Minnicola, gave evidence to the effect that he only had four or five glasses of beer and wasn't near being drunk. P. C. Hayward met him and took him to the Police Station.

P. C. Hayward was called to the stand and stated that he saw the defendant fall before he arrested him. The incident occurred about 5.45 Saturday evening. Romeloa also had bumped into several people.

Another Italian, who was with the defendant, stated that he didn't bump into anybody and that he was sober. His Worship, however, stated that he couldn't believe it, when the constable stated otherwise. To this Mr. Minnicola exclaimed that the Italians of this city were treated as undesirables and were not treated fairly. When his Worship called out $5.75, the discussion ceased.

PETITION TO HAVE BY-LAW RESCINDED

Some Objections to $40 Fee for Sale of Cigarettes.

The recent action of the City Fathers in placing a $40 license on the sale of cigarettes has met with a great deal of approval, but it has likewise met with considerable disapproval. The objection to such a by-law is, of course, opposed by the carry cigarettes as a sideline, and the retail tobacconists are also against it. They are circulating a petition and this will be submitted to the Council, with the request that the by-law be rescinded.

SHOULD BE ELECTION FUND OF FROM $5000 TO $7000 FROM THE CANAL OFFICE

Suspended Superintendent Admits That Large Sums of Money That Should Have Been Remitted to Ottawa Were Contributed to Liberal Election Fund

McCLELLAN'S EVIDENCE.

Mr. McClellan said that when he went on the Canal he was told by Hon. J. R. Stratton that there should be an election fund of from five to seven thousand dollars a year from the Canal office, and that he proceeded on that basis.

The report on the investigation into Trent Valley Canal affairs, further states:

WM. F. NELSON, who styles himself a broker, and runs a typewriting office in Peterboro, figures almost monthly on the pay roll for years back as a laborer. He admits never having worked as a laborer. The cheques received by him were really to pay for typewriter supplies and typewriting in connection with an illustrated booklet on the subject of the Canal published by Clarry, the former accountant.

E. A. FITZGERALD, a coal merchant, of Peterboro, gets a cheque for team work in June, 1911. This was really to pay an account for oil and paint, and included no labor.

GEOFFREY O'BRIEN, who runs a grocery store in Peterboro, for the past five or six years says that he has been selling supplies to Trent Valley Canal, ordered by Overseer Gordon, Superintendent McClellan, or Faren, the storekeeper. Most of the goods went to the Bessie Butler to supply parties going on her. O'Brien's account runs from fifteen to fifty dollars a month. Orders given by Faren were upon McClellan's instructions.

E. SINGER. A pay sheet for August, 1910, shows E. Singer, laborer, 17 days at $1.50—$25.60.

Singer runs a second hand store in Peterboro, and never worked on the Canal. The entry is put through to pay sundry small accounts—$2.50 to Gus Hay, an employee in Hall's law office; $3.00 to John Gibson, an occasional canal employee; $2.00 to Superintendent McClellan, and the balance for parcels.

D. DENHAM. The pay sheet for July, 1911, shows D. Denham, laborer, 6 3-4 days, $10.00.

This young man was a student at Cornell University. In taking his summer holidays up the Canal he took some photos and the Superintendent agreed to pay him ten dollars for some of them. It was paid under the guise of labor.

VINCENT EASTWOOD, manager of the Royal Bank at Peterboro, appears on the pay roll as a laborer at $1.50 a day. There is no explanation forthcoming for this.

F. SANDY got a government cheque for $28.00 for alleged services as a carpenter in August, 1908.

Mr. Sandy is the G. T. R. Station Agent at Peterboro, and the account of $28.00 was for a special train to Fenelon Falls to a meeting that was held there on August 22nd by the Hon. Geo. P. Graham.

A. HOLLINGSHEAD. November, 1907, A. A. Hollingshead on pay sheet A, is paid for 15 days' labor at $1.50, $22.50.

Mr. Hollingshead was manager of the Bank of Ottawa at Peterboro at that time, and, of course, was not an employee of the Government.

OZIAS LAPLANTE, a lawyer, of Peterboro, figures a number of times on the pay sheet as a laborer.

M. S. MACDONALD is a druggist. He apparently sold hair brushes and combs to the value of $4.00 for use on the Bessie Butler. His account was paid by putting him down on the pay sheet as a laborer.

L. DEYMAN, a furniture dealer got a cheque for a day's labor in July, 1909, at $1.75 per day for a feather pillow.

S. A. OKE is a fruit merchant and grocer. He supplied goods to the Bessie Butler, on occasions and was put on the pay sheet to cover his account. For instance in July, 1909, he is paid for a team and teamster for three and a half days at $3.50 making a total of $12.25.

J. H. STAUNTON appears on the pay sheet as a laborer in 1909 and 1910. He is a photographer at Fenelon Falls and never worked on the canal.

HARRY LONG who used to keep a confectionery store in Peterboro and supplied sandwiches and other refreshments for some excursions on the Canal, instead of having his account put on the pay sheet in the regular way, is represented as working at the removal of stumps at Kirkfield, and is paid as a laborer.

H. GAINEY was paid for work as a laborer on a number of occasions during the year 1907. Mr. Gainey is a barber in Peterboro and never worked on the Canal.

W. J. O'BRIEN. A grocer in Pet rboro, appears as a laborer. —

M. HOOVER is a cabinet maker and picture framer in Peterboro. Through the years 1908, 1909, 1910, 1911 he has been paid a considerable sum of money as a laborer on the Canal works. This was to pay accounts for picture framing, etc.

F. W. DOAN. In 1907, $39.00 rental due the Bell Telephone Company, for telephone at McClellan's residence was paid by cheque to F. W. Doan, an employee of the Company and charged against repairs to booms, slides and dams. A similar account was paid in the same way in Oct. 1907, and again in June, 1908. There is no explanation of this. If, as McClellan says, the Government was to pay for a telephone in his house one can conceive of no reason for putting the accounts through in this way.

R. M. ROY. Charged against improving and clearing drowned lands on Balsam Lake in November, 1908, is one dollar paid to R. M. Roy, a photographer of Peterboro for photographs in December. There is a similar item of two dollars. In fact Mr. Roy appears frequently for several years on the pay roll. In 1909, Mr. Roy was paid $15.65 as a laborer which was really for photographs.

A. CARR is undoubtedly an assumed name for some one who drew pay regularly as a laborer during 1906, 1907, 1908, and 1909. After exhaustive inquiry I was unable to find any one of that name who had ever been in Peterboro. The Superintendent himself admitted that he could not see where the Government ever got value for some three hundred dollars paid to A. Carr in this way. It is certainly a most glaring piece of fraud practiced upon the Government.

THE PETERBORO EXAMINER appears to have had frequent accounts put through as labor in the name of some of the Company's employees. In Jan., 1907, J. Clark is paid for 6 days work as a laborer at $1.50—$9.00.

In June, 1907, 7 days at $1.50—$10.50. In March, 1907, 7 days as laborer at Gull River at $1.50—$10.50. In May, 1907, J. Clark, 6 days at $1.75, repair booms, slides and dams—$10.50. In Aug., 1908, J. Clark, 10 days, laborer at $1.75—$17.50. In Sept., 1908, J. Clark, laborer, 10 days at $1.75—$17.50.

Clark was an employee at the Examiner Office and never did any work on the Canal. The Superintendent swears that Clark did not labor for this money, nor did the Department owe these accounts to the Examiner.

PAT HOGAN. In the years 1905 and 1906 Pat Hogan was paid as a laborer on several occasions. Hogan is a hotel keeper in Peterboro and never worked on the Canal. Presumably this was to pay board bills, but, there is no record to show this.

MRS. KEARNEY. It is shown in the evidence that McClellan built a verandah for Mrs. Kearney and the Government paid and boarded the men while doing it. He says that she still owes for this work, but, there is no record in the office and he admits that she has never been billed with any account. (Page 168).

GEORGE WILSON, (Page 670), who is called a walking boss does work that the Superintendent says is a part of Overseer Clegg's duties and should be done by Clegg himself. He draws $75.00 a month although McClellan says that he is unnecessary and his services should be dispensed with.

JACKSON'S MEAL ACCOUNT, JULY, 1908. Pay sheet shows that there were 146½ days at three meals a day making 439 meals Jackson gave for the month of July at 14c. making $61.46 due him for that month. He was paid $120.54, although McClellan certified for this, he admits that he has an explanation. (Pages 469 and 470). In the month of May Jackson served 643 meals at 14c, which would amount to $90.02. He was paid 929 meals totalling $130.06. There is no explanation for this. These accounts with many similar ones were made out in the Superintendent's office and certified by him and sent to Ottawa for payment.

WILLIAM HEWITT is a caretaker of some small dams at Hawke Lake. He is paid $1.75 a day and board and the free use of a house and fuel owned by the Department at Hawke Lake. He has been permitted to buy provisions and furnish his house. For June 1911, his grocery bill at one store was $10.26; July, $34.40; Aug., $73.54; Sept. and Oct., $27.02. It is obvious that no attempt was made to control this expenditure and from the nature of the goods purchased Mr. Hewitt lived both luxuriously and extravagantly. It is costing the Government at least $1200 a year to maintain Mr. Hewitt at a job that should not cost half that. As a result of the disclosures elicited in my investigation McClellan cancelled this improvident arrangement and engaged him at $60.00 a month, and even this rate of wages is in my view, excessive.

B. A. ROSE, a G.T.R. ticket agent at Peterboro, appears constantly on pay rolls for several years until 1911, as a laborer. In many cases this is for tickets purchased by employees outside of the regular monthly tickets given for transportation on Government business. In some cases Mr. Rose denies the receipt of the money put through in his name. It was impossible to trace the parties who got either these tickets or the money.

PATRICK J. KENNY, who conducts a liquor store in Peterboro, is almost constantly on the pay roll as a carpenter from December, 1908, to the fall of 1911. I have filed with this report a verified copy of Kenny's account showing that he was paid nearly $600.00 for liquors and cigars in three years. As far as I can trace it practically all of these refreshments were to equip the Bessie Butler for numerous pleasure parties, some of which were conducted under the guise of official inspections. McClellan denies that any of these went to his house although Kenny says that a substantial order was delivered there for Xmas, 1908. The evidence shows that some $35 or $40 worth of liquors was purchased and paid for each winter when the boats were out of commission. I was unable to trace the delivery of the winter supply. Kennly testified that all these goods were ordered by McClellan and Farein. The latter says that he ordered only upon instructions from McClellan, who acknowledges this and admits his full responsibility in the matter.

J. YOUNG. Time sheet for Sept., 1905, shows J. Young, laborer, 26 days' work at $1.50—$39.00. Time sheet for Nov., 1905, shows J. Young, labbrer, 24 days' work at $1.50—$36.00. The evidence showed that J. Young was not a laborer and never worked on the Canal. He is a steamboat man at Young's Point. Superintendent McClellan engaged the boat for an excursion to Fenelon Falls at $125.00 and says that it was for the use of departmental officials and their friends. Young says that the party was made up largely of Peterboro people.

If there was nothing to conceal one cannot understand why Young's account should not be paid regularly as an account instead of his name being falsely entered on the roll as a laborer.

In December, 1908, fire did some small damage to the kitchen of the Bessie Butler. McClellan reported to the department that it would take some two or three hundred dollars to put her in repair. Apparently without authority from anybody except that he says that he spoke to Mr. Butler about it, he expended upwards of $2,200 in rebuilding the boat on an extraxagant and unwarranted scale.

ROBERT PIMMETT has been employed as a cook on one of the Government boats for a numer of years. In 1910 he was paid a monthly salary and twenty cents a meal for the crew and work men, and thirty-five cents a meal for officials' guests, etc. He kept track of the meals and sent a statement to the office monthly. This account for meals runs into

TO COMMAND BISLEY TEAM

Canadian Press Despatch.

Ottawa, March 10.—It was announced this morning that Lt.-Col. J. G. Ross, commanding the first battalion Fifth Royal Highlanders, Montreal, has been appointed in command of the Bisley team, and Lieut. C. W. G. Gibson, son of the Lieut.-Governor of Ontario, is appointed adjutant.

BENNETT IS FREED

Wife Satisfies Court That Injury Was Not Intentional

Port Hope, March 10.—The case of Edwin Bennett, charged with assaulting his wife was disposed of yesterday afternoon. The court officials visited the hospital and heard the evidence of Mrs. Bennett. She remembered very little about it but was satisfied that her husband would not strike her intentionally. There had been no trouble that day, but occasionally they had little spats due to interference on the part of Joseph Wade. She had told her husband repeatedly to leave the Wade home and she knew everything would be all right if they were separated.

After hearing the evidence the Magistrate decided that sufficient evidence had not been given to warrant him in committing the defendant for trial or putting him on his own defence, and he therefore dismissed the charge.

Calgary, March 10.—Dr. Kidd arrived in town to take up the duties of Medical Superintendent at the Asylum made vacant by the death of Dr. Moher. Dr. Kidd was formerly assistant superintendent at the Asylum in Toronto, where he has made an excellent record. His father is Mayor of Trenton.

PETERBOROUGH, MONDAY, MARCH 9, 1914.

THE CANADIAN NORTHERN LOAN, A MOST SERIOUS PROBLEM.

CANADA IS a country of great railways and fully realizes their vast importance as a factor in her development. She must continue to build railways, for there are immense stretches of territory waiting to yield their latent wealth when a railway makes them marketable. But Canadians must remember that all her railways cannot be built in a day and some aspects of the Canadian Northern appeal lead to the opinion that perhaps railway building has been proceeding too fast for our finances.

Our readers will recall a recent article of Mr. F. H. Dobbin in The Review, dealing with early railway construction—wild-cat railway building it was, if we may borrow a term applied to early banking in the American West. The Grand Trunk was unable to pay dividends for a great many years because of the debt due to abnormal and foolish expenditure on all sorts of railways. The aftermath of that early, feverish stampede for railways was a long period of depression, a period during which struggling municipalities were shackled with large interest-bearing debts, so much so that they had to be assisted by government, and bound by law to forego escapades into the railway field.

Many as were the failures in early railroad construction, great as was the loss, Canada has persisted in building railways. Up to the end of 1913, the total of the aid granted by the parliament, legislatures and municipalities of Canada to railways as furnished by the Department of Railways and Canals, was nearly 219 millions, made up as follows:—$163,251,000 from the Parliament of Canada, $36,500,000 from the Provincial Legislatures, $18,078,000 from municipalities. In addition, land grants amounting to nearly forty-four million acres have been given from various governments. Bonds have also been guaranteed to the amount of 275 million dollars. The aid granted to railroads reaches an estimated total of six hundred million dollars, and very likely it far exceeds this sum.

For a long time rumors have been current that the building of the Transcontinental was being wastefully carried on and now within the last few weeks a government commission flatly says that the enormous sum of forty millions has been flung away. In spite of all precepts and the well-known example of the Grand Trunk Railway, the Laurier administration has shackled the new line with a tremendous debt. The Montreal Star says:

> "The burden will fall speedily upon the revenues of the Grand Trunk Pacific as a super charge on its earnings, and will constitute a serious handicap upon the efforts of that road to reach an assured position of established prosperity. Later, it will fall upon the traffic; and generations of Canadians will pay in swollen freight rates for this wicked waste of squandered millions."

Just at this point the Canadian Northern approaches the Borden Government for a loan. Sir William Mackenzie in his published statement says the Canadian Northern has 8,694 miles of completed railway, its completed and uncompleted lines have cost $303,319,232, and that only $20,992,566, have been received from the Dominion and Provincial Governments and from municipalities. Four million acres have been received in land grants while bonds have been guaranteed by Provincial and Dominion Governments to the extent of $131,322,666. The method of constructing the road, it is stated, was peculiar, in that the owners, Mackenzie and Mann, let large contracts to the contracting firm of Mackenzie and Mann. It is also surmised that the stormy municipal elections held in Toronto last January over the purchase of the Mackenzie and Mann Street Railway there, had a connection with the financial position of the C.N.R.

The present railway situation is one of vast import to the Canadian people, and big as the Mackenzie and Mann problem is, it is only a part of a much larger question. In the first place there are two facts, or perhaps three, that stand out beyond all others; Canada must continue to build railways, the C.N.R. is too deeply concerned in the national credit of Canada to be refused assistance and the Borden Government has a right to every detail that may be necessary to understand the exact financial position of the road. But Mr. Borden is responsible to the people of Canada for the scientific conduct of state affairs and he must protect the people from railway exploitation as well as safeguard the credit of the country, of the railways and of the millionaires. When we remember that the C.P.R's gross earnings are practically twice its gross expenditure, when we see the palaces built by railway magnates, when we recall the fact that freight rates in the West are about double the rates south of the line, the Canadian people have a vital interest in these large advances to railway corporations. In the Canadian West the pioneer is working hard to realize the potentialities of that great wheat field and every acre sown increases the value of the lands held by the railways, as well as their borrowing power. Every dollar raised by bond bears interest and the millions raised by bonds for railway construction must have their bond interest paid from earnings. That is why the Canadian people are so concerned in loans to railways. The cost of freight and fares for years to come will include interest for money borrowed yesterday, today and to-morrow. Since the Laurier Government has thrown the charges of forty-millions on the Canadian people it is all the more important that Mr. Borden should safeguard the interests of the public who must eventually pay the cost of these vast liens on public credit. He should know the quality of railway construction so that the people will get at least good service for the money spent. Those who have travelled in the West know that the C.N.R. has the poorest roadbed of the three main lines. Is the money borrowed being put into the construction of the road? Are the people paying too much for railway development? Are they getting value or are they being made the dupes of clever, unscrupulous men? There are a hundred questions voicing the uneasiness of the public mind in regard to Canadian railways that should be set at rest before a further discount is made on the future of the Canadian people.

THE LATE VERY REV. DEAN COTY.

MANY IN PETERBOROUGH were grieved and profoundly shocked to learn of the death of the Very Rev. Dean Coty in Hamilton, at the early age of fifty-one. During his brief stay in Peterborough of one year, he made many friends and was a man whose talents quickly drew him to higher and more important duties than were his lot here. Although his life was short he accomplished much in the time at his command, and was particularly active in educational work. The Hamilton Herald thus refers editorially to the worth of the late priest:—

> "So closely had the Very Rev. Dean Coty been identified with the life of this city—so active had he been in promoting many good movements for the general welfare—that his untimely death will be profoundly regretted by all classes. But the loss is, of course, most keenly felt by his own people of the parish of St. Patrick's, who loved him as a friend while revering him as a priest. Father Coty's works will live after him, and his memory as a faithful priest, a public-spirited citizen, a friend of the poor and a leader in many movements for social uplifting, will long survive."

Canadian Politics Not So Bad.

One predicts a future for the school boy who wrote the following terse narrative about Elijah:

"There was a man named Elijah. He had some bears and he lived in a cave. Some boys tormented him. He said: 'If you keep on throwing stones at me, I'll turn the bears on you and they'll eat you up.' And they did and he did and the bears did."

A Serious Question for Bill and Dan.

Woodstock Sentinel-Review.

Notwithstanding that the people of Canada have contributed of their money by the hundreds of millions to the building of Canadian railways there still seems to be a doubt in the minds of some whether the said railways exist for the accommodation of the people or the people exist for the accommodation of the railways.

Higher education would be a powerful aid to matrimony if all graduating girls were like these graduating girls.

Not Enamored of the Policy.

Hamilton Herald.

It is quite true that Mr. Rowell is not personally responsible for the existence of the bar in the Ontario Liberal club, and that he cannot abolish it. All the same, it does look as though the prominent Liberals who constitute the membership of the club cannot be enamored of the "banish-the-bar" policy, else they would hasten to set the example.

If Mr. Wilson never did anything else than set the standard for terse logical utterances on public affairs in the stronghold of blithering "eloquence," he would have deserved well of the American people.

THE BACKBONE

By Walt Mason

The backbone of winter is tricky and mean, it puts us too oft in despondency's trough; for just when the symptoms of springtime are seen, it puts on the clamps, and the stuff is all off. For weeks it will languish and lead us to think that winter is over and done with for keeps, and then it indulges in spasm and kink, and man is kept busy a-sheeding the weeps. When man doffs his flannels and covers his frame with light underclothing, and buys a straw hat, the backbone of winter takes chips in the game, and sends him pneumonia or something like that. The robins get fooled just as much as the men, and while they are warbling away in the land, the backbone of winter gets playful again, and freezes the dod-gasted birds where they stand. The hens start to lay in a generous mood, so people can purchase some eggs at the store, and then the old backbone, unladylike, rude, just gives them cold feet, and they cackle no more. If winter in season has hooted and screetched, it's highly improper a protest to bring; but, hang the old backbone! it should be impeached for raising a fuss when we're ready for Spring!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

ENDORSATION.

Editor of the Review:

Dear Sir,—I quite endorse the sentiments in the letter written by "Briton" in last Saturday's evening Review. It was decidedly to the point, but at the same time it was written in a quiet, refined, dignified manner, which commanded respect for the unknown writer.

Yours,
UNOSTENTATION.

NEW JUDGES ARE APPOINTED

OTTAWA, March 10.—Official announcement was made yesterday of the appointment of seven new Ontario county court judges. The new judges are Emmerson Coatsworth, Toronto, judge of York County; C. R. Hanning, of Preston, judge of Waterloo; Frank R. Powell, of Parry Sound, judge of Parry Sound district; H. R. Lavell, of Smith's Falls, judge of Frontenac; Arthur T. Boles, of Leamington, judge of Norfolk; John W. Elliott, of Milton, judge of Milton; and Col. John H. Scott, of Walkerton, judge of Lanark.

There are still two Ontario county court judgeships vacant, Northumberland and Durham, caused by the retirement of Judge Benson, and Renfrew, due to the death of Judge Donahue.

The other seven vacancies are due to the retirement of judges under a statute passed last session which provides for the retirement of all county court judges when they reach 75. The judges who retire on full pay are: Judge Senkler, of Lanark; Judge Price, of Frontenac; Judge Robb, of Norfolk; Judge Morgan, of York; Judge McCurry, of Parry Sound; Judge Chisholm, of Waterloo, and Judge Benson, of Northumberland.

A Royal Prerogative.

OTTAWA, March 10.—The proposal which has been made in Toronto and by prison reform bodies elsewhere to transfer to the province the prerogative of clemency as it affects convicts in provincial institutions has been before the Justice Department.

It is learned that it will not be acceded to. The opinion of the law officers of the crown is that such cannot be done. Clemency, it is pointed out, is not a matter of legislation, but the prerogative of the King. Through the Imperial authorities, such prerogative has been delegated to the Governor-General. There is no authority by which it could be further delegated to Lieutenant-Governors.

Carry Hydro Bylaws.

BURFORD, March 10.—Burford ratepayers yesterday carried by 28 majority a bylaw enabling the municipal council to enter into a contract with the Hydro-Electric Commission for Niagara power, and also a money bylaw providing for the erection of a distributing station and equipment. The number of votes polled was 95.

POLICE CAPTURE MRS. PANKHURST

GLASGOW, March 10.—Emmeline Pankhurst, leader of the militant suffragettes, was arrested last night at a suffragette meeting after a fight with the police, in which twenty women were hurt and several constables badly bruised.

Mrs. Pankhurst was speaking when the police dashed into the hall with clubs drawn. A net work of barbed wire stretched across the platform, under the floral decorations, proved efficacious, with the aid of some men using flower pots, chairs and anything else handy as missiles, in checking the police.

South African Bill Passed.

CAPE TOWN, South Africa, March 10.—In the House of Assembly yesterday the bill to indemnify the Government for its acts under martial law passed the third reading by a vote of 70 to 12. Minister of the Interior Smuts, in moving the third reading of the bill, said the banishment recently of nine labor leaders because of their connection with the general strike was not necessarily permanent. The indemnity bill is an outgrowth of the deportation of these men, who are now in England.

Birthdays Note

TUESDAY, MARCH TENTH

To-day, the Hon. Clifford Sifton, one of Canada's most noted public men and chairman of the Royal Canadian Conservation Commission, celebrates his fifty-third birthday. To him, perhaps more than to any other man, the country owes most of the development of the West, for he it was who inaugurated the policy of wide-spread advertising which resulted in the turning of immigration towards the western provinces. His career as a politician began when he was only twenty-seven years of age. At thirty he had become attorney-general of Manitoba and at thirty-five he was called on to join the new Liberal Government at Ottawa as Minister of the Interior. He broke with his colleagues over the autonomy bills and came out in active opposition to his party on the trade question.

LATEST NEWS PARAGRAPHED

Squadrons of cavalry charged and dispersed crowds of turbulent strikers in the streets of Rome yesterday, wounding several of the demonstrators.

Wm. White, aged 17, was struck by a train near Kingston, and instantly killed. He was caught between an express train going west and another going east.

Every car of the Cobalt Special left the track yesterday when the baggage car ran off on a sharp curve seven miles south of Cobalt. Four persons were slightly hurt.

Eduardo Dato, the Spanish Premier, will as a result of the general elections, continue to hold office with a majority in the chamber of nearly 100 over all combinations.

The total loss, together with her crew of 22 men, of the German steamer Heinrich is feared. She left Newport, Wales, on Feb. 17 for Marseilles, and is a fortnight overdue.

The lumbering camps in North Hastings have ceased operations for the season and the men have returned to their homes until the rivers are clear of ice, when driving will begin.

Much improved, Sir James Whitney left the Toronto General Hospital for his residence yesterday morning. He appeared to enjoy the change, and the short automobile trip to his home.

Gustave Evanturel, M.P.P., has announced to a few personal friends that as soon as he resigned from the House he would return to Prescott and begin an active campaign for re-election. He is certain he can win.

Militants Are Fined.

LONDON, March 10.—Ten of the militant suffragettes arrested during the demonstration Sunday in Trafalgar square, when Miss Sylvia Pankhurst was captured by the police, were arraigned at Bow Street Police Court yesterday. Small fines were inflicted by the magistrate, who gave the prisoners the option of serving a short term of imprisonment.

Tarzan of the Apes

By EDGAR RICE BURROUGHS.

He thought that would be sufficient. Later he would return the letter to the cabin.

In the matter of food, thought Tarzan, they had no need to worry—he would provide, and he did.

The next morning Jane Porter found her missing letter in the exact spot from which it had disappeared two nights before. She was mystified, but when she saw the printed words beneath her signature she felt a chill run up her spine. She showed the letter, or rather the last sheet with the signature, to Clayton.

"To think," she said, "that uncanny thing was probably watching me all the time that I was writing—oo! it makes me shudder just to think of it."

"But he must be friendly," reassured Clayton, "for he has returned your letter, nor did he offer to harm you, and unless I am mistaken he left a very substantial memento of his friendship outside the cabin door last night, for I just found the carcass of a wild boar there as I came out."

From then on scarcely a day passed that did not bring its offering of game or other food. Sometimes it was a young deer, again a quantity of strange cooked food, cassava cakes pilfered from the village of Mbonga, or a boar, or leopard, and once a lion.

Tarzan derived the greatest pleasure of his life in hunting meat for these strangers. It seemed to him that no pleasure on earth could compare with laboring for the welfare and protection of the beautiful white girl.

Some day he would venture into the camp in daylight and talk with these people through the medium of the little bugs which were familiar to them and to Tarzan.

But he found it difficult to overcome the timidity of the wild thing of the forest, and so day followed day without seeing a fulfillment of his good intentions.

The party in the camp, emboldened by familiarity, wandered farther and farther into the jungle in search of nuts and fruit.

Scarcely a day passed that did not find Professor Porter straying in his preoccupied indifference toward the jaws of death. Mr. Samuel T. Philander, never what one might call robust, was worn to the shadow of a shadow through the ceaseless worry and mental distraction resultant from his herculean efforts to safeguard the professor.

A month passed. Tarzan had finally determined to visit the camp by daylight.

It was early afternoon. Clayton had wandered to the point at the harbor's mouth to look for passing vessels. Here he kept a great mass of wood high piled ready to be ignited as a signal should a steamer or a sail top the far horizon.

Professor Porter was wandering along the beach south of the camp, with Mr. Philander at his elbow urging him to turn his steps back before the two became again the sport of some savage beast.

The others gone, Jane Porter and Esmeralda had wandered into the jungle to gather fruit and in their search were led farther and farther from the cabin.

Tarzan waited in silence before the door of the little house until they should return.

His thoughts were of the beautiful white girl. They were always of her now. He wondered if she would fear him, and the thought all but caused him to relinquish his plan.

While he waited he passed the time printing a message to her. Whether he intended giving it to her he himself could not have told, but he took infinite pleasure in seeing his thoughts expressed in print, in which he was not so uncivilized after all. He wrote:

Jane Porter and Esmeralda were not there.

Instantly Clayton, followed by the two old men, plunged into the jungle calling the girl's name aloud. For half an hour they stumbled on until Clayton, by merest chance, came upon the prostrate form of Esmeralda.

He stooped beside her, feeling for her pulse and then listening for her heart beats. She lived. He shook her.

"Esmeralda!" he shrieked in her ear. "Esmeralda! Where is Miss Porter? What has happened? Esmeralda!"

Slowly the black opened her eyes. She saw Clayton. She saw the jungle about her.

"Oh, Gabriel!" she screamed and fainted again.

By this time Professor Porter and Mr. Philander had come up.

"What shall we do, Mr. Clayton?" asked the old professor. "Where shall we look? Heaven could not have been so cruel as to take my little girl away from me now."

"We must rouse Esmeralda first," replied Clayton. "She can tell us what has happened. Esmeralda!" he cried again, shaking the black woman roughly by the shoulder.

"Oh, Gabriel, Ah wants to die!" cried the poor woman, but with eyes fast closed. "Lemme die, but doan' lemme see dat awful face again. Whafer de devil round after po' ole Esmeralda? She ain't done nuffin' to nobody."

"A gorilla, Esmeralda?" questioned Mr. Philander, and the three men scarcely breathed as he voiced the horrible thought.

Clayton immediately began to look about for tracks, but he could find nothing save a confusion of trampled grasses in the close vicinity, and his woodcraft was too meager for the translation of what he did see.

All the balance of the day they sought through the jungle, but as night drew on they were forced to give up in despair and hopelessness, for they did not even know in what direction the thing had borne Jane Porter.

It was long after dark ere they reached the cabin, and a grief stricken party it was that sat silently within the little structure.

Professor Porter finally broke the silence. His tones were no longer those of the erudite pedant theorizing upon the abstract and the unknowable, but those of the man of action, determined, but tinged by a note of indescribable hopelessness and grief which wrung an answering pang from Clayton's heart.

"I shall lie down now," said the old man, "and try to sleep. Early tomorrow, so soon as it is light, I shall take what food I can carry and continue the search until I have found Jane. I will not return without her."

Clayton rose and laid his hand gently upon Professor Porter's bent old shoulder.

"I shall go with you, of course," he said. "Do not tell me that I need even have said so."

HELP FOR WORKING GIRLS

Two Girls Tell Story of Their Illness and How They Found Relief.

New Orleans, La.—"I take pleasure in writing these lines to express my gratitude to you. I am only 16 years old and work in a tobacco factory. I have been a very sick girl but I have improved wonderfully since taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and am now looking fine and feeling a thousand times better."—Miss AMELIA JAQUILLARD, 613 Seventh Street, New Orleans, La.

St. Clair, Pa. — "My mother was alarmed because my periods were suppressed and I had pains in my back and side, and severe headaches. I had pimples on my face, my complexion was sallow, my sleep was disturbed, I had nervous spells, was very tired and had no ambition. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has worked a charm in my case and has regulated me. I worked in a mill among hundreds of girls and have recommended your medicine to many of them." — Miss ESTELLA MAGUIRE, 110 Thwing St., Saint Clair, Pa.

There is nothing that teaches more than experience. Therefore, such letters from girls who have suffered and were restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound should be a lesson to others. The same remedy is within reach of all.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

NUT FARMING.

Writer Sees Money In Development of Overlooked Industry.

Canada ought to be a nut country, says a writer in The Family Herald and Weekly Star. Filberts—those in appearance like the Kentish cob-nuts for instance,—might be grown behind soft wood wind breaks on many a stoney hill which produces only moss, or stunted June grass to-day, and would give handsome returns for a little care. Our own domestic hazels (possibly beach nuts also), are surely not incapable of development, and are grandly hardy.

The butternut, aptly named and of a wide spread habitat, has a bad record of broken meats, and bruised fingers, but is the foundation upon which might be built up a rich and delicate bit of luxury, if someone would inaugurate the game of cultivating and properly caring for it.

Whoever in Canada has thought of doing for the butternut what our forefathers did for the walnuts, and chestnuts of commerce? And yet the one who experimented successfully would probably have from it a fortune as bigg as Edison's, and as well deserved.

Of the walnuts and chestnuts of the Ontario Peninsula the old inhabitants can still tell us, though toil exacting wheat fields, and fruit orchards, have driven them almost out of sight to-day. But why has no serious attempt been made to take Dame Nature's hint, and grow nuts commercially, on the grand scale, in Essex and Kent?

The burst of the initial speed of a vigorous young country has not yet exhausted itself in Canada, and the growing of crops which require from fifteen to fifty years for their maturing appears slow, though older countries find nothing objectionable in that policy.

In various parts of Canada, notably in the western part of the Province of British Columbia can be seen a number of walnut trees planted many years ago by old-timers. Growing walnuts on a commercial basis was not, however, the idea of these pioneers; the trees were planted for ornamental and shade purposes, and while they fulfilled the intentions of the owners, they have done still more; they have given us a splendid example of the hardy nature possessed by this profitable tree such as we had never before thought possible. With walnuts selling at 25 to 30 cents per pound and likely to go still higher, the profits from a well-developed and productive walnut grove will feel like an unexpected legacy from a rich uncle, while the manual labor required is very small indeed compared to that required in other lines of fruit growing, etc. Of course it means a certain amount of investigation and experimentation for the pioneers, but it will prove well worth all the work and study demanded. That it is a highly profitable industry will be shown by actual results attained in Oregon, and it has many other advantages that can not be claimed for other forms of orchard work.

For the successful cultivation of walnut trees a rich loam soil three to four feet in depth is required, and perhaps the next essential requirement is a fairly long growing season. Trees are planted fifty feet apart. One plowing a year is usually sufficient unless there has been heavy falls of rain and the ground has become packed, in which case it should be loosened up with the plow or cultivator; in the late spring the soil [illegible] be loosened up to a depth of [illegible] inches and well cultiva[illegible] should be done while [illegible] dormant, and care [illegible] ten to keep the trees [illegible] flexible character of [illegible] the length and weight [illegible] branches, the lower [illegible] p and get in the [illegible] removed.

ONE MORE DAY AND THEN THE BIG CLUB OFFER IS ENDED

Candidates Can You Afford to Let This Great Club Offer go by, Strike Now While the Iron is Hot and While the Votes Are Large

One more day and your last chance to get club votes has gone.

Do you think you will have enough votes to win the prize you intended winning when you entered the struggle a few weeks ago?

Your friends have been watching you in this race. Many have been very much interested in your welfare. Can you look them in the face and tell them you have done your best, and if you find you are not the winner of one of the larger prizes, say to them that you could not help it?

Don't blame anyone but yourself if you are not the winner of the grand prize. The candidate that wins this beautiful prize has had to travel the same path as you. There has been no favorites in this contest, and whoever the lucky one may be that on the closing evening is given the Grand Prize, he or she will have won it honestly and deserves a great deal of credit. This has been a long and hard race. Many have dropped by the wayside. Others have not done their best. But the ones that stick to the end and come out victorious are people that have mastered the greatest enterprise of its kind that has ever presented itself in this part of Ontario.

The Dreamer

Remember that it is busy people that do things in this world. No dreamer ever had a look-in for anything that was worth while. The dreamer spends his time thinking how easy he can do this and do that and by the time he has made up his mind the easiest way to accomplish a certain thing the opportunity has gone. The world likes people that do things, not think and talk about them.

Saturday at 8 p.m.

That is the end of the big epoch in the history of the Review's great contest. Not one minute will be given candiates after 8 p.m. Saturday. The race is very close, and it is up to you to have enough subscriptions by that time to win the prize you may aspire to.

GEM OF THE TROPICS.

Island of Trinidad and Its Famous Lake of Asphalt.

One of the most interesting islands in the world is Trinidad. It is a land of many wonders, a gorgeous, green tropical island, made famous through its asphalt lake.

Trinidad lies 2,500 miles almost due south of the eastern end of Nova Scotia. It is an island with an area (1,755 square miles) less than the State of Delaware. It is between 10 and 11 degrees (about 700 miles) north of the equator. This island belongs to Great Britain and is separated from its nearest neighbor, Venezuela, in South America, by the great gulf of Paria and the narrow straits, or bocas, which connect the gulf with the wide ocean.

Perpetual sunshine makes this gem of the tropics a place of never-ending delight. The thermometer touches 85 degrees almost every day and never falls more than 20 degrees. The only difference between the season of the year and another is that for a few months it rains. Even in the rainy season there is an abundance of sunshine. There are good stores, large warehouses filled with chocolate beans, sugar and other tropical products and one can ride uptown on a trolley car built in Philadelphia, Pa. The most popular hotel faces the great savannah, a wide stretch of green grass bordered by green trees. Here grazes a herd of peculiar Indian cattle and here in the latter part of the afternoon you may see hundreds of men and boys playing cricket. Beautiful drives can be taken to the reservoir, or further up the mountains to Maracas waterfall through avenues of graceful giant bamboos which arch over the roadway and through miles of cacao plantations.

Annually $8,500,000 worth of chocolate beans are sent away from Trinidad, chiefly to the United States and England, with about $2,700,000 worth of sugar and large quantities of cocoanuts and bananas. These and other things in lesser amount represent the products of a rich soil, watered by plenteous rains and tended and harvested by the patient labor of industrious coolies from India.

The total value of Trinidad exports aggregate about $15,000,000 yearly. Practically no mineral wealth is developed with the exception of asphalt. Comparatively few of the people of Trinidad have ever seen the lake or know much more about the asphalt wonder of the world than do the residents of this country. Yet Trinidad ships yearly to America from 125,000 to 150,000 tons of asphalt and about 40,000 tons to Europe, from which the Government of Trinidad is in receipt of an annual revenue of more than $250,000 in royalties on the asphalt mined and exported.

The asphalt lake is on the top of a long hill, about a half hour's walk from La Brea, an unattractive coast village. The lake is not very impressive. It is simply a great level area of 100 or more acres, bordered by a few low hills and dotted with clumps of trees and bushes. The surface has a dull bluish gray color and is broken by irregular pools of water. The surface of the asphalt is hard and solid enough to easily bear a person's weight. A narrow-gauge railroad runs from the rennery on the edge of the lake out and half way across the lake. Then it swings back in a great loop to the refinery where the asphalt is melted and run into barrels or to the pier where the bitumen is shipped in its crude state to Europe.

Digging asphalt is a simple operation. A mattock is the only tool required and under its blows the pitch breaks readily. The negroes employed in digging are skilled in the work and break out lumps a couple of feet across, which is just about as heavy as a man can easily carry. The crude asphalt as it is broken out is somewhat brownish or dark earthly color.

They Watched It Grow.

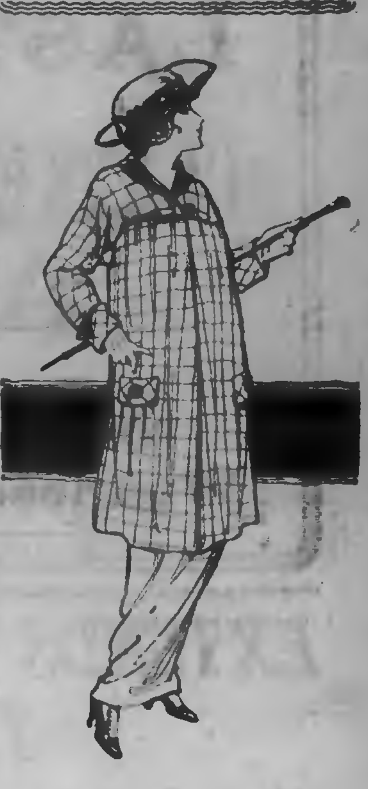
One characteristic of the writings of the pioneers of Canada deserves mention, as it is a characteristic of the whole of Canadian literature. It is healthy and vigorous in tone, and full of the hopes and aspirations of a country that was opening up before their own eyes, and by their own efforts.

We breathe the invigorating spirit of the wild that is still so marked a feature of the literature of the Dominion.

One never forgets, writes Robert Birkmyre, in a recent issue of The Millgate Monthly, that they are the impressions of men who saw things as they were, and in spite of the fact that there is a crudeness in their work, and it is occasionally monotonous in detail, there is a sort of consecutive interest in the journals and diaries of the pioneers that make them free from the reproach of dullness.

For example, we find in the journal of Alexander Henry, a record of personal adventure that almost makes the pages of Fenimore Cooper seem dull in comparison. It is to the literature of the pioneers more than to any other source that romantic writers such as Sir Gilbert Parker are indebted for most of their material and inspiration in dealing with the exploits of the voyageur and the fur trader; and there is still hidden away in these obscure chronicles a veritable storehouse of romance for the prospective novelist who wishes to take up the early romance of the Dominion.

THE LATEST FROM DAME FASHION



THE COLOR AND THE SLEEVE.

In picking out your utility coat for spring season, be sure that the yoke is "right" for some odd yoke or sleeve effect is most smart. Here the sleeves and yoke are in one in the Raglan suggestion that is now so favored. The material is a light wool—or could easily be one of the new cotton coatings—in a light sage green, for bright colors are the thing in spring coats. A light toned hat and gray tops to the fashionable button boots give the light color scheme that is so fashionable this season.

> You are Jane Porter. I saw it in your letter. When you see this you will know that it is for you and that Tarzan of the apes loves you.

As he stood, straight as a young Indian, by the door waiting, after he had finished the message, there came to his keen ears a familiar sound. It was the passing of a great ape through the lower branches of the forest.

For an instant he listened intently, and then from the jungle came the agonized scream of a woman, and Tarzan of the apes, dropping his first love letter upon the ground, shot like a panther into the forest.

Clayton also heard the scream, and Professor Porter and Mr. Philander, and in a few minutes they came panting to the cabin, calling out to each other as they approached a volley of excited questions. A glance within confirmed their worst fears.

Jane Porter and Esmeralda were not there.

Instantly Clayton, followed by the two old men, plunged into the jungle calling the girl's name aloud. For half an hour they stumbled on until Clayton, by merest chance, came upon the prostrate form of Esmeralda.

"I knew that you would offer—that you would wish to go, Mr. Clayton, but you must not. Jane is beyond human assistance now. I simply go that I may face my Maker with her and know, too, that what was once my dear girl does not lie all alone and friendless in the jungle."

"I shall go with you," said Clayton simply.

The old man looked up, regarding the strong, handsome face of William Cecil Clayton intently. Perhaps he read there the love that lay in the heart beneath—the love for his daughter.

"As you wish," he said.

"You may count on me also," said Mr. Philander.

"No, my dear old friend," said Professor Porter. "We may not all go.

HELP FOR WORKING GIRLS

Two Girls Tell Story of Their Illness and How They Found Relief.

New Orleans, La.—"I take pleasure in writing these lines to express my gratitude to you. I am only 16 years old and work in a tobacco factory. I have been a very sick girl but I have improved wonderfully since taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and am now looking fine and feeling a thousand times better."—Miss AMELIA JAQUILLARD, 613 Seventh Street, New Orleans, La.

St. Clair, Pa.—"My mother was alarmed because my periods were suppressed and I had pains in my back and side, and severe headaches. I had pimples on my face, my complexion was sallow, my sleep was disturbed, I had nervous spells, was very tired and had no ambition. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has worked a charm in my case and has regulated me. I worked in a mill among hundreds of girls and have recommended your medicine to many of them."—Miss ESTELLA MAGUIRE, 110 Thwing St., Saint Clair, Pa.

There is nothing that teaches more than experience. Therefore, such letters from girls who have suffered and were restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound should be a lesson to others. The same remedy is within reach of all.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

NUT FARMING.

Writer Sees Money In Development of Overlooked Industry.

Canada ought to be a nut country, says a writer in The Family Herald and Weekly Star. Filberts—those in appearance like the Kentish cob-nuts for instance,—might be grown behind soft wood wind breaks on many a stoney hill which produces only moss, or stunted June grass to-day, and would give handsome returns for a little care. Our own domestic hazels (possibly beach nuts also), are surely not incapable of development, and are grandly hardy.

The butternut, aptly named and of a wide spread habitat, has a bad record of broken meats, and bruised fingers, but is the foundation upon which might be built up a rich and delicate bit of luxury, if someone would inaugurate the game of cultivating and properly caring for it.

Whoever in Canada has thought of doing for the butternut what our forefathers did for the walnuts, and chestnuts of commerce? And yet the one who experimented successfully would probably have from it a fortune as bigg as Edison's, and as well deserved.

Of the walnuts and chestnuts of the Ontario Peninsula the old inhabitants can still tell us, though toll exacting wheat fields, and fruit orchards, have driven them almost out of sight to-day. But why has no serious attempt been made to take Dame Nature's hint, and grow nuts commercially, on the grand scale, in Essex and Kent?

The burst of the initial speed of a vigorous young country has not yet exhausted itself in Canada, and the growing of crops which require from fifteen to fifty years for their maturing appears slow, though older countries find nothing objectionable in that policy.

In various parts of Canada, notably in the western part of the Province of British Columbia can be seen a number of walnut trees planted many years ago by old-timers. Growing walnuts on a commercial basis was not, however, the idea of these pioneers; the trees were planted for ornamental and shade purposes, and while they fulfilled the intentions of the owners, they have done still more; they have given us a splendid example of the hardy nature possessed by this profitable tree such as we had never before thought possible. With walnuts selling at 25 to 30 cents per pound and likely to go still higher, the profits from a well-developed and productive walnut grove will feel like an unexpected legacy from a rich uncle, while the manual labor required is very small indeed compared to that required in other lines of fruit growing, etc. Of course it means a certain amount of investigation and experimentation for the pioneers, but it will prove well worth all the work and study demanded. That it is a highly profitable industry will be shown by actual results attained in Oregon, and it has many other advantages that can not be claimed for other forms of orchard work.

For the successful cultivation of walnut trees a rich loam soil three to four feet in depth is required, and perhaps the next essential requirement is a fairly long growing season. Trees are planted fifty feet apart. One plowing a year is usually sufficient unless there has been heavy falls of rain and the ground has become packed, in which case it should be loosened up with the plow or cultivator. In the late spring the soil should be loosened up to a depth of six or seven inches and well cultivated. Pruning should be done while the trees are dormant, and care should be taken to keep the trees well-balanced.

Owing to the flexible character of the wood and the length and weight of the lateral branches, the lower limbs are apt to droop and get in the way and should be removed.

ONE MORE DAY AND THEN THE BIG CLUB OFFER IS ENDED

Candidates Can You Afford to Let This Great Club Offer go by, Strike Now While the Iron is Hot and While the Votes Are Large

One more day and your last chance to get club votes has gone.

Do you think you will have enough votes to win the prize you intended winning when you entered the struggle a few weeks ago?

Your friends have been watching you in this race. Many have been very much interested in your welfare. Can you look them in the face and tell them you have done your best, and if you find you are not the winner of one of the larger prizes, say to them that you could not help it?

Don't blame anyone but yourself if you are not the winner of the grand prize. The candidate that wins this beautiful prize has had to travel the same path as you. There has been no favorites in this contest, and whoever the lucky one may be that on the closing evening is given the Grand Prize, he or she will have won it honestly and deserves a great deal of credit. This has been a long and hard race. Many have dropped by the wayside. Others have not done their best. But the ones that stick to the end and come out victorious are people that have mastered the greatest enterprise of its kind that has ever presented itself in this part of Ontario.

The Dreamer

Remember that it is busy people that do things in this world. No dreamer ever had a look-in for anything that was worth while. The dreamer spends his time thinking how easy he can do this and do that and by the time he has made up his mind the easiest way to accomplish a certain thing the opportunity has gone. The world likes people that do things, not think and talk about them.

Saturday at 8 p.m.

That is the end of the big epoch in the history of the Review's great contest. Not one minute will be given candiates after 8 p.m. Saturday. The race is very close, and it is up to you to have enough subscriptions by that time to win the prize you may aspire to.

GEM OF THE TROPICS.

Island of Trinidad and Its Famous Lake of Asphalt.

One of the most interesting islands in the world is Trinidad. It is a land of many wonders, a gorgeous, green tropical island, made famous through its asphalt lake.

Trinidad lies 2,500 miles almost due south of the eastern end of Nova Scotia. It is an island with an area (1,755 square miles) less than the State of Delaware. It is between 10 and 11 degrees (about 700 miles) north of the equator. This island belongs to Great Britain and is separated from its nearest neighbor, Venezuela, in South America, by the great gulf of Paria and the narrow straits, or bocas, which connect the gulf with the wide ocean.

Perpetual sunshine makes this gem of the tropics a place of never-ending delight. The thermometer touches 85 degrees almost every day and never falls more than 20 degrees. The only difference between the season of the year and another is that for a few months it rains. Even in the rainy season there is an abundance of sunshine. There are good stores, large warehouses filled with chocolate beans, sugar and other tropical products and one can ride uptown on a trolley car built in Philadelphia, Pa. The most popular hotel faces the great savannah, a wide stretch of green grass bordered by green trees. Here grazes a herd of peculiar Indian cattle and here in the latter part of the afternoon you may see hundreds of men and boys playing cricket. Beautiful drives can be taken to the reservoir, or further up the mountains to Maracas waterfall through avenues of graceful giant bamboos which arch over the roadway and through miles of cacao plantations.

Annually $8,500,000 worth of chocolate beans are sent away from Trinidad, chiefly to the United States and England, with about $2,700,000 worth of sugar and large quantities of cocoanuts and bananas. These and other things in lesser amount represent the products of a rich soil, watered by plenteous rains and tended and harvested by the patient labor of industrious coolies from India.

The total value of Trinidad exports aggregate about $15,000,000 yearly. Practically no mineral wealth is developed with the exception of asphalt. Comparatively few of the people of Trinidad have ever seen the lake or know much more about the asphalt wonder of the world than do the residents of this country. Yet Trinidad ships yearly to America from 125,000 to 150,000 tons of asphalt and about 40,000 tons to Europe, from which the Government of Trinidad is in receipt of an annual revenue of more than $250,000 in royalties on the asphalt mined and exported.

The asphalt lake is on the top of a long hill, about a half hour's walk from La Brea, an unattractive coast village. The lake is not very impressive. It is simply a great level area of 100 or more acres, bordered by a few low hills and dotted with clumps of trees and bushes. The surface has a dull bluish gray color and is broken by irregular pools of water. The surface of the asphalt is hard and solid enough to easily bear a person's weight. A narrow-gauge railroad runs from the rennery on the edge of the lake out and half way across the lake. Then it swings back in a great loop to the refinery where the asphalt is melted and run into barrels or to the pier where the bitumen is shipped in its crude state to Europe.

Digging asphalt is a simple operation. A mattock is the only tool required and under its blows the pitch breaks readily. The negroes employed in digging are skilled in the work and break out lumps a couple of feet across, which is just about as heavy as a man can easily carry. The crude asphalt as it is broken out is somewhat brownish or dark earthly color.

They Watched It Grow.

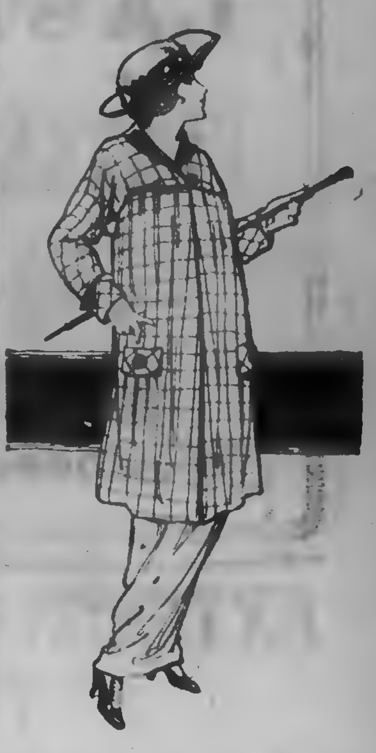
One characteristic of the writings of the pioneers of Canada deserves mention, as it is a characteristic of the whole of Canadian literature. It is healthy and vigorous in tone, and full of the hopes and aspirations of a country that was opening up before their own eyes, and by their own efforts.

We breathe the invigorating spirit of the wild that is still so marked a feature of the literature of the Dominion.

One never forgets, writes Robert Birkmyre, in a recent issue of The Millgate Monthly, that they are the impressions of men who saw things as they were, and in spite of the fact that there is a crudeness in their work, and it is occasionally monotonous in detail, there is a sort of consecutive interest in the journals and diaries of the pioneers that make them free from the reproach of dullness.

For example, we find in the journal of Alexander Henry, a record of personal adventure that almost makes the pages of Fenimore Cooper seem dull in comparison. It is to the literature of the pioneers more than to any other source that romantic writers such as Sir Gilbert Parker are indebted for most of their material and inspiration in dealing with the exploits of the voyageur and the fur trader; and there is still hidden away in these obscure chronicles a veritable storehouse of romance for the prospective novelist who wishes to take up the early romance of the Dominion.

THE LATEST FROM DAME FASHION



THE COLOR AND THE SLEEVE.

In picking out your utility coat for spring season, be sure that the yoke is "right" for some odd yoke or sleeve effect is most smart. Here the sleeves and yoke are in one in the Raglan suggestion that is now so favored. The material is a light wool—or could easily be one of the new cotton coatings—in a light sage green, for bright colors are the thing in spring coats. A light toned hat and gray tops to the fashionable button boots give the light color scheme that is so fashionable this season.

EXTENDS ULSTER COUNTIES TEMPORARY EXCLUSION

ASQUITH OFFER IS ANNOUNCED

Long Awaited Proposals For Compromise on Home Rule Are to the Effect That Any County By a Bare Majority May Secure Exemption From Operation of Bill For a Period of Six Years.

LONDON, March 10.—The House of Commons was packed yesterday afternoon, and the Prime Minister, Rt. Hon. Herbert Henry Asquith, was loudly cheered on rising to make a statement upon the Irish situation on the second reading of the Home Rule bill.

The Premier, after reviewing the unsuccessful efforts to arrive at a compromise with their political opponents by a series of conferences, said they had then come to the practical question as to how far exclusion could be adopted without violating the principles of either side, and they had come to the conclusion that the only way was to allow the Ulster counties themselves to determine where they desired to be excluded.

His plan was that any county in the Province of Ulster was to be excluded for a certain period if, on a poll being taken of the Parliamentary electors of any county before the bill came into operation a bare majority of votes favored exclusion. The said poll would be taken in the county if a requisition were presented signed by one-tenth of the electors and presented within a certain time after the date of the passing of the bill. The persons entitled to vote were those entitled to vote at Parliamentary elections, and the questions put would be: "Are you for the exclusion of the county from the government of Ireland for a period of years; or, are you against such exclusion? The poll would be taken by ballot similarly to Parliamentary elections. If the poll resulted in favor of exclusion, the county would be automatically excluded for a prescribed period.

In speaking of a "county," he would include as separate counties the Boroughs of Belfast and Londonderry. He did not believe they could select a more practicable area than a county. The Government, after much consideration, thought that the period of exclusion should be six years from the first meeting of the Irish Legislature in Dublin.

He had endeavored, be said, to explain the proposals which were put forward as the price of peace. (Cheers.) No one, he believed, either in Ireland or here, had any love for exclusion for its own sake or upon its own merits. He did not expect the proposals which be had outlined to be received with enthusiasm in any quarter, but he did ask for them deliberate and dispassionate consideration. (Cheers.) To Home Rulers, Irish or British, they involved at least a postponement of a complete and symmetrical system of self-government. To Unionists they implied a necessary acceptance of an Irish Legislature and executive in Dublin. On the other hand, they would hold out for the home rulers the prospect of an undivided Ireland brought in time to its full measure of development, as he might hope and believe, not by coercion but by consent; while to Ulstermen they offered an absolutely free choice, with the certainty that their status could not be changed without the assent of the Parliament of the United Kingdom. (Cheers.)

Mr. Asquith said he now saw the road to an agreed settlement, in which the balance of give and take was likely to be more evenly adjusted.

Mr. Bonar Law, who followed Mr. Asquith, declared that the Unionists were unalterably opposed to Home Rule, with or without exclusion.

For the Irish Nationalists, Mr. John Redmond said that they did not take very kindly to the concessions. They would deem it their duty to pass the bill unchanged if the Opposition rejected the proposals of the Government.

William O'Brien, speaking in behalf of the Independent Nationalists, declared Mr. Asquith's concessions to be "hateful and intolerable."

MINERS' WIVES SEEK PARDON

VICTORIA, B.C., March 10.—The wives of the imprisoned coal miners have sent another delegation to interview Sir Richard McBride, with a request for clemency for their husbands. There were 14 women in the delegation.

Sir Richard told the delegation that he had already made a report on the situation to the Minister of Justice at Ottawa. The Premier's attitude was sympathetic, and, without exactly saying so definitely, he encouraged the deputation to believe that the provincial administration would try to help them out, state members of the party for the strike area.

DECLARATION OF MR. J. H. BURNHAM

Broder's Anti-Cigarette Bill Referred to Committee of Fifteen

Fifty Years of Confederation Will Be Observed Says Premier

OTTAWA, March 10.—Canada will celebrate in 1917 on a somewhat elaborate scale the fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of Confederation. The announcement was made by Premier Borden in Parliament yesterday, but the Premier added that no conclusion had yet been come to as to the character and extent of the celebration.

The Premier's announcement followed an eloquent speech by Hon. Mr. Lemieux, calling for some fitting commemoration of the event. The former Postmaster-General suggested Government encouragement of the projected International Exhibition and read extracts from letters from over 100 mayors of Canadian cities and towns commending this movement. Mr. Lemieux said it had been suggested that Canada invite his Majesty King George to open and participate in the celebration.

Toronto annually produced the greatest Exhibition in the world, was Mr. Cockshutt's declaration, and if the nation undertook the project of an Exhibition Toronto was the only city capable of handling it.

W. F. Maclean rose to suggest a "more practical" form of celebration. He would like to see a "revision of the constitution in the direction of improvement and simplification."

The galleries of the House were crowded yesterday afternoon by ladies eager to hear the anticipated debate on Mr. Broder's anti-cigarette resolution. But it was late in the evening before the member for Dundas obtained the floor, and in the meantime the House discussed the immigration question, the celebration of the semi-centenary of Confederation, and the excessive subsidies granted to the Southampton Railway of York County, N.B.

Mr. Broder made a strong case against the cigarette, and was warmly supported by Mr. [illegible] Durham and Hon. Frank Oliver.

Upon motion of the Prime Minister, the whole subject was referred to a select committee of fifteen, to be hereafter appointed.

Before the women come to Parliament seeking to reform the habits of men let them reform their habits of dress," was the suggestion of J. H. Burnham (W. Peterboro). It did not become a sex which was the slave of fashion in dress, and exercised no control of themselves in following the freak and daring decrees of the modistes, to seek legislation demanding self-control and reform in men, declared Mr. Burnham.

The Prime Minister said that the subject was by no means a new one in the House. He recalled several discussions, running back at least before 1903. It was claimed that the cigarette smoke was more likely to be inhaled and that some imported cigarettes contained other drugs than tobacco. But, generally speaking, it seemed difficult to show why the smoking of tobacco wrapped in paper could be more injurious than tobacco in a cigar or smoked in a pipe. He regretted the general disposition to shift upon the Government those duties which involved upon parents. Tobacco was no doubt injurious to many people, as was also tea or coffee; but it would require a strong case to justify a law to prohibit the importation and use of either tea or tobacco.

Finally Mr. Borden said that it was idle to pass laws which could not be enforced. A stringent statute had been passed in 1908 intended to put a stop to all juvenile cigarette smoking, and no doubt if it had been enforced it would have accomplished that purpose. But apparently no effort had been made to enforce it, and the consumption of cigarettes had increased enormously since its passage.

At the evening sitting of the House Mr. Carvell of Carleton, N.B., brought to the attention of the House some facts in relation to a railway in York County, N.B., 13 miles long, which cost about $12,000 per mile, or $158,000. The promoters had obtained $12,000 a mile in bond guarantees from the Legislature of New Brunswick and $64,000 in cash in subsidies from the Dominion Government. They had, therefore, received from two Governments about $60,000 more than the road cost. He said that under the Dominion statute the road could not possibly have earned more than single subsidy of $3,200 a mile, yet the double subsidy of $6,400 a mile had been paid.

The statements were in main confirmed by Col. H. F. MacLeod, the Conservative member from York, N.B., who said that the engineers of the Railway Department had been undoubtedly deceived by false returns and padded estimates.

Hon. J. D. Reid, acting Minister of Railways, said that Mr. E. B. Johnson, the inspecting engineer of the Department, had estimated the cost of construction at $191,000. Mr. Cochrane, the Minister, had undoubtedly relied upon this report, but in view of the serious charges made, a thorough investigation would be ordered immediately.

BERLIN, March 10—Horace Rumbold, counsellor of the British Embassy here, was ordered yesterday to Brunswick, where the arrival of an heir to the Brunswick thorne is awaited shortly.

ANIMALS GROW TAMER.

Every Year In Algonquin Park Wild Things Are Less Shy.

Up in Algonquin Park the wild things of the woods and water are protected. In that three million acre haven the furred and feathered denizens of the wilderness are now beginning to realize that man, their once greatest enemy, contemplates them no harm. Wild things are quick to understand, yet, up in the northern forest, it has taken the birds and animals long to learn that within the bounds of that vast reservation they are immune from human harm.

The red deer have been quickest to note this fact, owing, no doubt, to the higher intelligence of this animal. At any rate, they have been first to respond to the friendly overtures of the park rangers, and for the past three years have hung close to the habitations in the park's border during the season of deep snow.

Last winter a herd of deer strayed almost constantly within a few hundred yards of the big hotel on Cache Lake. Three years ago winter visitors to the park found it next to impossible to even decry a deer. The following winter one or two timid does sought shelter from the wolves in the fringe of forest directly behind the inn, and the following winter they returned in strengthened numbers.

Mr. Colson, manager of the Highland Inn, who is a great lover of the wild animals and birds, tells of how the first of the deer came into the clearing. It was on a clear, cold night with the snow lying deep throughout the forest, and the mercury many degrees below zero, that he was aroused from sleep by the death cry of those gaunt night prowlers, the wolves, sounding but a little distance into the woods. Next morning two jaded and hungry does were seen feeding from a pile of straw, close beside his outbuildings. As he approached them, they withdrew a little way into the forest, only to return again almost immediately. Mr. Colson, remembering the cry of the wolf pack, went forward into the timber to investigate, and scarcely two hundred yards off the trail he came across the body of a buck, its throat cut clean by the fangs of the animals, who were too cowardly to wait and feast on their kill.

Some day, Algonquin Park will be quite as noted as famous Yellowstone Park, that wonderful reservation to which thousands of nature students and wild bird and animal lovers sojourn each year.

The wild things of Algonquin are beginning to look upon man as a protector and a friend; but it will take a little time to weed out a suspicion that has been fostered through long ages. But the deer have accepted the palm leaf, the ruffed grouse have decided in their shy way that it is safe to show themselves where the strange two-legged creatures dwell, and back in the lakes where the beaver colonies are, the busy, bright-eyed animals will often work in plain sight of the human onlooker, giving the vanishing signal with flat tails only when the strange, watching one makes anything like a suspicious movement.

So it is that winter visitors to the great park will, each season, see a little more of the wonderful life of is winter the herd le larger, a little st. Those who one ound it impossible to ot of an antlered head aparatively easy to do so scuttling, shadowy little fel- the grouse, will offer the era-hunter a chance, too. And dat here, a word of advice to those who have tried to photograph the grouse and failed. The very first thing for the camera-hunter to remember is that he or she is on the living ground of the hunted. To hunt wild things you must hunt like wild things. The weasel, mink, owl, hawk, otter, and fisher are all wonderful hunters but they would catch but little if they did not know how to play the waiting game.—A. P. McKishnie in Toronto Star Weekly.

Tobacco Growers Retrench.

Indications point to a considerably reduced acreage of tobacco in the southern townships of Kent this year as a result of dissatisfaction over marketing of the last crop. Much of the tobacco harvested in this district has not yet been sold.

One grower reports dividing his tobacco into three grades and getting ten cents for the best. For a small quantity of No. 2 he received eight cents and the remainder brought him only two cents a pound, cutting out any chance of profit on the crop. There are about four thousand acres of tobacco in Kent, in Howard, Harwich, Raleigh, Tilbury, Romney, and one acres or so in Orford to the east.

Quebec Gets Relic.

An interesting historic relic has been discovered in a wall at Grove House, Southsea, Eng., in the form of a large stone. This, on examination, proved to have originally formed part of the citadel at Quebec, when it fell into the hands of the British in 1759. The residence in question is now St. John College and the principal has consented to the stone being presented to the Canadian Government. The mayor of Quebec has gratefully accepted the stone, which is to be built in St. John's gateway that is being reconstructed in that city.

Bakers Have Fine Scheme.

Bakers of Amherstburg, Ont., have adopted a profit-sharing plan. Three days in the week they place a 25-cent piece in each batch of bread and the other three days two 25-cent pieces, which means $4.50 per week distributed among users of Amherstburg bread, or $234 a year, or approximately 2,500 loaves of bread distributed free among their patrons in a year.

Not Earned.

"Everybody says he is a good fellow."

"How much did he steal from his employers?"

"Not a cent."

"Does he beat up his wife?"

"No."

"Where did he get his title?"

Practical.

"You are about to receive a large sum of money," said the fortune teller.

"Sure about it, professor?"

"There it is as plain as day in your hand."

"Loan me five on it, and I will give you my note for ten to be paid promptly on its arrival."

Warned.

"Now, don't make a fool of yourself in this crowd."

"Why not?"

"I don't want to see you lose money."

"Lose money! How?"

"By giving a free exhibition. You are worth a quarter a head when you act the fool."

More Like It.

Second Kid—Naw; I know a better game.

First K.—Put me next.

Second K.—Let's run away and be financeers.

Not a Dote.

"Don't you just dote on autumn?" said the enthusiastic young woman who was busy gathering autumn leaves.

"No," said the man with a cold in his head, "I do't dote on it."

Many a man is loved for his money, slugged and left for it.

TORONTOS CONFIDENT OF OVERCOMING TWO GOALS

Toronto, March 10.—Lester Patrick and his Victorias are pulling for a Toronto victory to-morrow night over the Canadiens, so that they will be assured of hard ice for the world series games. Torontos, however, have a big night's work ahead of them, as they have to beat the Canadiens by three goals, two goals to tie and three to win. The local players say that if they can secure the first goal to-morrow night they will win out from the Canadiens, no matter which way you look at it, it promises to be a real battle.

George Kennedy and his Canadiens will arrive in the city to-day and will hold a light workout at the Arena. Reports from Montreal state that over 500 fans will accompany the Frenchmen, which means that Peasoupville will be well represented.

JUNIORS WILL TRY TO DEFEAT LINDSAY

The defeat of a local septet by Lindsay a week or so ago, has left a blot on Peterborough's 1914 sport calendar and in an effort to wipe it out a picked team of the Junior City League will journey to Scugog to-morrow night and will there do battle with the .L.C.I. outfit, which cleaned up Lindsay town league. A return game will be played here on Friday night.

The team:

Goal, Flowers; defence, Davidson, Legendre, Phelan; rover, Butcher, centre, Jackson; wings Knapman, Rose.

BASEBALL

Ty Cobb has signed a two year contract with the Tigers. The salary is stated to be $20,000 per year.

Swat of batter all remind us,
  Games are in the ninth oft won.
That's the reason why you find us,
  Basing hopes on that home run.

Once again is "Tillie" Shafer announcing his retirement from the grand old game. Last year he quit because he was receiving too many perfumed notes. Now it's a call to business.

The Erie Club announce that they have been successful in securing First Baseman Gygall and Outfielder Dawson, of St. Joseph, of the Western League. They are also endeavoring to land "Dummy" Taylor, formerly with Buffalo and Toronto.

NOMAD'S MEETING.

The members of the Nomads Football Club hold their annual meeting to-night in Coleman's Parlors.

VARSITY HAS ONE GOAL LEAD

Weakened Collegians Outplayed Orillia in First of Finals.

Toronto, March 10.—The first of the home-and-home games for the junior O.H.A. championship was played last night at the Arena and resulted in a surprise, as Varsity in their weakened condition, were not expected to hold Orillia. However, they not only held them, but beat them, and while the margin was not very large, yet on the play they should have had more than one goal of a lead. At half-time Varsity led by score of 2 to 1, and at the finish by the score of 4 to 3, thus giving them a one-goal margin for the return game in Orillia on Wednesday, which does not look enough.

CURLING

The result of last night's games in the curling for the local bonspiel was as follows:

Wightman, 15, Rose, 10.
Foot, 15, Denham, 7.
Sturgeon, 13, Dela Fosse, 9 (4 a.m.).
Sturgeon, 13, Cameron 12 (8 p.m.)
Campbell, 13, Brightman, 8.
Stevenson, 14, Geo. Hill, 10.
W. Lang, 14, Davidson, 9.

The draw for to-night:

Primary—
Stubbs vs. Wightman.
Foot vs. McCracken.
Consolation—
Campbell vs. Stevenson.
Moore vs. Rose.
Neill vs. Clegg.

The curling in the Bonspiel Saturday afternoon resulted in W. Taylor defeating R. Neill 14-10, and H. Foot winning over R. Hicks by 21-12 In the evening W. Taylor met John Cameron, and once again did the Taylor rink win, this time by the score of 19-5.

BASKETBALL

The Indians of the Junior Class Basketball League won the J. I. Allen Shield on Saturday when they defeated Whitcroft's Maple Leafs 12 points to 2. The Champion Indians team:

Railway Death Toll.

It is to be noted that the total number of killed and injured reported by the various railroad companies under the jurisdiction of the board for the year ending March 31, 1913, was 2,547, that is to say, 643 persons were killed and 2,231 were injured. Of the total of 643 persons killed, 250 or approximately thirty-nine per cent. of the total were trespassers on railway tracks. Twenty-one passengers were killed, or 3.26 per cent. of the total. Of this total of 21 passengers killed, it appears that 15 met their deaths by what would appear to be preventable causes on the part of the passengers themselves, such as falling off trains while in motion, endeavoring to board trains while in motion and endeavoring to get off trains while in motion, so that the actual number of passengers killed in what might be termed preventable causes on the part of the railway companies was only six, or less than one per cent. of the total number of 643 persons killed.

THEATRICAL

At last we have something in a light comedy really worth while. Did you see "Broadway Jones" at the Grand Opera last night? No? Then you missed a show really worth seeing. There was not a dull line in the whole play. If you had the blues, "Broadway Jones" was a certain cure, for a laugh was in evidence all the time, and the house was well filled.

Thomas Emery as "Broadway" was exceptionally good. His very attitude was humorous. Curtis Benton as Robert Wallace, took the part of Broadway's friend. The part was well portrayed—in fact there was not a weak character in the whole cast. The humor of the play to be appreciated, has to be seen, not described. In truth, it consists in the acting and peculiar situations, more than the words of the play. Grace Morissey and Olive Artell were very attractive in the roles they portrayed. There was just enough excitement and sentiment to give the proper variation to the humor of the play.

The play is well balanced, the humor hearty but not profound, the parts well acted. The play is well worth seeing. What more need be said?

The presentation of "McFadden's Flats" at the Grand, Saturday afternoon and evening, was productive of much merriment. The piece has been altered considerably, particularly in the third act, which sees McFadden in the drug store business. He has a hot time himself, and he manages to make it just as hot for callers and customers.

The Yellow Kids have a hundred ways of making life miserable for the tenants of the flats and just as many laughs for the audience.

There are a number of good songs.

Alice Lloyd, England's daintiest comedienne, and her big company of seventy-five entertainers, will be the attraction at The Grand next Thursday, March 12th. Miss Lloyd is touring the country under the direction of William Morris, who has surrounded her with the best in the show world. There will be twenty-two big features on the programme, including Frank Fogarty, "The Dublin Minstrel." "Dance Mad" is another promising feature on the bill, in which the entire company will take part in a dance revue of all nations, introducing the sensational "X-Ray" Dance.

Rajah's Gems Stolen.

A theft of jewelry worth 15,000 rupees ($5,000) occurred recently at the palace of Rajah of Ettayapuram, India. The rajah prior to an oil bath removed his diamond earrings and some other articles of jewelry and inadvertently left them in his bathroom. A servant stole and offered them for sale, at a trifling value, to an actor, who notified the rajah promptly.

SLAYS HIS SWEETHEART

Russian Jew Confronted With Proof of His Duplicity

TORONTO, March 10. — Crazed with jealousy, Isaac Estrean, a coatmaker, living at 383 Adelaide street west, discharged four shots from a revolver, at his sweetheart, Anna Carlock, 501 Adelaide street west, yesterday afternoon at two o'clock, almost instantly killing her. The shooting took place on Adelaide street west, opposite No. 412. After killing the girl, Estrean was pursued, and turning the revolver on himself put a bullet through his abdomen. He now lies at the General Hospital in a critical condition, with a policeman on guard at the door of his room. Late last evening it was reported that his condition was slightly improved.

Estrean was madly in love with the Jewish girl, who was about 22 years of age, but had repeatedly been rejected. On Sunday the girl received word from Russia that Estrean had a wife and family living there, and it is thought by the police that it was when she reproached him for his actions that he committed the deed.

Harry Carlock, the girl's brother, was the first to catch up to Estrean, and although wounded, Estrean fought with the brother as long as he could stand. Finally he was arrested by officer 364, and conveyed to the General Hospital in the police ambulance.

According to a brother-in-law of the murdered girl, Estrean had at one time told him that Annie was not worth living, and that he intended killing her and then taking his own life. According to him the climax of the affair was reached when Annie discovered that he had a wife in Russia, and flatly refused his advances.

THE VERGARA INCIDENT.

Body Was Disinterred and Taken Over Border by Friends.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—The serious importance of the Vergara incident has been materially minimized by yesterday's reports that there was no invasion of Mexican territory by Texas Rangers to recover the body of the American rancher who was murdered by Mexican Federals. While the Government is still awaiting a complete official report of the affair, it is satisfied that Vergara's body was disinterred by friends and taken over the border into Texas, where is was recovered by Texas Rangers and others who had been notified that it would be found at a designated spot on Texas soil.

Lord Strathcona's Titles.

Lord Strathcona not only bore two varying forms of title as a peer. He was for some weeks referred to and addressed by a title that he never really bore at all. At the time when he was created a peer he had recently purchased the historic estate of Glencoe, and it was so generally assumed that he would take his title from it that "Lord Glencoe" he temporarily became. At the Dominion Day dinner, however, the Marquis of Lorne hedged carefully in referring to him: "He has not confided to me by what title to address him. I shall, however, make no mistake if I congratulate him and call him Lord High Commissioner for Canada"—the actual title, as Mr. Beckles Willson notes, which Sir John Macdonald had suggested years before for the post.

TRAFFIC A DISHONOR.

Importation of Plumage For Hats To Be Stopped In Britain.

LONDON, March 10.—Postmaster-General Hobhouse in moving the second reading of the plumage bill in the House of Commons last night gave details of London plumage sales and said that in June of 1913 plumage was sold representing about 77,000 aigrettes, 22,000 pigeons, 25,000 humming birds, and 162,000 kingfishers. They wished to put a stop to the traffic which was a dishonor to the people who conducted it.

It was proposed, subject to one or two exceptions, to prohibit the importation into the United Kingdom of the plumage of any wild birds, and to prevent any person having in his possession or being concerned in the sale of such plumage. Parliament, he urged, had a right to insist that a silly, debasing fashion should not be allowed to work harm to the most innocent and beautiful of God's creatures. It was a case of the vanity of woman going hand in hand with the rapacity of man, and he did not see why the House should not limit the sphere of their joint mischief. The second reading of the bill was agreed to.

LEGISLATURE ADJOURNS.

Tributes Are Paid to Memory of Late Sir George Ross.

TORONTO, March 10.—Out of deference to the memory of the late Sir George W. Ross, the Ontario Legislature adjourned yesterday, but not before the leaders of both parties had united in tributes to the former Premier of the province.

"No man gave more of his life and talents to the public work that he had in hand," said Acting Premier Foy. "He was a man of remarkable ability, a strong debater, and in command of great eloquence. The country has lost a big man, a man free from pettiness and narrowness. All mourn his passing and give their sympathy to his sorrowing relatives. It is a fitting that this House mark its respect to Sir George."

The legislation which found its rise in the time of the Ross administration was outlined by Mr. Rowell. Among the things which his administration had brought, either in realization or in suggestion, were the systems of kindergarten training and the federation of the provincial universities. The development of the north country had had its start in his regime.

Hon. Dr. Pyne, T. Marshall of Monck, and A. E. Donovan added words of tribute.

Young Man Meets Death a Level Crossing In Toronto.

TORONTO, March 10. — Stooping under the gates at the level Bloor street crossing of the C.P.R. and G.T.R. tracks about 10.30 yesterday morning, William J. Beaver, a young Irishman, 21 years of age, walked directly in front of an eastbound G.T.R. passenger train and was instantly killed.

The young fellow, who, with his brother James of 55 McCaul street, came to this country from Ireland but nine months ago, was an employe of the Canada Bread Company, whose works at Dundas and Bloor streets are close to the railway crossing. During the earlier part of the morning he obtained leave to go back to his boarding-house at 117 Perth avenue, for something he had forgotten, and it was on his return to work that he met his death.

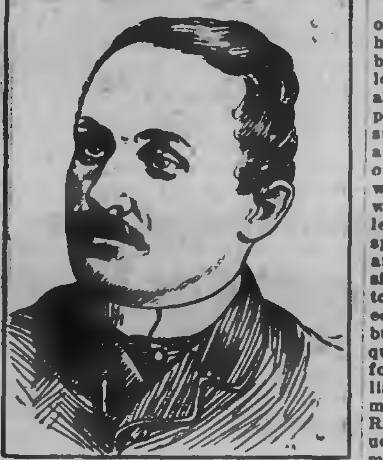
LIEUT.-GOVERNOR OF QUEBEC

SIR F. C. S. LANGELIER RANKS HIGH IN LEGAL CIRCLES.

Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec Is the Author of Several Works on Legal Subjects and Was Chief Justice of the Superior Court For Some Years—Entered Political Arena Forty Years Ago.

Sir Francois Charles Stanislaus Langelier, LL.D., lieutenant-governor of the Province of Quebec, was created a K.C.M.G. by King George in the recent distribution of honors at New Year's.

Sir Francois was born at Ste. Rosalie, Quebec, and educated at St. Hyacinthe College and Laval University. He was professor of Roman law, and afterwards of civil law and political economy in Laval University. He was a member of the Quebec Legislature from 1873 to 1875 and a member of the Dominion Parliament from 1884 to 1898.



SIR F. C. S. LANGELIER.

Sir Francois was appointed Minister of Crown Lands in Quebec in 1878, and the following year became Provincial Treasurer, which position he filled until the year 1881.

He was mayor of the city of Quebec from 1882 to 1890 and chief justice of the Superior Court of Quebec from 1906 to 1911 when he was appointed lieutenant-governor of the Province of Quebec.

Sir Francois is the author of several works on legal subjects and is one of the most distinguished lawyers in Canada.

Lauder's "Pit Ponies."

"My pit ponies," says Harry Lauder, "there's a scandal for you! For ten years I worked among them and tended and fed them, and it's shameful the way they are treated in the mines everywhere. Little to eat; kicks and cuffs while they're eating it, worked until half their skin is rubbed off them—it's dreadful, the poor animals! There ought to be Government inspectors appointed, and I've wasted a fortune in stamps writing to everybody and anybody I thought could help me in Government positions.

"But yesterday I had my lunch with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Lloyd George, and he was most sympathetic, and introduced me to Mr. McKenna—and he's a Scotsman—and there was Mrs. Asquith, and I told them all about the pits and the horrors I knew of them, and it's given me hope to see how they listened to me—and there may be those inspectors yet."

Of course it will be recalled that Harry, the highest salaried vaudeville performer in the world, was once a pitman himself.

The Youthful Crocodile.

Scientists claim that young crocodiles, just before they are ready to hatch, utter a croaking cry within the eggs which can be heard though the eggs be buried some distance under the sand. Dr. W. A. Lamborn recently tested the fact at Lagos, on the West African coast. He heard a croaking noise from below a dry path and, digging in the path to investigate the cause, he discovered thirteen crocodile eggs at a depth of about eighteen inches. All the young crocodiles hatched out within half an hour of being dug up. So far back as 1899 Dr. Voelskow noticed that unhatched Madagascar crocodiles uttered a cry from the egg at a depth of two yards and that any shock, as of a heavy tread near the egg, caused the baby crocodile to produce this sound "with the mouth closed, as we produce hiccough sounds." In this way they inform the female crocodile when she visits the nest, that they want her aid, whereupon she scrapes the sand away and they emerge.

Papers For Navy.

The space devoted in all the papers to advertising the British Army is a reminder that the service has many journals of its own, which, though they do not figure in the Press Directory and cannot be obtained through the usual channels, yet enjoy a very respectable circulation. There are the regimental "rags"—weekly, monthly and quarterly — some of them are written, printed and illustrated in first-rate style. The best known, perhaps, is the "Sapper," which enjoys a circulation of 5,500 per issue and is run entirely by non.-coms. and privates. The "Suffolk Gazette" also is turned out in the regimental printing shop, and the "Globe and Laurel" of the Royal Marines is important enough to boast a staff of one editor-in-chief and nine subs.

HALIFAX CHURCH IS A CENTRE OF HISTORIC ASSOCIATIONS

Many Celebrated Names Occur Among Those Who Have Been Linked Up With With Church—Built In Year of Capture of Quebec.

Do you know what is — a hatchment? Have you ever seen at hatchment? If not, when you are loafing about the aisles of old St. Paul's in Halifax, after a Sunday morning service by the Rev. Archdeacon Armitage, do not fail to keep your eyes alert on the front of the big gallery, says Augustus Bridle in The Toronto Globe.

If it were not for the hatchments of St. Paul's, along with a good many other affairs quite as mediaeval and redolent of arms and men and thumping history, this peculiar old wooden church in the heart of Halifax might have been torn down and the site sold long ago for an office building or an apartment house.

In short, a hatchment is the coat of arms of some dead grandee or hero or man of action, done in colors by some painter and framed up to look as little like a real picture and as much like a frescoed door panel as possible. And Halifax had a lot of such men in her day. Most of them attended church at St. Paul's. Some of them were scalawags and some were highly respectable, and they were all makers of Canada. And they left so many traces of their somewhat spectacular careers on Halifax that any account of St. Paul's is impossible without at least some allusion to these colonial masters. Here lived in the days of swagger and swashbuckling and scalping such picturesque figures as the Duke of Cornwallis, founder of Halifax; Sir Fenwick William, defender of Kars in the Crimean war; Col. John Inglis, of the Rifle Brigade at Lucknow; Sir Samuel Cunard and Sir Provo Wallis, admiral of the fleet; and the unconventional but quite royal Duke of Kent, grandfather of Edward VII., who built the tower clock on the hill to remind Haligonians that be was having as good a time in Halifax as he had a right to, being the King's representative. Besides whom there are governors galore buried beneath St. Paul's—and Hon. Richard Bulkeley, first church warden and organist.

St. Paul's was built in the year that Wolfe took Quebec. They talk as familiarly about the General in the environs of St. Paul's as though he were the godfather of the city, which he almost was, from his career at Louisbourg in the reign of good Queen Anne. The lumber was sawn in the mills of Boston and floated up in the old wooden ships into the great harbor still big enough to hold the combined war fleets of the world. And the hammers that built St. Paul's of Yankee lumber should have been preserved and hung in the vestry along with the Queen Anne plate.

Around the "Grand Parade" that made the uphill square about St. Paul's the heroes and the plain people of Halifax made a brave show back in the 18th century. The grand parade is over, but the hatchments remain. The once clanking streets where spurs and cavalry horses and drilling battalions and swaggering sailors held a sort of daily carnival are now much sobered down to the commonplace automobile and the delivery wagon. Railway offices and hotel 'buses, newsboys and lumbering drays are doing their best to make the "Grand Parade' 'a part of modern everyday Canada. But St. Paul's (twice enlarged since 1759) hangs on religiously to the romantic side of life and history. It has been described as a London church of the 18th century. It has at present a very sober-hued congregation of plain working folk, few of whom wear even top hats. But it has stuck as piously to what made St. Paul's historically great as any of the cathedrals of England that stabled Cromwell's horses. It has a perfect archaeological collection of relics. There are brass plates and memorial tablets, sculptures by Chantry and Gibson; communion plate that came from her Majesty Queen Anne, to wit — two flagons, height 13 inches (Anne); one chalice, 10 inches (George I.), and one alms basin (Anne). The visitors' register contains hundreds of names of people who have taken up somebody's valuable time showing them about and telling them the story.

That's what St. Paul's is for—to the tourist. That way it resembles the rest of Halifax, which exists as far as possible to remind people of what used to be in the days when nobody got rich except by plunder, and when soldiers and sailors were thicker on the streets than Christie hats are to-day. You go to St. Paul's not altogether for divine service. You go to remind yourself that religion in some places is forever bound up with history, and that you can't take stock in one without including the other. What the great St. Paul's Cathedral is to big Imperial and parochial London, the parish church of St. Paul's built of Boston lumber is to Halifax, that never will quit being glorified by history until the great harbor becomes a sand heap and the guns at the citadel are consumed with rust.

Quebec may be the great historic town of the St. Lawrence. Halifax is not less the monumental reminder of the splendid swaggering and wooden days when the sailing vessels came up from Boston with loads of lumber for the building of St. Paul's; when Gen. Wolfe quit Louisbourg and sailed up the river to capture Quebec in the year that the last shingle nail was driven in St. Paul's and the "Grand Parade" was alive with a grand gusto of Governors and Colonels and Dukes and Knights and common soldiers, cavalrymen and foot soldiers, jack tars and Admirals.

THE GIRL WHO SUCCEEDS.

She Is the One Who Puts Heart and Conscience Into Her Work.

To be a success in business a girl must be willing. An employer can always tell when his workers have his interests at heart. The business girl may think that the strict attention she pays to the business at hand goes unnoticed, but it never does. Every business man can tell which of his employees arrives the earliest and leaves the latest. He knows which one does the best work and which one is the most diligent.
